The industry must now organize for next year's fight and the next and the next, lest it be quota'd out of existence entirely. Blight; flood; war; hurricane; drought; freezes—all these the sugarcane industry of Louisiana has survived, but it cannot survive the destroying juggernaut of the Federal Government set in motion by the foreign interests and the eastern seaboard interests with investments abroad, the same eastern interests which confected and maintain the freight discriminations against the South. It cannot survive; that is, unless it brings to bear the pressures, political and otherwise, which will insure a free and unrestricted opportunity for domestic industry.

Our sugar industry, the people of Louisiana in general, have never despaired, no matter what were the disasters of Nature or the impositions of man. Needless to say, it and they will not despair now. The fight will go on. Next year we may win; as a matter of fact, we have got to win.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, May 8, after the disposition of the business on the Speaker's table and at the conclusion of previous orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein two resolutions by small farm organizations in my State.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MURRAY]?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a radio address which I delivered last evening.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED]?

There was no objection.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein extracts from addresses recently made by me in Columbus, Ohio, and Richmond, Va.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address made by the Honorable Wilfred Jessup, a distinguished lawyer of Richmond, Ind., on the subject of unemployment compensation, delivered before the Indiana section of the United States Chamber of Commerce at the Mayflower Hotel, Washington, D. C., last night.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SPRINGER]?

There was no objection.

MAKING UNLAWFUL ATTEMPTS TO OVERTHROW GOVERNMENT OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, I submit a motion to the House that the bill (H. R. 5138) to make unlawful attempts to overthrow the Government of the United States; to require licensing of civilian military organizatons; to make unlawful attempts to interfere with the discipline of the Army and Navy; to require registration and fingerprinting of aliens; to enlarge the jurisdiction of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals in certain cases; and for other purposes, be re-referred from the Committee on the Judiciary to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SCHULTE].

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SCHULTE moves that the bill H. R. 5138 be re-referred from the Judiciary Committee to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SCHULTE].

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order against the motion.

Mr. Speaker, under the rules of the House a motion of this kind must have been authorized by formal action of the committee from which the motion comes. As I understand this motion, it is a motion of the Immigration Committee to take from the Judiciary Committee a bill which has previously been referred to the Judiciary Committee by the Speaker. It does not appear from the motion that there was any formal action taken by the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. Speaker, I make the further point of order that there is no showing on this resolution that the original reference by the Speaker was erroneous. As a matter of fact, it was not erroneous. If a motion of this kind could be brought up at any time on any bill and voted on without debate, as required under the rules of the House, then we would constantly be in danger of having the question raised at all times without any knowledge on the part of the House whether the original reference was erroneous or not.

Mr. Speaker, there is a precedent for this point of order. A similar point of order was raised some years ago, and I refer to Cannon's Precedents, section 2125. In that case certain bills relating to women's suffrage had been referred to a committee of the House. Subsequent to these references a committee on women's suffrage was created. There was a motion similar to this motion to transfer the bills from the committee to which they had previously been referred to the committee on women's suffrage. A point of order was raised that there was no showing that the original reference was erroneous.

The Chair sustained the point of order for the reasons stated, one of them being that unless there is a showing there was error in the original reference of the bill the House would not know what they were voting upon.

Mr. Speaker, we have that exact situation this morning. As I understand, this motion is not debatable and it is not in order through debate to show to the House the situation with respect to this bill.

I make the further point of order, Mr. Speaker, that nothing appears in this motion to show what is the present status of that bill as far as the Committee on the Judiciary is concerned. Under the precedents of the House—and the Chair had occasion to rule on this point just a couple of days ago—when a bill has been reported from a committee it is too late to make that point. For aught that appears to the Speaker or to the House this morning, the Committee on the Judiciary may have already acted upon the bill, in which event this motion would come too late. The fact is that this matter was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary by the Speaker of the House after due consideration a month or two ago. The further fact is that the Committee on the Judiciary referred the bill to a subcommittee, the further fact is that that subcommittee has not only held hearings but has concluded hearings on the bill, and the further fact is that those hearings have been printed and the bill is ready, if the Judiciary Committee so votes or has voted, to come to the House and go upon the calendar and be voted upon. At this late hour the gentleman without any reason being assigned for a reference of this bill makes this motion to refer the matter to another committee which has never had and which it does not appear from the motion could possibly have any jurisdiction of the subject matter.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, what the gentleman from Virginia has said is true in part, but this is just another case of trying to usurp the powers of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. If this practice continues no one can tell just where it is going to stop with some of the other committees. The sum and substance of it is that we protested the so-called Hobbs bill, but unfortunately the chairman of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization come in here too late to have his protest sustained. But we are within our rights and we are within our bounds when we protest the reference of the bill now in question in view of the fact that this bill has not been reported to the House. The so-called Smith bill is strictly an immigration bill and is so interpreted by every one who has read it. Titles I and II pertain to citizens and aliens alike. Titles III, IV, and V of the bill are immigration matters absolutely 100 percent. I can see no reason why the bill was ever referred to the Judiciary Committee unless they have no respect for the members of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization or are afraid of their judgment or wisdom in handling legislation of this kind.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, does not the gentleman believe he had better revise his remarks? The Speaker made the reference of this bill. It is not a question of the Judiciary Committee's usurping authority or jurisdiction over this bill. The reference was made by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, exercising his prerogative to refer bills according to the rules of the House.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, in view of that statement, I may say I never would attempt to criticize the judgment of our very affable Speaker.

Mr. RAYBURN. I knew the gentleman did not mean his language to be interpreted that way.

Mr. SCHULTE. I did not mean it that way, but I do say the bill was wrongly referred to a committee that has no jurisdiction over the subject matter of the bill, in view of the fact that the fifth section of the bill is nothing more than the old Hobbs bill and is strictly an immigration and naturalization matter.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule.

In reference to the first point of order, made by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH], challenging the fact that the motion made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr.

SCHULTE] was made by authority of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, the Chair asks the gentleman from Indiana if such was the case?

Mr. SCHULTE. It was, Mr. Speaker. I was instructed by the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization to move that this bill be re-referred.

The SPEAKER. By a vote of the committee?

Mr. SCHULTE. By a unanimous vote of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

The SPEAKER. The Chair accepts that statement and overrules the first point of order made by the gentleman from Virginia.

On the second point of order the Chair thinks it might be proper to have read into the RECORD the rule governing propositions of this character. Clause 3 of rule XXII provides as follows:

> All other bills, memorials, and resolutions may, in like manner, be delivered, endorsed with the names of Members introducing them, to the Speaker, to be by him referred, and the titles and references thereof and of all bills, resolutions, and documents referred under the rules shall be entered on the Journal and printed in the RECORD of the next day, and correction in case of error of reference may be made by the House, without debate, in accordance with rule XI, on any day immediately after the reading of the Journal, by unanimous consent, or on motion of a committee claiming jurisdiction, or on the report of the committee to which the bill has been erroneously referred.

Under any fair construction of that rule, the Chair is compelled to hold that the gentleman from Indiana is clearly within his rights and the rights of the committee for which he is acting in making this motion to rerefer this bill from the Committee on the Judiciary to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

In reference to the suggestion made by the gentleman from Virginia that for aught appearing the committee had made a report on this bill, of course, the Journal of the House itself shows that no such report has been made to the House by the Committee on the Judiciary.

The Chair, therefore, overrules the points of order made by the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a unanimous-consent request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. In view of the fact that the House probably is not advised of the situation and therefore is not in position to vote as intelligently as if there were some debate on the matter, I ask unanimous consent that there may be 20 minutes' debate on the subject, the time to be equally divided between the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SCHULTE] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] acting respectively for the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization and the Committee on the Judiciary, and to be yielded as they see fit.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact there is other important business before the House, I object.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana to re-refer the bill in question to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SCHULTE) there were—ayes 17, noes 128.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana makes the point of order there is not a quorum present and objects to the vote on that ground. The Chair will count.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of order.

So the motion was rejected.

NAVY APPROPRIATION BILL—1940

Mr. SCRUGHAM, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 6149) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 539), which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered printed.

Mr. PLUMLEY reserved all points of order against the bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KNUTSON asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Foreign Affairs may have permission to sit during sessions of the House today and tomorrow.

I have asked the permission of all the minority members of the committee to submit this request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

NAVY APPROPRIATION BILL—1940

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6149) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes; and pending that motion, I may say that I have conferred with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and I ask unanimous consent that the debate shall run 4 hours, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the other one-half by myself, at the end of which time the Clerk shall read the first paragraph and the Committee shall rise.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nevada moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6149); and pending that motion, asks unanimous consent that general debate on the bill be limited to 4 hours, to be equally divided between himself and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER], and at the conclusion of said general debate the first paragraph of the bill shall be read and the Committee rise. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nevada?

There was no objection.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 6149, the Navy Department and naval service appropriation bill, fiscal year 1940, with Mr. COX in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nevada?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 30 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, this measure represents several weeks of hearings and the study of a mass of pertinent data. At the outset I wish to express my appreciation of the splendid cooperation and the painstaking work of my colleagues on the committee, Mr. FERNANDEZ, Mr. CASEY, Mr. CALDWELL, Mr. DITTER, Mr. PLUMLEY, Mr. MCLEOD, and last but not least, to commend the splendid and efficient work of our indispensable clerk, Mr. Pugh.

The naval appropriation bill for the fiscal year of 1940 carries items totaling the sum of $770,473,241, an amount unprecedented in peacetime legislative history. The justification for such a proposed expenditure is certainly not to be found only in the European war crisis which now confronts us. In order to be logical, the justification for the vast outlay and the heavy tax burden thereby incurred must be based solely upon a sound and consistent defense policy.

Such a policy involves three essential principles: First, that no American shall be sent by his Government to fight and die on the continent of Europe; second, that our Nation will enforce the Monroe Doctrine; and, third, that our Pacific front line of defense is the one hundred and eightieth meridian, which protects Hawaii and Alaska, and which is the line accepted in the Washington naval treaty.

Powerful currents of emotional opinion are today running against this policy in America; nevertheless, we cannot allow emotional opinion to be a basic influence in the making of defense appropriations. We are told that democracy is in danger. It certainly is endangered by war. We must defend it by opposing war, unless forced upon us by the absolute necessity of defending the American continent.

Fundamentally, the present unsettled condition of world affairs, as well as the uncertainties facing our own Government, are essentially phases of the age-old and eternal struggle between the haves and have-nots. This never-ending contest happens to be in one of its acute cycles. Nationally, the inequalities are being levelled by democratic processes of taxation and appropriations and various forms of Government aid.

Internationally the only ultimate adjustment seems to be through force of arms.

The economic root underlying the vast expenditures and preparations for war, is the world-wide demands for supplies of natural resources which modern civilization requires for national industrial prosperity.

This country is the richest in the world in the majority of these natural resources, as well as the richest in variety and quantity of food products. With only 7 percent of the world's population and 6 percent of the world's area, we own or control nearly one-half of the world's raw materials. The United States cannot avoid the issue. It is part of our domain that is ultimately at stake. The United States is the world's largest producer, largest consumer, and largest distributor of these raw materials. Any approach to equalization with other nations means a shift of sovereignty on an unthinkable scale. Four-fifths of the world's industrial power lies on an axis, extending in a comparatively narrow belt from Chicago eastward through central England and west central Europe, and most of the mineral resources of the world are tributary to this axis. The rulership of the world lies in the control of this industrial axis.

The prosperity and happiness of this Nation is intimately related to the widespread utilization of our great stores of essential minerals, and it is a striking fact that in the period since 1900, we have consumed more of these minerals than in all the preceding history of the world.

There are many sincere idealists who believe that our surplus mineral resources should be made available to all countries by an economy of mutually planned coordination of interchange of products. When this is done, the proponents of the idea claim that the cost of huge armaments and the constant threats of wholesale slaughter of humans, such as occurred during the Great War, can largely be eliminated.

They expect to create a spirit of building a world of plenty through international cooperation. Such internationalistic doctrine, while attractive in theory, is absolutely not adapted to the real interests of the United States, for the reason that our living standards and scale of wages are so far ahead of those prevailing in other countries of the world. The disparities are so wide and competition is so strong, that the visionary concept of supplying other nations with great quantities of our raw materials would inevitably tend to drag our living standard to a lower level. This living standard is roughly proportional to the per capita stocks of metals and minerals which a nation has available and in current use. If our stocks of raw materials are reduced by generous division with our neighbors, we cannot successfully compete with them unless we adopt their lower standards.

This is the basic difficulty in pursuing a more generous policy of loans and reciprocal trade toward the European nations. Under the laws of democracies, supplies of needed materials are obtained by purchase and exchange or credit negotiations. Under autocracies, they are usually taken by force.

There has been a very marked resurgence of the old dominance of autocracy since the period of the World War. Today many millions of people, including those of Italy, Germany, Japan, and even the soviets, are governed by dictatorships. Aggression and conquest of weaker nations and seizure of their resources is as natural an expression of autocracy as the stalking of prey for food by predatory animals. Human history contains continuous record of such performances. The organization and employment of armies for effecting conquests appeals strongly to national pride and accustoms a people to severe regimentation, on the pretext of temporary necessity, while providing armed forces they cannot resist when later employed against them in suppression of domestic opposition.

The law of "survival of the fittest" continues to rule the affairs of man, notwithstanding his efforts to raise himself above conditions which nature imposes on all living things.

While the drive behind expansion of the Fascist states commenced as a pain killer for an empty stomach it has now reached practically the status of a religion. The Japanese program for the mastery of Asia might be untenable except for an aura of religious sanction and a faith in the divine powers of their Emperor ruler. Hitler may make tactical retreats and concessions but the strength of his leadership lies in his great faith in the manifest high destiny of the German people, rather than admitted motivation from economic needs.

We have a government directly responsive to the needs of our constituents. Here the state exists for the individual, but in the Fascist countries the individual no longer exists as such, he is an aspect of the state. The idea of an inspired leadership that "can do no wrong" is the dominant theory.

Proposals for disarmament conferences and economic appeasements to stop war appear to be absolutely useless under present world conditions.

The autocracies which have subordinated the individual to national needs cannot in any way subordinate themselves to foreign interests. Therein lies the element of greatest danger to the peace of the world.

Most of the present industrial activity in Europe depends on armament programs. When the last fighting ship is constructed, the last combat division equipped, and the last arsenal filled with munitions can the factories be shut down and the workers turned into the streets? They certainly cannot, either in an autocracy or a democracy.

Warfare in the no distant future seems the inevitable answer. As a matter of elementary prudence and caution, it seems plain that our country must now accelerate our defense preparations while there is time to meet the eventualities.

The Congress recognized that need last year when it enacted the Naval Expansion Act, and it has given repeated recognition to that need this year by implementing the President's national-defense message of January 12 of this year both by way of legislation and appropriations. It is because of that recognition and the earlier determination to build up our Navy to the quotas envisaged by the defunct Washington and London Treaties of 1922 and 1930, respectively, that this measure we present for your consideration so largely exceeds those which have gone before.

As I indicated at the beginning of my remarks, the bill before you calls for a total appropriation of $770,473,241. That amount exceeds appropriations thus far provided for the current fiscal year by $142,876,047. The estimates the committee considered called for an increase of $162,832,259. We have reduced that amount by $19,956,212.

Of the Budget increase, 63 percent is owing to the shipbuilding program and airplane procurements. Fourteen percent approximately is because of an expansion in shore activities. The remaining 23 percent goes into personnel, maintenance, and operation, fleet improvements and repairs, and a somewhat larger outlay upon experiments and tests, mostly on account of aircraft.

Every penny in a naval budget, apart from a few relatively minor items, as to most of which, by custom, the naval appropriation is used as the appropriation vehicle, is responsive to two things—ships and aircraft. All other factors are collateral to those two objects. As they expand it becomes necessary to expand all of the multitude of incidental objects.

The big expense we find on account of ship construction is not because of the new program embraced by the Budget.

It is owing to the advanced construction stages of ships heretofore commenced, and, to some extent, to an effort to accelerate their completion.

The funds requested for 1940 are designed to carry work forward on 121 vessels, combatant ships and auxiliary vessels. The amount included in the Budget for that purpose is $259,410,000.

For launching upon a new program of 23 vessels we are asked to provide an initial outlay of $10,590,000. This bill provides for going forward with both programs, except as to the 121 vessels. In that group are 29 vessels which will have been in commission more than 12 months prior to the commencement of the next fiscal year, upon which the Budget provides for a total expenditure of $7,904,288. We have eliminated that amount. This is in line with our action of a year ago, seeking to break up the practice of using construction money on ships for periods ranging practically up to 2 years after commissioning. Some of this deduction may include amounts required to satisfy material contracts or contracts with private shipbuilders. If so, there can be no hurt, because the appropriation is general and such obligations can be cared for out of the sum remaining, which may have to be augmented later. The present practice is wrong and the committee is determined, sooner or later, to have it voided.

With respect to the new program, you will find it itemized on page 15 of the committee's report. Included therein are two 45,000-ton battleships, which are larger than any craft the Navy heretofore has undertaken to build. The authority for building ships of such dimensions is contained in the Naval Expansion Act, approved May 17, 1938, which reads:

> That vessels of tonnage in excess of 35,000 tons each may be laid down if the President determines with respect to the tonnage of capital ships being built by other nations that the interests of national defense so require.

That determination has been reached, your committee has been advised, and the need and importance of having units of this character in the fleet have been forcibly urged upon the committee by the responsible officers of the Navy Department.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. I yield.

Mr. COLE of New York. In the appropriation bill I observe that the provision appropriating funds for the two new battleships is placed under the heading of replacement of naval vessels.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Yes.

Mr. COLE of New York. It is true, is it not, that these two battleships are not replacements, but are new battleships authorized under the Expansion Act.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. That is true, in a sense; under the customary practice 26 years is given as the age of a battleship, at which time it is considered they become obsolete and may be replaced.

Mr. COLE of New York. It is very important that it be determined whether these battleships are replacement ships or the ships authorized by the Expansion Act of 1938.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. They can be considered one as a replacement and one as authorized under the new bill.

Mr. COLE of New York. Am I to understand that one is a replacement and one a battleship authorized under the act of 1938?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Or they both could be considered as constructed under the new authorization.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. I yield.

Mr. WALTER. Last year, as a member of the Board of Visitors at the Naval Academy, I was very much impressed with the need of a new bridge leading from the main grounds of the academy over to the rifle range. Has there been anything included in this bill for that purpose?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. There is included an item not for a new bridge but for repairs and improvements on the existing bridge, which will render it serviceable for a number of years to come.

Mr. WALTER. Is the amount provided in this bill the amount recommended by the Budget, $18,000?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Yes.

I might say that the 45,000-ton battleship is not a new proposition so far as the Congress is concerned. In the second deficiency appropriation bill of the last session provision was made for the commencement of two battleships, at which time it was not known whether they would be vessels of 35,000 tons or 45,000 tons. Congress appropriated the money, leaving the determination to the President, who, evidently, had not then satisfied himself that the larger units were required in the interests of national defense, because the Department had embarked upon building 35,000-ton vessels. The Congress, however, did less than a year ago grant permission to do exactly what is now proposed. The amount included in the Budget and in the measure before you for commencing these two vessels is $1,500,000. The total cost of each is estimated at $93,000,000.

Turning from ships, I draw your attention to the aviation estimates. Under this head we were asked to appropriate $88,293,000, and, with the exception of the substitution of $5,000,000 of contractual authority in lieu of a like amount of an immediate appropriation, we have approved the aviation estimates as submitted. They provide for the procurement of 500 project airplanes. The current appropriation act provided for the procurement of 319. The new airplane objective is 3,000 useful airplanes. Prior to the Naval Expansion Act, passed last year, the objective had been 2,050. The planes provided for in this bill are estimated to provide the Navy, upon delivery, with 3,132 project airplanes, or 82 of the authorized expansion of 950.

It is these additional procurements, a greater number of airplanes to be on hand and in operation during 1940, and planned larger outlays upon experiments and tests, that make necessary appreciably larger appropriations on account of the air arm.

Ships and aircraft necessitate shore facilities as bases, as building establishments, more particularly as regards ships, and as repair and overhaul establishments. For public works the committee was asked to appropriate $55,813,550. Of that sum, $20,471,550 may be said to be on account of the normal program, of which $14,836,550 is for carrying forward work on projects already initiated. In a supplemental estimate, $5,721,000 was requested, apart from contractual authority of $10,468,600, for certain navy-yard improvements incident to the shipbuilding program now under way and contemplated by the 1940 Budget, and we received but a few days ago an estimate of $65,000,000 for the establishment or enlargement of naval aviation bases in this country, in Alaska, and in the insular possessions, of which $29,621,000 is desired by way of appropriation at this time. The amount we are recommending under the Public Works head is $52,381,550. We have effected a net reduction of $3,432,000, which is analyzed for you on page 12 of our report.

The air base projects are advocated in consequence of the act approved April 25, 1939, upon which the House finally acted as recently as April 20. The estimate for these projects reached the committee the day it was engaged in arriving at the recommendations it would present to the House. We suspended long enough to hear representatives of the Department and to study the data they brought with them in support of the estimates. The projects have all been recommended by the so-called Hepburn Board and have authorization in the act which I have cited. However, there were certain considerations touching the Pacific islands projects, namely, Midway, Wake, Johnston, and Palmyra, which it seemed to the committee needed more study than the time at our disposal permitted. Consequently, we concluded to eliminate provision for going ahead with those projects at this time. We omitted them entirely without prejudice, and I have no doubt they will be given consideration by the deficiency subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, which the naval subcommittee will be prepared to counsel and advise. The total authorized cost of the projects in question is $9,600,000. The estimate for going forward with them at this time is $3,959,000.

Mr. Chairman, we have made a number of reductions in the estimates beside those which I have specifically mentioned. Singly, they are relatively small. All are enumerated in the table commencing on page 5 of our report, and I shall not take the time of the Committee to repeat what is there stated.

I believe the bill we have laid before you is well balanced, and its enactment, I am sure, will carry us well forward to a degree of preparation which will enable America to preserve its territory, to uphold its institutions and to maintain its honor. Properly and modernly implemented, the manhood of America may be depended upon to prevent any other result. [Applause.]

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER] will use such time as he desires.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, on behalf of the minority I want to express to the chairman of the committee and the members of the majority the appreciation of the minority for the courtesies and considerations shown by the majority at all times during the consideration of the bill and during the course of the hearings. The new chairman of the subcommittee deserves the commendation of the House for the energy and application with which he approached the task and for the conscientious way in which he discharged the duties assigned to him. I believe the House owes the distinguished gentleman from Nevada [Mr. SCRUGHAM] a vote of thanks for the way in which he has completed a difficult task. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the present bill reflects in part the administration's rearmament program. The Army appropriation bill has been passed. Supplemental requests for additional Army activities will also be presented at this session of the Congress. The proposed cost to the American taxpayer for building, equipping, and maintaining the Navy is now before us. It is the largest bill for the support of our naval arm in point of money carried the House has ever been called upon to consider since the enactment of the Budget and Accounting Act. This in itself emphasizes its importance. But more than money is involved here. That feature in itself is tremendously important when we take into consideration the topheavy national debt and contemplate the extraordinary financial demand which would necessarily be made upon us in the event of an emergency requiring the mobilization of our armed forces. But questions of even more far-reaching consequences than the expenditure of money—questions which may affect very materially the part we may play in an acutely critical world drama—overshadow other features of this bill. Evidence accumulates day by day of an intention on the part of some in authority to try to intensify the justification for our involvement in the war-maddened maneuvers in Europe. Is this expanding Navy program for the purpose of defending our long-established foreign policy or is it a step more positive and direct than has yet been taken to have us play a part in the power politics of the Old World? That is the thing the American people want to know.

This is neither the time nor the place for partisanship. It dare not be. Too much is at stake. I refuse to make this a party matter. I believe it is a national question. I intend to support the bill. I intend to support the bill, Mr. Chairman, because I am an American; because I have always believed that an adequate national defense is our best guarantee for the preservation of the peace of America; because I am convinced that our Navy is the first line of that defense, and because curtailment at this time might invite unfortunate consequences.

I intend to support the bill, Mr. Chairman, not because I approve the policies of the last few years which I believe have led us toward dangerous ground, but because any other course at this time might prove hazardous to us as a nation. In part, we are paying the price today for the unlimited confidences of yesterday. The absence of careful examination, of critical analysis, and of deliberative discussion of policies in the Congress during the past few years, are exacting their toll today. One delegation of authority after another has been made to the President extending his powers to a marked degree with the result that our domestic problems and our foreign affairs were largely a matter of his will. Blind devotion demands its tribute.

Even though I believe that the present bill should be supported, Mr. Chairman, the time has come when the Congress should inquire and the country should know what the purposes of the administration are with reference to our armed forces and what our objectives may be in our relations with other nations. There has been a lot of loose talk. Much has been said that could well have been left unsaid. Our people have been disturbed by utterances of a terrifying character, each one more disquieting than its predecessor, the climax of which was reached some days ago when the implication was made that we might be at war in the fall. Doubt and uncertainty—and the awful fear that such doubt and uncertainty bring with them grip in their vicelike claws the spirit of our people. Mark you, Mr. Chairman, we are not lacking in courage. There is courage, yes; and courage to spare in the heart of America for the defense of our traditional and time-honored policies. And let every nation in the world take note today of that courage. But there is a lack of trust and confidence. There is a fear lest we be led into a compromising or embarrassing situation by injudicious utterances or secret understandings which may involve the honor of the Nation and the integrity of the country, and from which there would be no alternative but war. We are not a war-minded people. We are a peace-loving people. And the country wants no war-minded leadership. From the lips of millions of Americans, from the altars of thousands of American homes, than which there can be no holier altar, from the hearts of a thankful people—a people alert to the defense of their rights, happy in the possession of their heritages, and mindful of the stewardship with which they are charged, there is uttered at the throne of the Eternal a universal plea, "God give us peace."

And that which we crave for ourselves we would have others enjoy. Every real American commends wholeheartedly every sincere and altruistic effort that has been made to advance the cause of peace both at home and abroad. The President must be praised for doing that which he honestly hoped would persuade the nations of the world to reconcile their differences and to disavow their intention to plunge Europe into another war.

Such efforts, however, should be limited to the use of moral force, which this Nation can exert, with no implications whatever and with no understanding whatever which would tend to involve this Nation in the jealousies, animosities, and hates which appear to be an integral part of European dealing and diplomacy. We should always stand ready to mediate the differences of others. This can only be done effectively by maintaining impartiality.

Avoiding involvement abroad places no stamp of approval on the cruel and inhuman persecution of people by any sovereign power. Such conduct deserves the censure and condemnation which it has received. We have not in the past, nor do we now condone it. But our disapproval creates no rights of inteference. This was the attitude of the President just a few years ago when he took the position that he opposed this Government's intrusion in the domestic concerns of other nations. You will recall that in 1935 Mr. Roosevelt was urged to intervene in Mexico, where persecution and violence were directed against certain religious bodies. The President rightfully expressed his indignation, but he also stated explicitly, leaving no room for doubt, what was then apparently a fundamental part of his foreign policy. That expression in 1935 is significant today. In the light of more recent occurrences it bears repetition:

> For my own part, however, I decline to permit this Government to undertake a policy of interference in the domestic concerns of foreign governments and thereby jeopardize the maintenance of peaceful relations.

With these words the President stressed two things—first, that he opposed interference in the domestic policies of foreign governments; and, second, that such interference could have but one result, namely, to "jeopardize the maintenance of peaceful relations." This was the calm and temperate declaration of American statesmanship. In taking that stand no one supposed that the President was either excusing or condoning the persecutions and violence committed at that time. Certainly we did not approve such practices. We were indignant, but we were not interfering.

Only a few weeks before, the President had made an equally positive declaration of his intention to avoid the involvement of this Nation abroad. Unequivocally he declared in October of 1935:

I shall make it my great and earnest effort to keep this country free and unentangled from any great war that may occur in the countries across the sea.

Those words permit of but one construction. They can have but one meaning. That statement means just what it says—no involvement; no entanglement. That statement is perfectly consonant with the time-honored traditions and the long-established policies of this Nation. Again this was the calm and temperate declaration of American statesmanship.

Should anyone doubt the President's meaning at that time, it should be recalled that earlier in the same month of October of 1935 Mr. Roosevelt reaffirmed his faith in the fundamental doctrine of unentangling alliances advocated by the first President of the United States. Speaking at San Diego on October 2, 1935, the President said:

Despite what happens in continents overseas, the United States of America shall and must remain, as long ago the Father of his Country prayed that it might remain—unentangled and free.

Again this was the calm and temperate declaration of American statesmanship. It was a tenable position then. It is an equally tenable position today.

Our stake is in the Western Hemisphere. Our responsibility is measured by the Monroe Doctrine. That doctrine declares rights and assumes responsibilities. We must be prepared to insist upon a recognition of those rights and at the same time be willing to discharge those responsibilities. Because of relations with our neighbors of the Western Hemisphere, and because it is vital to our national defense, we must demand a recognition of that time-honored doctrine, a recognition of both the letter and the spirit of that doctrine by all nations, and we must be prepared at all times to defend its intent and purpose against any and all powers. A national-defense program adeqaute under present-day conditions to require such recognition is our solemn duty. The overwhelming majority of the American people will approve our pledge to discharge that duty.

I believe we have a part in world affairs. In this field there are two widely divergent directions which we can take. Neither is isolation. But one leads to peace; the other to war. To pursue the first course we must maintain complete neutrality—neutrality in word and deed, in controversies between other nations. But we can exert the great and compelling moral force of this Nation to bring about peaceful settlements of controversies between others. We can bend every effort to maintain and develop just and friendly relations with other nations so that the processes of peace and the true standards of justice in international conduct may be established. If injustices have been done at peace tables, we can urge that the wrongs be righted at conference tables rather than on battlefields. We can bring the weight of our influence to bear in favor of arbitration and conciliation so that the causes for disputes and misunderstandings will be heard and determined with equity and justice for all. We can support loyally such agencies as the Kellogg Pact and the Hague Tribunal. We can plead for the adoption of agreements for the limitation of armaments. We can urge upon others and participate ourselves wholeheartedly in economical and social cooperation among the nations of the world. While such endeavors may not always be successful, we in no way endanger our own safety by pursuing them, and I firmly believe that in advocating such standards and adopting such practices we can render a world service which will be a blessing rather than a curse to mankind. War cannot hold out any such hope. War cannot bless. War can only curse. If we are to pursue this course, the pathway to peace, we must be frank, open, and direct in our relations with all nations. Good faith, the utmost good faith, is a necessary essential.

On the other hand, we may choose the second course. Should this be our decision, strict neutrality need not concern us. On the contrary, we can then feel free to exert the physical force of the United States on one side or the other in controversies between other nations. We can make declarations of sympathy and suggest support to one contestant as against the other. Threats, economic pressure, and economic sanctions can be resorted to. Encouragement of a hostile attitude on the part of one as against another can be given. Drumbeating and saber rattling can be heard and by word and deed fertile fields for friction and hate can be planted. This is not the pathway to peace. It is the road to war. And that road, like the road to hell, is paved with what some people try to impress upon us as good intentions.

There are those who suggest that "measures short of war" may be effective instruments to use at the present time. They may be effective but they are also dangerous. All of us know what is meant by measures short of war. The very phrase indicates their purpose. You and I know that measures short of war are the most easy and ready approaches to war. Neither good will nor friendliness are part of such measures. They are made up of suspicions, threats, and ill will. Once they get started, the end is almost certain. And that end is not peace.

What is our foreign policy? Where will it lead? What part are we to play at present? What does the future hold in store? The President apparently has abandoned his determined-not-to-become-involved position of 1935 in favor of his quarantine position of 1937. From time to time the quarantine notice has been amplified and its scope enlarged. Our frontier has been established somewhere in France. More recent declarations have carried even greater implications. Instead of trying to heal the festering sores of old animosities, I am afraid new sores have been opened. Irritating and provacative utterances have been made by men in high places. Such utterances do not make for peace, but they do put new venom into old hates. Economic weapons have been threatened as well as invoked against nations. An economic boycott is no more an instrument of peace than a gas bomb.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DITTER. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. About 2 weeks ago I received a letter from Europe, wherein it was positively stated that the meddling of the Roosevelt administration in European affairs had aggravated the situation over there rather than helped to heal it.

Mr. DITTER. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

A huge rearmament program has been projected, the purpose of which may easily be interpreted by others as an intention to intervene in the international frictions and discords of other people. Instead of allaying suspicion, have we been arousing suspicion? Instead of dispelling doubt, have we been creating doubt? Instead of subduing passions, have we been intensifying passions? "Agressor" hurled defiantly across two oceans is not the language of peace. Using a branding iron to burn the mark "aggressor" on a nation is hardly an invitation to a conference table. Peace can only come from an attitude of good will and friendliness. Step by step, it seems we have departed from the position which the President said in 1935 the United States must maintain "untangled and free" to a place of imminent and almost immediate involvement abroad.

A rearmament program has been under way since the beginning of this administration. For the fiscal year 1934 the Navy costs amounted to $274,388,386. Almost fifty million was added the following year. For 1936 the figures had reached $391,424,149. By 1937 more than one hundred million additional was added, while the estimate cost for 1938 is placed at $541,000,000. In other words, there has been almost a 100-percent increase in naval costs in 5 years. Today's figures speak for themselves.

In part these increases have been inevitable and can be justified. Increasing world tension has been evident for some time. With other major powers directing their attention to military and naval developments we had no other alternative but to resort to a policy of preparedness. Any other course would have been suicidal. Our hopes for a limitation of armaments by agreements were frustrated as notice was given of the intention of certain signatories to abandon the limitations that had been agreed upon. This, of course, meant that a new building program would be undertaken by these nations. Even though there were indications prior to the actual termination of the agreements that there was little chance for their renewal, this Nation continued to entertain the hope that some solution could be reached which would prevent a revival of a competitive arms race. Prompted by this hope, we had delayed naval construction. In many of the categories our fleet was not in line with the provisions of the limitations provided for in the agreements. Therefore, insofar as the steps taken by the administration to bring our naval arm in line with the other navies of the world, for the defense of our traditional foreign policies justification can be found for increasing naval costs.

On the other hand, a part of the costs reflect a policy to which attention has frequently been directed and to which objection has been registered. I refer, Mr. Chairman, to the use of emergency funds for the inauguration of projects which have never been passed upon by the Congress but which, in many instances, we are called upon to complete and which, in all instances, we are called upon to maintain. The Congress is charged with the responsibility of providing for the national defense. It has the right to determine what it believes is necessary and essential for an adequate defense. As I said before, we are paying in part today for our commitments of confidence of yesterday.

While increases in costs have been apparent in the earlier days of this administration, justified, as I have said, to some extent by conditions and circumstances beyond our control, a new impetus has been given to rearmament during the last year which should command our attention insofar as its possible effect on our relations with other nations and insofar as it may reflect a willful purpose to abandon our long-established policy of unentangled freedom.

This is the time for sober thought. Manufactured hysteria is as catching as smallpox and just as fatal. Propaganda can be most persuasive. We have seen evidences of it. It should be said, however, to the credit of the common sense of the American people that in the instant case it has not aroused their interest in a new crusade to Europe. The revived and reset theme song of "Making the World Safe for Democracy" has not been a popular hit. In spite of the new words, the old music is familiar as well as forbidding. The overwhelming majority of the American people believe that our duty is to make our form of democracy work at home rather than defend some other form of democracy abroad. They believe that the most effective defense of the Republic lies in a real devotion and a steadfast loyalty to that spirit of liberty that hates absolutism in whatever form it may appear. They know that one-man government is absolutism, no matter what label it may carry. They are keenly aware of the warning that "it is with governments as with religion —the form often survives the substance of the faith." And they are interested primarily in the survival of their faith here at home.

The temptation is present to cast aside all caution at a time such as this and accept every proposal that bears the stamp of preparedness. There is a difference in preparedness just as there is a difference between a defensive position and an aggressive attitude. The American people demand the former. They reject the latter, for they refuse to abandon their established policy of unentangled freedom. Our duty, as I see it, is to refuse to be swept along by a current that may well lead to the rapids and a whirlpool. The American people still hope to fulfill their God-given mission of peace among the nations of the world. However desperate the situation in Europe may be, let us refrain from the further aggravation of any already tense condition by avoiding blustering approaches and harsh words that may plunge the world into the terrible cauldron of war. Let us withhold encouragement to any nation to resort to war as a solution of their problems. Let us continue to tender our good offices to all for the amicable adjustment of their differences. Let us defend our civilization by dedicating our moral influence to the task of reestablishing the standards of law and order and justice and equity in international relations. Let us reaffirm our faith in the God of peace by keeping America out of war and by helping to keep the world out of war. Only thus can we hope to achieve our cherished destiny for America. [Applause.]

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. FERNANDEZ].

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Chairman, after several weeks of painstaking inquiry, the naval subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations has presented for consideration the naval budget for the fiscal year 1940. You gentlemen have before you the finished product. It is the result of an examination of a stack of statistical data something like 2 feet thick, followed by detailed inquiry, lasting many days, of officials of the Navy Department into all items of increase, not alone over appropriations for the preceding year but over such appropriations after the elimination therefrom of projects not of a recurring nature. The preparation of one of these measures really is a tremendous task and a great responsibility, and I can assure you that the membership of the subcommittee is alive to that responsibility and endeavors to discharge it in a way that will reflect credit not alone upon themselves but upon this great body, whose servants we are.

Our able chairman, the gentleman from Nevada, Governor SCRUGHAM, has acquainted you with the salient provisions of the bill. It is my purpose to go more into detail; but before doing so, I should like to bring to your attention certain factors which the Congress must keep in mind in considering naval estimates.

After the conclusion of the World War the United States signed two naval treaties, the Washington Treaty of 1922 and the London Treaty of 1930. These treaties stabilized the tonnage of ships by types, fixed the rate of replacements, and the type characteristics of combatant vessels of the leading naval powers. Replacement of battleships was suspended in the second treaty.

These treaties, which maintained the so-called 5–5–3 ratio as between the United States, Great Britain, and Japan, expired on December 31, 1936, and were superseded by the London treaty of 1936, which fixed the characteristics of combatant ships, but not their quantity in navies as had the previous treaties. Moreover, the latter treaty was signed only by the United States, Great Britain, and France.

At the recommendation of the President, the authorized strength of the new Navy in combatant under-age ships, and their rate of replacement, was fixed by the Seventy-fifth Congress in the act of May 17, 1938, at approximately 20 percent greater than the original treaty Navy figures. The same act authorized not less than 3,000 useful naval airplanes and the construction of 26 auxiliary vessels, supplementing 6 that Congress authorized in the act of July 30, 1937. The act of May 17, 1938, the so-called Naval Expansion Act, was designed by Congress to meet changed world conditions, economic, political, and military, such as building programs abroad, the failure of world powers to maintain the former quantitative naval ratios, the political disturbances in Europe and Asia that threatened to change the world stability that had obtained to a degree since 1919. In forwarding the recommendations the President stated it was "specifically and solely because of the piling up of additional land and sea armaments in other countries, in such manner as to involve a threat to world peace and security, I make the following recommendations to the Congress." He continued:

It is necessary for all of us to realize that the unfortunate world conditions of today have resulted too often in the discarding of those principles and treaties which underlie international law and order, and in the entrance of many new factors into the actual conduct of war. Adequate defense means that for the protection not only of our coasts but also of our communities far removed from the coast we must keep any potential enemy many hundred miles away from our continental limits. We cannot assume that our defense would be limited to one ocean and one coast and that the other ocean and the other coast would with certainty be safe. We cannot be certain that the connecting link—the Panama Canal—would be safe. Adequate defense affects, therefore, the simultaneous defense of every part of the United States of America. It is our clear duty to further every effort toward peace but at the same time to protect our Nation. That is the purpose of these recommendations. Such protection is and will be based not on aggression but on defense.

Recent events, you no doubt will agree, have confirmed the wisdom of Congress in responding as it did to the President's recommendations.

In a monetary way the fiscal year 1940 sees the Navy approaching its strength under the former treaty Navy authorizations and starting upon the program of increases granted by Congress in the Expansion Act. When the shipconstruction and aircraft programs, and the small personnel increases which are provided for in the measure before you are taken into consideration, an examination of the bill will disclose no unusual items of expense.

In no sense can it be inferred that the committee is providing funds with a view to establishing a "two-ocean fleet" or for embarking on any program looking beyond home defense and the maintenance of the Monroe Doctrine. The Appropriations Committee merely allocates the funds it considers prudent to expend to carry the annual charges against authorizations enacted by Congress. Policy making is without our province.

There is nothing in this financial program that looks toward aggressive action, or of projecting an attack against the territory of any naval power. Our objective is a navy adequate for the proper defense of our Nation.

Mr. DARDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERNANDEZ. I yield.

Mr. DARDEN. The gentleman touched a moment ago on the possibility of a two-ocean Navy. Before the gentleman concludes his remarks will he have a little more to say on this subject as to his own views in reference to it and the desirability of entering into the expense of attempting to build such fleets?

Mr. FERNANDEZ. I believe in a two-ocean Navy. I think such a Navy is necessary to protect the interests of the United States.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERNANDEZ. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. Would the gentleman mind pointing out what would constitute a two-ocean Navy? Would it mean doubling a one-ocean Navy such as we have now?

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Not necessarily. There are several factors involved, but with the Panama Canal I should say a fleet much less than double the size of the present force would meet our needs.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERNANDEZ. I prefer to continue until I complete my major statement.

A Navy cannot be created upon the outbreak of war. Capital ships require over 4 years to build, and smaller vessels from 2 to 3 years. Should war be forced upon us, the ships to begin that war will be those that are completed when war breaks out and those under construction and nearing completion. The first year or two of a war will be conducted with the ships we have when war starts.

The United States has the longest coast line of any naval power. It is exposed to attack in two oceans. The Navy must be prepared to defend both coasts, to forestall the advance of a strong enemy naval force against either shore. A navy of sufficient strength to protect the shores of the United States must be sufficiently strong to defeat the navy of a possible enemy. Prompt and effective injury to an enemy at a distance from our coast is the only sure defense from blockade, from air and surface bombardment, and from actual landing of an invading force. In defending our territory in war, we cannot assume an attitude of passive defense and simply beat off an attack at one place and later at another. In such a case we would see our coasts blockaded, our outlying possessions seized, our commerce, both coastwise and foreign, driven off the seas, and we would undergo the costly experience of finding the war lasting just as long as the enemy willed it; that is, until he had attained every objective and everything he wanted.

We have outlying possessions in Alaska, the Hawaiian Islands, Samoa, Panama Canal Zone, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands. All of these outlying possessions are more or less vulnerable and their defense depends upon two factors: One is a local defense by mobile forces and fortifications. The other, and the dominant factor, is sea power. A sufficient Navy can keep open the lines of supply to the defenders of such possessions, and, if they are secure in their own local defenses against minor attacks, the Navy can use them as bases from which to operate against the enemy or enemies.

Aside from the actual defense of United States territory, both continental and insular, the Nation has for over 100 years held as a cardinal policy, the Monroe Doctrine, that an extension of Old World sovereignty in the American Hemisphere would be prejudicial to the United States. Nothing stands in the way of the possible exploitation or seizure of the republics of Central and South America, except this doctrine, backed by the naval forces of the United States. Thus the responsibility of naval defense of our own Territories is enhanced by the necessity of maintaining the Monroe Doctrine.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERNANDEZ. I yield.

Mr. MASSINGALE. I have not heard all of the address of the gentleman from Louisiana, but I am wondering if the committee made any recommendations regarding the Nicaraguan water-level canal.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. None at all. That would not come within the province of our subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations. That is a matter within the jurisdiction of the legislative Committee on Naval Affairs.

Our Government wisely, in my judgment, has decreed that our naval defenses need to be expanded. The Congress a year ago determined that our sea and air forces should be enlarged and, but a few days ago, decided that there should be established additional air bases at home and in Alaska and in certain of our insular possessions, either by way of enlargement of existing bases or the establishment of new bases. Earlier, however, than the Naval Expansion Act of a year ago the Congress adopted the policy of building up our sea forces to the limits contemplated by the Washington and London Treaties of 1922 and 1930, respectively. There, in a nutshell, is the reason for the substantially increased naval budget you are asked to approve for the ensuing fiscal year. The numbers and types of ships you have been laying down, as their construction progresses, require heavier outlays.

Others, laid down earlier, are joining with the fleet, requiring more personnel and swelling maintenance and operating costs. Under the new expansion authorization, new units become in order and aviation axpansion becomes a factor. Ships and aircraft dictate the naval budget, except to the extent that funds are withheld to maintain a proper degree of readiness and efficiency. Ships and aircraft occasion every single item of genuine naval expense.

The estimates submitted by the Budget total $790,429,453, including $50,621,000 of special national-defense funds allocated by the President to the Navy, of which special funds $29,621,000 is for the new air-base development recommended in the Hepburn Board report, authorized by Public, No. 43, Seventy-sixth Congress; $18,646,000 for 156 additional aircraft and their ordnance; $354,000 for naval aviation cadets; and $2,000,000 for aircraft-testing buildings and equipment at the Naval Aircraft Factory, Philadelphia.

The total of the aviation estimates is $88,298,000, compared with $48,075,000 for 1939, and they provide for a total of 500 naval aircraft, which will bring the Navy up to 82 planes in excess of the treaty total of 2,050.

The shipbuilding total is $270,000,000, as compared to $190,613,150 made available for 1939. It provides, in addition to carrying on construction on 121 ships already laid down, for 23 new vessels—2 battleships, 45,000 tons; 2 cruisers, 8,000 tons; 8 destroyers; 8 submarines; and 3 auxiliaries, 2 small seaplane tenders, and 1 repair ship. This is about the average annual increment of new construction. The battleships are designed to maintain the strategic security and tactical supremacy of the United States Fleet in relation to other navies. Great Britain is laying down vessels of 40,000 tons, and the refusal of Japan to communicate her building plans suggests that that empire either may be building or planning upon building vessels of larger tonnage, armament, and speed than formerly. It is impracticable to build a modern vessel of the desired characteristics and armament on 35,000 tons.

Treaty restrictions on gun caliber and tonnage to 16-inch guns and 45,000 tons have in the first instance been removed by failure of Japan to sign the 1936 naval treaty and in the second instance by special agreement of the signatories of the 1936 treaty. Congress authorized the President to lay down 45,000-ton ships if he determined with respect to the tonnage of capital ships being built by other nations that the interests of national defense so required. He has authorized the construction of these two vessels and the committee feels that under present conditions the construction of the ships is warranted politically, and is vital militarily. Due to treaty and congressional restrictions since the naval treaty of 1922, the fleet has lacked fast, heavy ships to match those of leading naval powers. My judgment is that it would be a serious and dangerous mistake at this time for Congress not to support the Navy Department in its endeavor to increase the effectiveness and the battle strength of the United States Fleet.

The committee has effected a number of reductions in the Budget estimates. They aggregate $19,956,212 and are set out in detail in the committee's report. They occur principally in three items, namely, "Reserve material, Navy, $2,794,626"; "Aviation, Navy, $5,000,000"; and "Replacement of naval vessels, $6,950,288." The aviation reduction merely represents a transfer to contractual authority.

The committee believes the funds provided in the bill are necessary to carry out the expressed policies of Congress and are adequate to carry on the aviation and shipbuilding programs, maintain the necessary personnel strengths, keep up the various shore stations and departments, and increase the readiness of the Navy for an emergency.

In presenting the various phases of this measure, I call attention first of all to the committee's report on the bill, in which we have endeavored to give you a clear-cut view of its details.

NAVAL RESERVE OFFICERS' TRAINING CORPS

The act of August 6, 1937, Public, No. 248, Seventy-fifth Congress, authorized an increase of 1,200, or a total of 2,400, Naval Reserve Officers' Training Corps students. Last year funds were provided to establish two new units, and two more are provided for in this bill, which should eventually raise the total of enrollees to 2,000. This accords with the policy adopted last year in making this increase gradually rather than all at one time.

NAVAL RESERVE

In Public, No. 732, Seventy-fifth Congress, a new Naval Reserve Act was passed, which necessitated redrafting the language of the appropriation "Naval Reserve."

No unusual items, other than statutory, are in the Budget except $290,520 is provided for 90 Reserve aviation officers—naval aviation cadets who have completed their cadet contract—who will be ordered to active duty with the fleet during the year, and $438,165 is allotted for 273 naval aviation cadets who, after completing their contracted 4 years' service, are, under the provisions of the law, being discharged to inactive duty with transportation and a $1,500 bonus.

Of the $9,994,000 in the Budget, but $2,771,385 is for the surface Naval Reserve, and $5,590,462 is for the Naval Reserve cadet program, $1,329,214 for ordinary naval aviation reserve purposes, and $302,939 for training expenses for Marine Corps Reserve aviation.

The committee has reduced the estimates in two respects. It has disallowed a small amount for week-end cruises and it has not approved a new item of administrative pay for officers of the Volunteer Reserve involving $49,920.

NAVAL ACADEMY

The appointments have been continued at four. Unless changes in personnel laws affecting forced retirements are made, this number of appointments is necessary to maintain the strength of the officer corps.

NAVAL TRAINING STATION, NORFOLK

Special provision had to be made over routine expenses to fit out the new enlisted men's trade school building and the six new recruit barracks completed by W. P. A. funds.

BUREAUS OF CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIR, ENGINEERING AND ORDNANCE

No unusual items are inserted, but provision of funds to equip and fit out shops, storehouses, and other structures authorized in the Second Deficiency Act of 1938 or undertaken by W. P. A. funds was necessary. Funds are provided to complete the retooling of the Naval Torpedo Station at Alexandria. Although the ship and aviation programs necessitated the opening of this activity, it is a wise provision to have it in operating condition if an emergency is pending.

PAY, SUBSISTENCE, AND TRANSPORTATION

The estimates provide for an increase of 5,500 enlisted men. The average numbers contemplated for pay purposes are: 1939, 107,550; 1940, 113,050, and the end of the year numbers 110,100 and 116,000, respectively. The restrictions on flight pay above the rank of captain are removed.

FUEL AND TRANSPORTATION

The appropriation is based on 8,000,000 barrels at an average cost of 71.57 cents, as compared to 8,000,000 barrels at 88.4 cents for 1939. Funds have been included to commence turning over the oil at Pearl Harbor by issuing out of stock there and replacing it by a more stable oil.

PUBLIC WORKS

The committee considered estimates aggregating $55,813,550. It recommends $52,381,550, which is a reduction of $3,432,000, arrived at as indicated on page 12 of the committee's report. All of the projects, except those pertaining to naval air bases, are set out in detail on pages 40–44 of the accompanying bill.

For the naval air-base projects, authorized but a few days ago at a total cost of $65,000,000, and for the expansion of facilities at the naval aircraft factory, Philadelphia, authorized in the same act, the Budget submitted an estimate of $31,621,000. The committee recommends $27,662,000 of that amount. The reduction of $3,959,000 applies to bases at Midway, Wake, Johnston, and Palmyra Islands, in the Pacific. The elimination of provision for bases at such points was done without prejudice. The proposition included angles which the committee felt required more time for study than it was in a position to make.

RESERVE MATERIAL, NAVY

The Budget proposes a new appropriation—"Reserve Material, Navy"—in the amount of $3,545,000, of which the committee has approved $750,374. The purpose of the appropriation is to increase the readiness of the Navy with respect to out-of-commission destroyers, submarines, and auxiliaries and merchant ship conversions, in stocks of manufactured articles not readily obtainable on short notice in the open market. Such an account existed during the World War period. The components of the project are confidential.

STRATEGIC AND CRITICAL MATERIALS

The committee has continued the appropriation for this item pending the establishment of a general governmental policy for their procurement. The total naval requirements for a 2-year war has been estimated as $100,000,000. In 1938, $3,500,000 was appropriated, and in 1939, $500,000. The funds have been expended to stock some of the more critical materials.

REPLACEMENT OF NAVAL VESSELS

The Budget included funds either to complete, continue the construction, or lay down a total of 144 vessels. The size of the appropriation requested, $270,000,000—of which $220,000,000 is for construction and machinery and $50,000,000 for armor, armament, and ammunition—is due partly to the large number of ships under construction and partly to the renewal of battleship construction after the lapse of the disarmament treaties on December 31, 1936. Two battleships were appropriated for by Congress in 1937 and four last year. Under present building plans and authorizations, these shipbuilding expenses should reach a peak in 1941 or 1942.

Your committee has approved the 1940 increment of 2 battleships, 2 cruisers, 8 destroyers, 8 submarines, and 3 auxiliaries, or a total of 23 vessels. Prior year increments have been:

1935	24
1936	24
1937	20
1938	14

Under present world conditions, the best insurance for security is to maintain the fleet's relative naval strength. Spasmodic building leads to naval inferiority. Congress should keep up with building increments of ships and aircraft each year as required to carry out the provisions of the Naval Expansion Act.

Costs per ton of vessels have and will continue to rise due, on the one hand, to congressional enactments affecting conditions, hours, and wages of labor, retirement and social-security laws, and on the other hand to military improvements resulting from scientific advances affecting speed and armament. The country has indicated it wants a first-class Navy and appreciates that an inferior or second-class one leads to disaster.

With one exception, the committee has followed the Budget as to replacement, Navy funds, providing a portion, however, under other heads for projects which the Budget proposed be paid for with replacement, Navy money. The exception applies to planned expenditures upon ships which have been in commission more than 12 months. The committee is still persuaded to the view that the Department is not pursuing a correct course in expending ship construction money on vessels which have been in commission in some cases nearly 2 years. We took this same stand last year and the House supported us. If you will persevere with us, we shall get it worked out satisfactorily before very long.

MODERNIZATION OF AIRCRAFT CARRIERS

Congress, in Public, No. 618, Seventy-fifth Congress, authorized modernization of the two large aircraft carriers at a cost not to exceed $15,000,000 to increase their effectiveness. There is included in the bill $4,000,000 to initiate this modernization of the Saratoga.

That rather completely accounts for you the recommendations we bring to you for approval.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, let me say that I deprecate as much as any of you these mounting national defense costs. If they mean, however, the security of America, the cost is small. I am convinced that a challenge to our security exists today. We must be prepared to meet it. This bill is in the interest of that preparation. [Applause.]

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, in view of the very complete statements my distinguished colleagues on the committee have made on this bill, I shall confine my discussion to two phases of the general subject. I want to touch briefly on the questions of the 45,000-ton battleships and the four Pacific islands not provided for in the appropriation bill.

Our naval policy calls for a navy second to none. Six years ago we commenced taking effective measures to build and maintain a navy, second to none, properly proportioned as to numbers, size, and types of battleships, carriers, light craft, and airplanes.

The Congress by an overwhelming majority has just provided for extensive improvements to existing naval air bases and for the creation of necessary additional naval air bases. These air bases are essential to the efficiency of the fleet.

We are now asked to appropriate for two battleships previously authorized by the Naval Expansion Act which approved the laying down of battleships of 45,000 tons if the President determines that, because of the construction of ships in excess of 35,000 tons by other nations, the interests of our national defense so require.

The battleships we now have in operation are, as you know, comparatively small and have a useful speed of 21 to 22 knots per hour. The six ships now being constructed will make around 27 knots. The proposed 45,000-ton battleships will be considerably faster and able to withstand great punishment.

The President has recently recommended that the interest of our national defense demands the construction of two 45,000-ton ships.

England is now building two 40,000-ton battleships. She is about to start the construction of two more battleships of 40,000 tons or greater. She already has the Hood, a 42,000-ton battle cruiser. The Repulse and Renown, two other battle cruisers, are capable of 31½ knots. Germany has two battleships under construction and another projected, the probable speed of which will be 30 knots. Both France and Italy have faster battleships than the United States. Persistent reports indicate that Japan commenced the construction of three 46,000-ton battleships in 1937—at least 2 years ahead of the United States. At any rate, Japan refuses to inform us just what she is doing in this respect.

I do not need to remind you that the backbone of our second-to-none Navy, as it is with the navy of every great power, is the battleship—the line-of-battle ships. As a unit of the battle line it must be capable of delivering the heaviest blows against an enemy and at the same time it must be capable of withstanding to a maximum degree the heaviest blows that can be inflicted against it.

Since the inception of the modern line-of-battle ship the types of blows that can be delivered against it have multiplied. Not only must a battleship provide side and deck armor for protection against the destructive penetration of heavy projectiles, but it must provide additional deck armor to protect against airplane bomb penetration, and side blister and compartmentation against mines and torpedoes from destroyers, submarines, fast motorboats, and torpedo aircraft. In addition to this static protection, the dynamic protection of antiaircraft batteries and antidestroyer batteries have been added.

The battleship is the backbone of our fleet upon which naval operations in control of any sea area depends. If our battleship force is to be capable of carrying out its fundamental functions, its speed must be adjusted to the speed of possible enemy types as well as the speeds of other combatant type. If the enemy has a type that can outfight anything of equal speed and can outrun anything we have that is superior in fighting power, we will find it beyond our power to exercise complete control of a sea area that such an enemy desires to challenge.

Not only must we have a powerful battle line of sufficient speed but we must have powerful ships especially equipped with speed that will make such enemy raids into areas under our control too hazardous to be safely undertaken. Such a combination of speed and fighting power can be provided only by increasing size.

In this needed increase in size the battleship but parallels the general increase that pertains to all men-of-war, and for that matter, to merchant ships. Within the life span of our present 33,000-ton battleships, destroyers have increased in size from 1,200 tons to somewhere between 1,600 and 2,500 tons; the size of cruisers has increased; aircraft have increased in size many times with great increase in bomb size and bomb load.

With the increasing complexity and demands to be met within limiting battleship tonnages, our naval designers have found themselves increasingly hampered in their effort to include indispensable features. This has affected our own problems of design in greater degree than in the case of any foreign nation because of our strategic requirement for adequate cruising radius. England has numerous bases in prospective areas of operations from which her ships can be refueled. Japan has numerous bases in the western Pacific from which her ships can operate. The United States is not so liberally, or adequately, provided with outlying bases.

The conflicting demands on the allocation of weight in battleships are fighting power, guns and ammunition; protection, armor, blister, and compartmentation; speed, engines and boiler power; radius, fuel.

If we purpose to attain equality, ship for ship, with possible enemy ships we must not only equal them in fighting power, in protection, and in speed, but, considering our possible operating zones—the Pacific, North Atlantic, and South Atlantic Oceans—we must provide great cruising radius. This can only be gained by building on greater individual tonnage, in other words, on 45,000 tons.

The relative strategic needs of the United States are such that we should have been the first nation to increase the tonnage of our ships above 35,000 tons—instead, we are the last. Both the British and Japanese have gone to greater tonnage before us. Presumably Germany will follow suit, if she has not already done so.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALDWELL. I yield.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. The use of the 45,000-ton battleships which are contemplated in this bill means greater cruising range, but primarily greater speed.

Mr. CALDWELL. The gentleman has stated the proposition quite accurately.

The correct sequence of determining characteristics is to decide what functions the ship is to accomplish, then decide what characteristics—gun power, protection, speed, and radius—are required to accomplish the function, and then decide the tonnage necessary that the ship may embody these characteristics. The 35,000-ton limitation is an artificial limitation agreed to by this country in 1936 in the effort to meet the wishes of England—not hampered by lack of bases and needing numbers of ships to provide for widespread distribution—and in the effort to economize. It will be fatally short-sighted economy, however, if the limitation in tonnage is so restrictive that the characteristics we have determined to be necessary cannot be built into our ships, with the result that the desired functions cannot be accomplished. We might as well, or better, not build such ships and note the old gag about a "second-best poker hand."

We are spending hundreds of millions of dollars for effective naval protection. An indispensable part of this in the immediate future is a division of fast, powerful ships which will make effective our control of sea areas wherever our naval operations may be called upon to support our national policies. The individual ship tonnage necessary for this is 45,000 tons. This 45,000 tons is necessary in order that this ship can reach and operate in the areas necessary, that it may compete on even terms with Japanese, British, and German ships already laid down of equal power and equal high speed, and that it may withstand repeated attacks by submarines and aircraft and continue to operate.

The Seventy-fifth Congress, in approving the Navy Expansion Act, recognized that additional naval operating bases would be necessary for some of the units of the expanded fleet and accordingly inserted a section in the act authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Navy to appoint a board of naval officers to investigate and report upon the need, for purposes of national defense, for the establishment of additional bases on the continental coasts of the United States, its Territories, and possessions.

Based on the excellent and thorough report of this board, known as the Hepburn Board, the Congress has enacted legislation authorizing the establishment of a number of naval air bases at various strategic locations.

I will not here undertake to discuss all the items recommended but I should like to touch for a moment on the authorization for air bases in the mid-Pacific.

Midway, Wake, Johnston, and Palmyra are small Pacific islands of coral atoll formation to the northwest, west, southwest and south of the Hawaiian Islands. All but Wake are east of the one hundred and eightieth meridian. Midway is 1,100 miles northwest of the Hawaiian Islands; Wake is 1,900 miles west of the Hawaiian Islands; Johnston is 700 miles southwest; and Palmyra is 900 miles south. Midway and Wake are already in use as essential stepping stones for the Pan American Airways trans-Pacific route.

As you have doubtless noted the bill under consideration does not appropriate the funds asked by the Department and approved by the Budget for the naval development of these islands. I personally am convinced that work should be promptly undertaken and completed.

The naval aviation developments at these islands will consist of accommodations for permanently basing one patrol plane squadron at Midway, and facilities for temporarily basing patrol planes at the other three islands when assisted by ships known as patrol plane tenders.

The island of Oahu in the Hawaiian Islands is absolutely essential for our national defense in the Pacific. It must be held at all costs. This can be done as long as the United States retains command of the sea in that area. Our imaginary defense line can then extend effectively northward to the Aleutians and southward toward the Panama area as far as necessary.

A defense line is simply a line beyond which we should attempt to prevent any enemy force from passing. This, however, is impossible unless we have some means of learning about the enemy's plans or movements before he can approach such a line. Any outlying point from which to scout for such information is thus a necessary and, quite possibly, crucial part of any defense line. This is the purpose of the developments at Midway, Wake, Palmyra, and Johnston. Without these outposts then the defense line itself must function as a series of outposts and the defense line will actually move back far behind where it ought to be.

Unless our naval aviation can give the commander in chief of our fleet the information he must have in order to do his job as we expect him to do it, he will have to attempt to obtain his information by sending vessels of the fleet out to do the airplane scouting job. Thus, instead of exposing a few seaplanes, he will have to expose to enemy action a number of our major vessels, such as cruisers and submarines. In doing so, he not only will weaken the main body of the fleet for major battle, but also will obtain less information than he would get if his patrol planes were able to operate properly in this critical area.

The work projected at Midway, Wake, Johnston, and Palmyra cannot possibly be accomplished offhand in emergency. Dredging takes time. Unless the job is done before an emergency takes place, these islands cannot be used in the manner demanded by strategic requirements. On the other hand, the greatest value of the naval aviation facilities at these places will be exercised immediately upon the outbreak and during the earliest stages of war. Beyond any question their development is fully justified and must not be postponed. [Applause.]

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, in discussing a Navy bill and the strength of our Navy we should likewise discuss what our foreign policy is under the provisions of the pending bill.

There are many people in this country who, because of propaganda, think we are defenseless, that we are a second China or Abyssinia. So this seems to be an appropriate occasion to present the facts not only to the Congress but, as far as possible, to the people. As Al Smith used to say, "Let's look at the record." What does the record disclose?

The record discloses that we have the greatest Navy, the most powerful Navy, the most efficient Navy we have ever had in the history of America. Nevertheless, due to this propaganda and hysteria, the people back home are led to believe that we are about to be attacked by some foreign foe, that we are about to be overwhelmed, that our cities are about to be bombed by airplanes from foreign lands; and the time has come to try at least, even though mine may be a lone voice crying in the wilderness, to answer these absurd charges and this type of war hysteria that has spread throughout our land.

In the first place, I challenge anyone—from the President down and including any spokesman of the President in the House—to specify what nation has, or what nations have, the faintest idea or the faintest capacity of attacking the United States of America. The answer is that there is no such nation. None of the totalitarian nations desire to attack us or could attack us if they wanted to. They are all heavily engaged in their own back yards. No airplane has ever been invented that can fly over from any totalitarian nation and bomb New York, Chicago, San Francisco, or Birmingham; but this hysteria prevails to such an extent that the people in the Mississippi Valley think they ought to have battleships up the Mississippi and antiaircraft guns; and, as some Members of Congress said, "submarines in the Dust Bowl."

Let us start by understanding what we are doing here. We Members of Congress are voting for the greatest peacetime naval appropriation bill in the history of our country. The American people back home evidently want a large Navy; they want a Navy for national defense, a Navy that will protect our interests throughout the world, a Navy that will uphold the Monroe Doctrine. I believe, therefore, in voting for this bill we are carrying out the intent and purpose of the people back home who want adequate national defense; but they want to be assured, they want to be guaranteed, that this Navy is for defense and not for offense and aggression, that there is no change in our foreign policy, that we are to maintain our American foreign policy of neutrality, of peace, of no entangling alliances, and that we are not to intervene with this Navy in the affairs of foreign lands. If they are given this guaranty all of us can support this bill openly and gladly.

The President of the United States, according to the press a day or so ago, gave out a statement in which he spoke of fear of an attack by airplanes upon this country and our islands in the Caribbean Sea. From whom? From what country? There is no country seeking to attack us.

The difficulty with our present position is that, unfortunately, we have put a chip on our shoulder; we are going out looking for trouble, and we are liable to find it. [Applause.] I am glad to have some Democrats applaud that remark because it is away above partisanship. It is an American issue. Keeping our country out of foreign wars is not a Republican issue unless you want to give it to us. We will take the responsibility and gladly take it. But when Mr. Landon, former Republican candidate for President, who knows less about international affairs and less about international relations than any Member of this House, spoke over the radio to the world last night he stated that if there is a war in Europe it is inevitable we must go into that war.

Mr. MAY. Who said that?

Mr. FISH. That distinguished Republican candidate for President which we had in 1936. That is not the attitude of the Republican Party. That is not the attitude of the rank and file of the Democratic Party. It may be the attitude of the President of the United States, and I am afraid it is.

I take this occasion to quote the President's words so there will be no mistake. Although I represent his congressional district, I do not represent his views. Here is what the President had to say on April 11, which is almost identical with what Landon had to say last night. On April 11, 1939, President Roosevelt endorsed as his own views an editorial in the Washington Post that stated if war broke out in Europe our participation in it would be a virtual necessity. That is the kind of war propaganda and hysteria that is giving business, the stock market, and the American people the jitters. The President does not say whose war or why the war started; but if there is a war we have got to go into it.

Mr. PATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. PATRICK. If there is anything that looks like war, or anything that might tend toward war, in which the United States could be involved, whom would we fight and what about?

Mr. FISH. That is exactly what I want to know. We are put in this war before war is declared. We are told by Mr. Landon and the President of the United States that if there is war that it is inevitable that we join in it. They do not even wait to have a war break out. They do not even wait to find the cause of the war. They do not wait to find out who is in the war. But we have got to go into it. It is that kind of hysteria that is overwhelming this country. That is why the people look under their beds every night to see if there is a Jap or Italian or German soldier lurking there ready to pounce upon poor little defenseless America.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. I listened to Mr. Landon's speech. He also said if we wanted to have peace we should quit talking about war. I heard over in another body a few days ago that there was a rather lengthy discussion about Congress staying here to keep us out of war. My judgment is if Congress would adjourn and go home, and we would quit talking about war in Congress, there would not be a chance for war.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman indicates that Congress has nothing to do with it; that we have no right, the Democrats or Republicans have no right to criticize the President. Let me say that we have just as much right and more justification to criticize the foreign policies of this administration than we have to criticize our domestic policies, because they are more dangerous. If we sit tight here and do not criticize our foreign policies, and let one man talk us into a war, we are equally to blame.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman misunderstood my indication.

Mr. FISH. I want to make this clear, because it is another type of propaganda that is covering the country; that is, that no one must criticize the President; that we have no right to do it. There is only one time to wage war on war and that is in time of peace. If the President would stop at the water's edge, we would stop at the water's edge, too. [Applause.] Practically every statement and act of the President has shown that he is an internationalist and an interventionist, and is going away beyond the water's edge interfering with, meddling with, and intervening in the affairs of foreign countries. May I say that it is none of our business what form of government exists in any foreign land; it is none of our business what form of government exists in Nazi Germany, Fascist Italy, or Soviet Russia; and, by the same token, it is none of their business what form of government exists in the United States of America. [Applause.]

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield for a brief question.

Mr. MAY. I want to couple with my statement also the fact that my remarks were not intended to and did not indicate I was trying to protect the President from any attack. I say the Congress alone has the power to declare war, and Congress ought to control the foreign affairs of the country.

Mr. FISH. That is exactly what I am trying to have the Congress understand. It is one of the few powers we have not surrendered to the President, and I refer to the power to declare war. I do not believe this Congress will ever surrender this power, and I am sure the gentleman agrees with me.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I should like to continue for a moment, if I may.

I do not blame the Democrats for criticizing me at any time you want for being partisan. I am partisan, but not on this issue. Years ago, 7 years ago when Secretary Stimson tried to get this identical power to determine the aggressor nation, which is nothing but the war power of Congress, I led the fight against him just as I am opposing the grant of that power today to President Roosevelt. Whenever this Congress surrenders to the President of the United States, Republican or Democrat, the power to determine the aggressor nation, it is surrendering at the same time its constitutional power to declare war, because the power to determine an aggressor nation must be followed by the power to punish and quarantine that nation.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. Of course, the gentleman knows that all the wars that have been going on in the world for the last few years have been undeclared wars, but the gentleman from New York evidently does not mean to say that there can be an illegitimate war with this country without the consent of Congress?

Mr. FISH. I certainly do not, and that is what I am pleading for, that we make the foreign policies in the Congress. If we make the foreign policies we have a right to speak about them. We have a right to formulate them and we have a right to debate them. We hear a great deal of hysteria throughout the country to the effect that none of us, in Congress or out, can criticize the President even if he asks for power to determine an aggressor nation, or if he wants to quarantine a country in Europe, or if he wants to enter into concerted military action with a foreign nation. These powers belong to the Congress. I for one, as much as I want to get away for the summer, am ready to remain here all summer if it is necessary to keep this country out of war. [Applause.]

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Certainly, I yield.

Mr. HOOK. Unless we surrender the power to the President the power remains in the Congress; is not that true?

Mr. FISH. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. HOOK. All right; then if we adjourn without giving him that power, why should we have to stay here all summer?

Mr. FISH. For the reason that unfortunately we have for the first time a President who has discarded our fundamental foreign policies and has substituted for those policies attacks on foreign nations, on their forms of government, and on their rulers, who has substituted hate and abuse for the fundamental foreign policies of our country. If we have a President of that type, who evidently is an interventionist and an internationalist, trying to get us into European conflicts, you and I know, and every American knows, the tremendous power of the President to get us into war, even though the right to declare war has been granted by the Constitution to Congress.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. PATRICK. I recognize that the gentleman from New York is a student and a man of ability. I should like to hear the gentleman discuss for just a minute the idea that has recently been expressed on the floor of the Senate by the distinguished Senator from California—and the statement was hailed abroad—that if Congress stayed in session war could be prevented. I should like to hear that idea developed a little further. Since the power is in the hands of Congress, upon what theory is it true that our banding together could keep us out of war regardless of what position the Chief Executive might take, if the Congress adjourned and went home?

Mr. FISH. I am very glad to answer the gentleman. He has asked a very fair question. Of course, the President of the United States has tremendous powers through his Ambassadors. He is the spokesman of the Nation in dealing with foreign issues. We in the Congress have no right to speak to foreign nations. We make the policies, and it is for the President, of course, to carry out those policies, but he deals directly with foreign governments. He has his Ambassadors in foreign lands. He has Kennedy in England and Bullitt in France. As far as I am concerned, I have more fear of that axis of Kennedy-Bullitt-Roosevelt than I have of Italy and Germany, because I know that Italy and Germany do not want to attack the United States of America.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. SHORT. And even if they did, could they possibly do it?

Mr. FISH. I have already said that; but that is true, 100 percent true, and none of these totalitarian nations is able to attack us even if it wanted to.

Mr. PATRICK. The gentleman from New York will concede that even so, with all that fear he has, which I do not share, but even if he is entirely right in it, they are still there in their positions, and the Congress' being here would not keep that condition from existing.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman knows this: One word from the President, just one word from the President today, could stop this war hysteria, this fear and dread of war, this emotionalism which has spread all over America. There is no such word. Instead of that, there are daily attacks on foreign nations from the White House that inflame the passions of our people. Whenever you inflame the passions of the people and start to look for trouble with some foreign land, and the President gets into that trouble and the people are all stirred up, then the Congress will have to respond, if the passions of the people are sufficiently aroused by this war hysteria. That is what I am fearful of, not the feelings of the Members of Congress themselves but that we may be driven into war against our will, because it is not a difficult thing to spread this propaganda of hate to such an extent that the people back home will believe they are being attacked, not that we are looking for war but that someone wants to attack us.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FISH. Yes; I yield for a brief question.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. May I ask the gentleman if he has not criticized the President for failing to put into effect an embargo against Japan?

Mr. FISH. I have certainly criticized the President for one thing. I have criticized the President for not enforcing the law of the land. This Congress, and probably with your vote, voted practically unanimously to put through a neutrality bill. That bill says that whenever a state of war exists or whenever the President finds a state of war to exist, he must put that bill into effect. That would have meant that no arms, ammunition, or implements of war could be sold to Japan. The President has defied the Congress and has refused to recognize that a state of war exists in China, which every thinking man and woman knows exists today, with an army invading China and over 1,000,000 people killed; yet he has refused to put the law into effect. It is not the fault of Congress that arms, ammunition, and implements of war are going to Japan. It is the fault of the President alone because he has refused to enforce the law of our country. It makes no difference whether that law is good, bad, or indifferent. If it is a bad law, it ought to be repealed. However, it is the law and he has refused to enforce it. It is not my fault or your fault that Japan has been getting these implements of war. The President may have good reason for doing this, but, nevertheless, he has refused to carry out the law enacted by the Congress. If he wants the law amended, let it be amended in an orderly way.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for just one further question?

Mr. FISH. I cannot yield any more. I have only 2 or 3 minutes to talk on neutrality and I would like to ask the Members of the House to consider this issue. This is a purely nonpartisan question and is a new one that has been proposed in the Senate. I am very much in favor of it and want to take this occasion to discuss it. For years we have had a 3-mile limit. That 3-mile limit, I suppose, went into effect a hundred years ago, probably because ships could only fire about 3 miles. I do not even know the reason, but I just assume that to be the case. However, it is almost obsolete now with guns that fire 20 miles, with airplanes that go out 100 or 200 miles and return. I think it would be to the advantage of the defense of our country, and a very wise and proper step to take, to amend the law, if it is necessary to do it by law, or to amend the practice and to change the 3-mile limit to a 12-mile limit or beyond, and even let the State Department fix it at 100 miles if it is in the interest of our country. Certainly the 3-mile limit is obsolete.

Now, when it comes to the neutrality law, even some Members of the Congress are not up to date on it. The cash-and-carry feature expired as of May 1. This leaves in the bill the prohibition against shipment and sale of arms, ammunition, and implements of war, the loans to foreign belligerent nations, and the prohibition against American nationals sailing on belligerent ships.

I am in favor of all those prohibitions. I am opposed to selling arms, ammunition, and implements of war to any belligerent nation. Either we are a Christian nation or we are not a Christian nation; and why should we, for blood money and war profits and for the almighty dollar, sell arms, ammunition, and implements of war to foreign nations to kill people with whom we are at peace. So I hope that will remain in the law.

Now, in place of the so-called cash-and-carry plan that expired on May 1—and I never was in favor of it because it was an improper and intolerant and oppressive limitation on American ships carrying trade on the high seas—I would say instead that our ships which were prohibited from carrying anything under the old law, should carry anything they want, except arms, ammunition, and implements of war—that is, cotton, copper, foodstuffs, and so forth—but if they carry them to belligerent nations or carry them into a war zone, which we could establish at one or two or three hundred miles from a belligerent nation, they should do so at their own risk.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. FISH. The reason I say this—and I feel it is logical with what I started out to say—my argument in the beginning was to keep out of war. You would think if you listened to speeches made by Mr. Landon and the statements of the President of the United States that it is inevitable that we must go into war.

Let me remind you that in the last World War Norway, Sweden, Holland, Switzerland, and other nations kept out of that war. They were in the war zone. They intend to keep out of the next war. We were forced into that war because of attacks on our shipping by submarines without warning, and under international law we had the right to carry that trade, and President Wilson was right when, after repeated warnings to the German Imperial Government, they ignored them, to take us into the war; and the American people wanted to go into that war because we were attacked. I am very glad to defend President Wilson—not with the hindsight I have, because with the hindsight I have now I would not vote for that war, but I am glad to defend him on the basis of what happened then. We ought to say in the future that if American ships want to trade with belligerent nations, "Trade all you want, but you trade at your own risk." [Applause.]

Norway lost 1,000 ships in the last war. Holland and Sweden lost a couple of hundred ships. Great Britain, mistress of the seas, lost 100 ships in the Spanish war, and they traded at their own risk. Let us follow that example and say to our own shipping, "Carry all the trade you want, but do so at your own risk. We do not propose to be dragged into any more of these foreign wars." [Applause.]

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEFAN].

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, the attention of a large proportion of the people of the United States at this time seems to be centered on events outside of our territorial limits. The happenings in Europe, Asia, Africa, are of great concern and real importance to our people.

In protest against autocratic injustices the sympathy of our people has sprung quickly for the stricken, the downtrodden, the oppressed. In our expression of sympathy we have congratulated ourselves that nothing so indefensible, nothing so terrible, nothing so horrible could happen here.

It might not be amiss, however, to take stock of our own affairs. It might be well to rationalize foreign events to events within these United States. Are the things we complain of and charge to the nations abroad such things as we ourselves do not engage in? Have we in the past, and do we now preserve the liberties of our own people to such an extent and with such fidelity that we from our pinnacle are entitled to castigate autocracies abroad? Would it not be well for us at least to examine, even though we do not cast out the beam from our own eye, before we attempt to remove the mote from our brother's eye?

We may not abate our repugnance to the usurpation of authority to remember that we have usurped authority—we, the people of these United States. We may still condemn the confiscation of private property, but we should at the same time remember our own record of confiscation. We still may condemn the removal from their home land of populations by nations abroad, yet we should at the same time recall our own actions in regard to people within our own borders. We should remember some of the things we have done. I seek no sympathy, nor do I raise my voice concerning those things which happened in the long, long ago. I am not condemning the present generation for the faults of an earlier generation, but I do call to the attention of this House and to all American citizens who now are engaged in protesting violence, murder, rape, confiscation, suppression, that they consider some of the things now concerning our own people. Not yesterday, not last year, not a hundred years ago, but now confronting one element of our population which by any measure of justice puts us in the same class with those in other lands of which we now currently complain. Let me give this one definite contemporaneous illustration:

The Attorney General of the United States now proposes to this Congress that the constitutional rights of one element of our people be repealed by a statute limiting the jurisdiction of our courts.

This is the same Attorney General, the Honorable Frank Murphy, who on Monday night, March 27, 1939, announced his determination to defend the civil liberties of the people of the United States and announced his devoted adherence to the Bill of Rights and the fourteenth amendment.

If that statement is a surprise to this House let me say the fact was no less a surprise to me. I have a high regard for the present Attorney General. I have felt that he was sincere in his announced devotion to the rights of the people. Were it not for documents over his own signature, I could have commended every word he said on that Monday night. I could have believed his entire sincerity in his advocacy of the Bill of Rights.

Early in the current session, I introduced a bill which had for its purpose the correction of a plain error made in an earlier act of Congress. The error complained of denied to a group of citizens of the United States the constitutional right to receive just compensation for property which was taken from them without their consent by the United States. The Attorney General has made a report on this bill, insisting that the amendment be not made. He has gone further and has recommended that the rights of this group of citizens should be abridged, even though such abridgement is a direct violation of the fifth amendment and the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution. The Attorney General, and this seems strange to me—almost unbelievable—the same identical person who signed the recommendation which is now before this Congress, is the identical person who took the air on the night of Monday, March 27, in a radio broadcast and proclaimed his undying devotion to the Bill of Rights and the civil liberties of the people of the United States.

I know full well that when I say my bill (H. R. 2729) to amend the present Winnebago Jurisdictional Act is the matter under discussion that a certain element in this House will regard my remarks and the entire affair as "just another Indian claim." I do not expect the distinguished gentlemen will abandon their contentions overnight, nor do I anticipate that they will see the error of their ways, not even to the extent of removing the beams from their several eyes. It may be, and I think it will be, necessary for me to recount something of the history of the Winnebago people in order that the Attorney General and the several watchdogs of the Treasury may have before them the background and the basis of the complaints made by the Winnebago people against the United States. I shall make the historical portion of my statement as short and concise as possible. What I call particularly to attention is the position taken by the Attorney General specifically on my bill H. R. 2729, in contrast to his position in his radio address of Monday, March 27, and his reputed devotion to the cause of liberalism. If a man can be a liberal in the public prints and at the same time seek by statute to repeal the constitutional and civil rights of a group of our own people, then this is not "just another Indian claim," but is a current and vital matter, worthy of the attention of the Congress, and which should have as its result a determination of just where the Department of Justice does stand in relation to the Constitution.

The Winnebago people have never in our history engaged in armed conflict with the United States. They have been throughout our history quiet, peaceable, decent, and, unfortunately for them, complacent. We found them shortly after the formation of our Government in the Northwest territory, along the western shores of Lake Michigan, around the shores of Winnebago Lake. Without going into the details of successive removals, let me say that gradually the settlements of our own citizens extended farther and farther into the desirable lands occupied by the Winnebagos.

The United States negotiated and entered into a treaty in 1825 with the Winnebagos, commonly called the Treaty of Prairie du Chien, which designated the Winnebago tract from Lake Winnebago westward to within 40 miles of the Mississippi, up to the mouth of the Wisconsin, up the Mississippi and Black Rivers, across to the Yellow River, and down that and the Wisconsin to the Portage, across to the Fox River and up that to Lake Winnebago, including all of the lake. Somewhere near 10,000,000 acres was included in this original Winnebago homeland then recognized by the United States. By the treaties of 1832 and 1837 the Winnebagos ceded part of their lands in return for an established and guaranteed trust fund, but still the encroachment of settlers demanded more and more of the Winnebago lands and still the pressure was exerted to remove them from their homeland. In 1839—and this appears in detail in the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for that year—a portion of the Winnebagos were moved west of the Mississippi River, and in 1847 these Indians and all of the Winnebagos which could be assembled together were removed to Long Prairie Reservation in Minnesota.

Removal followed removal. In 1855, upon further guaranties by the United States covering payment under former treaties, the Winnebago lands in Wisconsin were ceded to the United States and the entire tribe, with few exceptions, were removed to the Territory of Minnesota and established on a reservation consisting of nine congressional townships at Blue Earth, Minn. It has been charged and not successfully denied that the treaty of 1855 was procured by bribery, corruption, and excessive use of intoxicants. But even with all that the Winnebagos might have maintained themselves on their desirable location at Blue Earth, Minn., had it not been for subsequent events which were not of their making and in which they had no part.

In the Territory of Minnesota were four bands of Sioux Indians—Mdewakanton, Wahpekute, known as the Santee or Lower Sioux, and the Sisseton and Wahpeton, known as the Upper Sioux, which bands were established on a reservation along the Yellow Medicine River by a treaty with them in the year 1837.

It is not my intention here to go into or recount the difficulties between the United States and the four Sioux Tribes on the Yellow Medicine River. It is, however, necessary to state that serious differences arose between them and the United States, largely arising out of the failure of the United States to make the annuity payments guaranteed by the treaty with the Indians. The four Sioux bands were confined to the reservation, cut off from their normal supplies of game, and facing present-day starvation throughout the early portion of the year 1862. There were troublemakers, who were members of one of these four bands, who took advantage of the distressed conditions of the Sioux and perpetrated the most horrible Indian uprising in our entire history. With all of these difficulties, and with the causes thereof, the Winnebago people had no part. There were at that time people going about their quiet endeavor to carry on their farming operations at Blue Earth, Minn., by that time well established with houses and barns, orchards and fields, and all the implements for the making of a civilization.

The horrors of the Minnesota uprising of 1862 reached the Winnebago people only by rumor, except in one instance. Two representatives of the Sioux bands on the warpath came to the Winnebago Reservation to solicit the aid and cooperation of the Winnebagos. The Winnebagos, however, were so strongly disposed to peace with the United States that they rejected, in no uncertain terms, the proposition made by the emissaries of the belligerent Sioux. In the disturbance occasioned by this council the emissaries were, in the language of the current day, liquidated. The Winnebagos remained, without exception, on their reservation. They were far removed from the scene of the conflict, and their only hope and expectation was to maintain peace and order.

Nevertheless, the white people of Minnesota were so outraged by the Sioux uprising, regardless of its cause, that they, the people of Minnesota, insisted upon the removal of all Indians from within their boundaries. As to the four bands of the Sioux this was accomplished by the military forces of the United States. The Mdewakanton and Whapekute were shifted into Dakota Territory and held as prisoners of war at Fort Thompson on the Missouri River. The Sisseton and Wahpeton were moved into the Territory of Dakota on the westward side of Big Stone Lake, and thus the prime troublemakers were eliminated from Minnesota.

The innocent bystanders to the horrible occurrences of 1862 were the Winnebagos; nevertheless, in the early summer of 1863, without a word of warning to the Winnebagos the United States of America ordered their deportation. A regiment of the United States Army from Fort Snelling, Minn., descended upon the unsuspecting Winnebagos, called them together at a central point, surrounded them, disarmed them, and took them instanter from their homes under military arrest. Meals were left in preparation in the kitchen, teams hitched to plows were left in the fields, men and women were given no opportunity to collect their simple personal belongings; the entire community was forced, under the effective persuasion of the guns of the cavalry of the United States, to leave their homes as prisoners.

These Winnebagos, like all Indians, were accustomed to hardship, yet it was a real hardship even to them to march one-hundred-and-some-odd miles to Fort Snelling, Minn., not as refugees, for whom we now weep, but as prisoners of war. Conditions which met them at Fort Snelling were no better. Two small river boats were available for transportation. The entire population of the Blue Earth Reservation was packed like cattle on these boats. The prisoners had not even room to lie down; no food was provided, scarcely any water.

The tortures of this "benevolent removal" might be compared to those of the Black Hole of Calcutta. Many died of heat, thirst, and exhaustion. Conditions were so horrible that even the Army officers in command of the two small river steamers decided they could not transport all of the Winnebagos as had been planned. The original plan was to take them down the Mississippi to the mouth of the Missouri and then up the Missouri into Dakota Territory. A portion of the Winnebagos who could walk were put ashore and these were marched westerly overland to their prison at Fort Thompson, Dakota Territory. The balance continued as planned down the Mississippi, up the Missouri, to the same point, Fort Thompson, where such reunion as these conditions might indicate was held. There at Fort Thompson the Winnebagos were held as actual prisoners until 1866.

I have no desire to lacerate the feelings of the sympathetic Members of the House of Representatives. I have no doubt the torture inflicted upon the Winnebagos will be regarded by many as an incident to the inevitable development of the United States by the superior race, yet there were some events after what must have been a joyful reunion among the Winnebagos at Fort Thompson in 1863, which events are at least worthy of passing notice by those of us who now virtuously complain of oppression inflicted upon subordinate peoples by dictators. Food was scarce, there was no shelter; the Winnebagos are adept at building wigwams of bark. They were under arrest and they did the best they could. Only American Indians could survive the treatment accorded these prisoners. A common cooking vat was provided wherein the carcasses of beeves were stewed, entrails and all, save only the hides. On top of the day-to-day residue there was shoveled into the common cooking vat a little wormy flour to stiffen the concoction, and this—and I have it by affidavit from my own people—was the principal and the only source of sustenance.

These Winnebagos were then, and had been at all times, peaceable Indians. There was not an arm or weapon of any kind among them. They were quite powerless, but yet among them there were quite a number of young women not unattractive to the military detachment then in command of the prison at Fort Thompson. Not one of these young women escaped violation by the white soldiers of the United States, and in that I include officers. There is affidavit evidence of this. The horrors of this living death were more than some of the Winnebagos could endure. Secretly, at night and at odd moments, when not observed, some of them constructed rafts of cottonwood logs, and those who preferred definitely the unknown rather than the tortures of the known, embarked on these frail craft down the Missouri, and by almost unbelievable fortitude, drifting by night and hiding by day, they made their way down the Missouri to its junction with the Mississippi. There they abandoned their rafts, and in some way made their way up the Mississippi to the Wisconsin and up that river to their old home in the vicinity of the beautiful dells of Wisconsin, and to their old village center near Black River Falls, where their descendants still survive.

My measure is offered not only in behalf of the Winnebagos of Nebraska but also those of Wisconsin. I am pleased to have the hearty cooperation of my colleague, MERLIN HULL, of the Ninth Wisconsin District, in making this demand that the great wrongs inflicted upon the Winnebagos by our Government shall be remedied. In Mr. HULL's home county of Jackson there are many children and other descendants of that courageous band who fled from the Government's cruel and destructive treatment in South Dakota and escaped upon frail cottonwood rafts down the Missouri River. It was a perilous voyage of 1,200 miles or more, and weeks of hardships were passed before they reached the Mississippi. Other weeks were spent in their long journey on foot from St. Louis to Black River Falls, a distance of 600 miles or more. Beset by hunger and sickness, they were urged forward by a longing for their homeland in Wisconsin from which our beneficent Government had ruthlessly evicted them.

This demand for belated justice to a tribe of peaceful Indians who suffered horrors worse than those of war comes not alone from the Indians, but also from thousands of white people who have come to know the story of the Winnebagos. It is a story which needs only the pen of a Longfellow to immortalize the heroism of those who withstood the outrages of one of the worst instances of governmental injustice and oppression in history.

Those of the Winnebagos who were left behind at Fort Thompson were moved by the United States in 1866 into the State of Nebraska and placed on a reservation. By these circumstances there now are these two divisions of the Winnebago Indians. One element on its reservation in Nebraska and the other scattered in Wisconsin without a reservation but with, in these later days, some kindly attention from the Department of the Interior.

I regret it has been necessary to go so lengthily into the saga of the removal and incarceration of the Winnebago people. It is undeniably established by all the evidence that the Winnebagos were innocent parties to the Minnesota uprising. The principals in the uprising, that is the four bands of the Sioux Tribe, Sisseton, Wappeton, Mdewakanton, and Whapekute, long since have sought the forgiveness of the United States of America and they, severally, have been forgiven. The Congress may not know, but I am glad to tell it, that the annuities and trust funds of the Sisseton and Wappeton have been restored and they have been paid over a million dollars in settlement of their claims. The Mdewakanton and Whapekute were favored with an act of Congress restoring their annuities, which had been forfeited by reason of their alleged participation in the conflict of 1862. Their annuities were restored to them, and although they are still contending for improper charges against those annuities, they were, within our current memory, paid a substantial sum.

How different it is, then, with the Winnebagos. The trust funds which were guaranteed to them by the Treaty of 1855 have been deliberately dissipated by the United States. The United States has amortized its own debt to these Indians by appropriating the principal of the trust funds. The details of this are all a matter of record, and not even the Attorney General denies the fact that the trust funds are now exhausted.

In view of the fact that the active participants in the Minnesota uprising of 1862 have been, by a generous and forgiving government, restored to their annuities and trust funds, it seemed not unappropriate to my predecessor to ask that jurisdiction be granted to the Court of Claims to consider the claims of the Winnebagos. Such a bill was introduced and became the act of December 17, 1928. It must be remembered that the nine townships at Blue Earth, Minn., were confiscated in 1863 by the United States. The Winnebagos, in 1928, felt that they were entitled to just compensation for that land, as any other citizen might be compensated. Be it remembered that in 1924 these Winnebagos and all other Indians were established as full citizens of the United States by an act of Congress, and hence—at least so the Winnebagos supposed—were entitled to the protection of the Constitution. When this particular bill was on the floor of the House of Representatives, reported out by the House Committee on Indian Affairs, it contained a provision that these Winnebagos should have as just compensation "the value of their land at the time it was taken, together with interest thereon." A Member of the House—I withhold his name—moved to strike out the words "with interest thereon," and this motion unfortunately prevailed. The bill passed, was signed, and the Winnebago Tribe of Nebraska and Wisconsin brought suit thereunder. They, however, fully recognize the limitations imposed upon the Court of Claims in the language above quoted, and particularly by the limitation made by striking out the words "with interest thereon."

Let there be no misunderstanding in regard to what constitutes "just compensation" under the Constitution of the United States. It is recognized and established by all the decisions, without exception, that "just compensation" is the value of the thing taken at the time of taking, together with compensation for the use of that thing from the time of taking to the time of settlement. You may call this interest, which it is not; you may call it by any other name, but it is an essential part of "just compensation." Let me give you one example. In 1862 an acre of land turned into money would buy a day's labor by a skilled mechanic. If the Winnebago people today were paid for each acre of their Blue Earth land 1 day's wages of a skilled mechanic, they would accept it. Times have changed, values have changed, and $15 today is less than $2.50 in 1862.

I introduced in this session a bill to correct the deficiency and the error in the act of December 17, 1928. That bill was referred to the Department of Justice for report and that report has been received. The report is dated March 6, 1939, and is signed by Frank Murphy, the Attorney General of the United States. Let it be thoroughly understood that my pending bill was designed to eliminate the restrictions on the Court of Claims and to leave the question to the Court of Claims of what is or should be "just compensation" to the Winnebago people for the taking of their Blue Earth Reservation in Minnesota. The Winnebago people consented and agreed to the bill I introduced. They were not entirely content with it, because it did not permit investigation of their relations with the United States prior to 1855, but nevertheless my bill limited the actions which might be brought to the date of the treaty of 1855. Not being content with this, and being fearful of the outcome in the Court of Claims, the Attorney General, on page 2 of his report, asks that the bill be further amended to make it clear and specific that the court shall not inquire into the derelictions, and I may well say the felonious actions of the United States prior to and in the making of the treaty of 1855. So, the Attorney General, on page 2 of his report, asks that the word "subsequent" be inserted at various places to the end that no inquiry possibly can be made by the Court of Claims into the conduct of the United States or the disposition or wastage or larceny of the tribal trust funds. That, however, is of passing importance, for at that point in Mr. Attorney General Murphy's report comes the most remarkable statement made by any governmental official who even suspected he was operating under the Constitution of the United States relative to the question of just compensation.

Here follows, in exact words, a quotation from the letter which the Attorney General himself signed:

> The provision in the original jurisdictional act which limited the damages recoverable for money or other property appropriated by the United States to the value thereof at the time of appropriation should not be omitted. Its deletion would have the effect of greatly increasing the amount of any judgment which may be awarded, since, under recent decisions of the Supreme Court, the amount recoverable for any lands taken from an Indian tribe is the value of those lands on the date of taking, plus interest thereon from that date to the date of payment (United States v. Creek Nation, 295 U. S. 103; Shoshone Tribe v. United States, 299 U. S. 476). In the Shoshone case the Indians recovered interest to the extent of approximately 300 percent. Furthermore, the value of Indian lands as of the date of taking is now held to include the value of timber and mineral resources (United States v. Shoshone Tribe, 304 U. S. 111; United States v. Klamath Indians, 304 U. S. 119). Under the most conservative estimates, the principle announced in these cases may extend the Government's liability in claims now pending to more than $3,000,000,000.
> Even if section 4 of the 1928 act is not omitted, it is now doubtful whether the damages to be awarded to the Indians would be confined to the value of the property at the time of taking. (See United States v. Klamath Indians, 304 U. S. 119, 125.) It is, therefore, suggested that the bill be amended to include the following as a separate section:
> "In any claim for the appropriation, expropriation, taking, acquisition, or deprivation of property, real or personal, or any interest therein other than money or securities otherwise bearing interest, the jurisdiction conferred upon the Court of Claims by this act or by the act of December 17, 1928 (45 Stat. 1207), as amended by this act, to hear and determine any such claim by said Winnebago Tribe of Indians is limited to the determination of the value of the said property, real or personal, or any interest herein other than money or securities otherwise bearing interest, at the time of the appropriation, expropriation, taking, acquisition, or deprivation, and no claim shall be asserted or judgment rendered by the Court of Claims which includes any increment, interest, or an equivalent thereof from the date of the taking to the date of judgment as an element of just compensation or otherwise; and this provision is not severable from any provisions in this act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims."

After the quotation has been read and its meaning made plain by rereading, I ask you to return with me to the events of March 27, 1939. On a Nation-wide broadcast sponsored by the Washington Evening Star over the network of the National Broadcasting Co., the distinguished Attorney General, the Honorable Frank Murphy, who lately had signed the foregoing declaration advocating the repeal of the fifth amendment to the Constitution and the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution, so far as it relates to the Winnebago people, had much to say in defense of civil liberty. Some portions of his speech I quote:

> Democracy today is in a fight for its life. * * * The phase of democracy that I have in mind particularly tonight is civil liberty. * * * Not only must we make civil liberty a living reality, but the democratic ideal must be applied in every part of our life—social, political, and economic.

Mr. Murphy went on to say that without civil liberty "democracy cannot possibly exist." He went on to relate that under his administration there had been created in his Department of Justice a separate unit dedicated to the preservation of civil liberty. He said:

> Students of law know, of course, that the Bill of Rights in the Federal Constitution is a prohibition on the Federal Government. In other words it forbids the Federal Government to deny to the people those liberties of speech and assembly, of religion and the press that are so vital to our freedom. Each State having its own constitutional bill of rights, it was assumed by the authors of the Federal Constitution that the State governments would protect their own citizens from infringement of these liberties not caused by the Federal Government.
> Since the Federal Constitution was adopted, however, another amendment, the fourteenth, has been added, which provides that no State shall make any law abridging the privileges and immunities of United States citizens, or deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process, or deny to him the equal protection of the laws. Under this amendment it has been held that a citizen may invoke the aid of the Federal courts when he is denied full protection by the courts of his State.

There are the quotations, one signed by the Attorney General, the other delivered in a Nation-wide broadcast by the Attorney General. Which Dromio now do we choose? Are we to follow the Attorney General who would seek to repeal by statute the fifth amendment, the Bill of Rights, and the fourteenth amendment, or are we to follow the Dromio who professes his purpose to defend the civil rights of the people of the United States? To my mind, this matter now moves out of the category of "just another Indian claim" and moves up into a major question of what constitutes decent conduct on the part of the United States.

Frank Murphy is the newly appointed member of the President's Cabinet. One of his early acts was his signature on the letter from which I have quoted, dated March 6, 1939. It may be said and it probably will be said, that Mr. Murphy, being rather new on the job of being the Attorney General of the United States, signed this objectionable and indefensible document unwittingly. It may have been one of those numerous matters passed up to him for signature, decorated with the necessary number of initials, which is signed pro forma. There is foundation for this, for it is well known the Department of Justice for more than a year past has been deeply concerned over the possibility that the Indian tribes of the United States might receive "just compensation" for the larceny of their property by the United States. As long ago as April 1938, long before Mr. Murphy came into power, the Department of Justice definitely proposed legislation which would be exactly along the line of the paragraph quoted above, limiting just compensation to the value of the thing at the time taken and eliminating any increment for use as a part of "just compensation."

So the Department of Justice, speaking through the Attorney General, appears now to be asking an opportunity to win its cases in the Court of Claims by legislation. Having suffered a defeat in the Shoshone and the Klamath cases and now suffering from what is commonly known as the "jitters", the Department of Justice, contemplating the Winnebago and other Indian cases, fears to try these cases in the courts. The Department fears the outcome. It may result in a judgment or judgments requiring the United States to pay what it owes, not in exaggerated amounts, but pay what it owes and what it would be required to pay any white citizen of the United States. The Congress—the expression of the sovereignty of the people of the United States—sent these cases to the Court of Claims for trial on the merits, in law and in equity, and for an adjudication. That same Department of Justice now proposes to strike down the fifth amendment and the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution so far as they relate to Indian tribes.

The questions I now ask are:

First. Is the Congress content to adopt Mr. Murphy's statutory amendment to the Constitution?

Second. Do the people of the United States believe there should be a division and a discrimination among them so that one element may have one kind of "just compensation" and the other element may have another and a better kind of "just compensation"?

Third. Is the announced liberal, Frank Murphy, who broadcast estimable sentiments on that former night the same Frank Murphy who recommends a statutory amendment to the Constitution?

I make this statement in order to clear the record and to put the entire matter, so far as is within my power, before this House and before the people of the United States. I firmly believe we have done not only this wrong now complained of, but many others. I believe that common decency requires us to right the wrongs we have done. I believe in the Constitution, not in part of it. I believe in all of it. I believe in the Bill of Rights; not only in the right of free speech and free assembly, but I believe in the right of the individual to his property. I believe in the fourteenth amendment and its prohibition on the States, and I submit to you that the wrongs we have perpetrated on the Indian tribes should be corrected.

Let us set our house in order. Let us settle and dispose of the Indian tribal claims. Let us by all means preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution, so it may mean the same thing to all of our people. [Applause.]

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I am supporting this bill, just as I have supported every bill in every session of six Congresses, for preparedness and the national defense, and every dollar in every bill.

In the matter of appropriations for the national defense, I long ago adopted the rule of Mr. Flannery with regard to railroad rates on pigs in the famous little story by Ellis Parker Butler, Pigs is Pigs. These happened to be guinea pigs, and it seems that Mr. Flannery applied a lower rate to them than he did on other breeds of pigs, which resulted in a very long and vexatious and, to the reader but not Mr. Flannery, a very amusing experience. But when Mr. Flannery got through with it he decided that from then on "pigs is pigs," and whenever a given commodity carried two different rates, the higher of the rates applied. So whenever a bill carries two different amounts in the way of an appropriation for the national defense, I am always for the larger amount.

It is some support to a man to have had the same views on anything in this world for 30 years. I like to go back sometimes and dig through the old CONGRESSIONAL RECORDS of 26, 28, and 30 years ago, when I was here in the long, long ago, and find that when appropriation bills for the national defense are now being considered I could bring those RECORDS on the floor and read them for the expression of my views today. So I am not jittery. I am not scared. I have always been for America only and ready, America ready to defend herself against any eventuality.

I want to refer for a moment to the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH]. I do not see him in the Chamber. I think there is one thing about the very likable gentleman from New York, an entertaining Member of this body that we can all agree upon, and that is that he has a chronic, incurable case of "Rooseveltfobia." Anyone who heard his speech a while ago heard the same speech last week, last month, and last year, and every year against the present occupant of the White House.

He has always boasted that the President lives in his district, but I have never heard the President boast that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] lives in his district. Only a few weeks ago he came down in this Well and stated in substance, although I cannot quote his exact language, not having looked it up, that if he had to choose for a leader between President Roosevelt and Father Divine, who is also a resident of his congressional district, he would take Father Divine.

But when he criticizes the President, as he did here a while ago, that the President is dragging this country into war and scaring the people into the jitters, and then adds to the President's support Gov. Alfred Landon, the late Republican candidate for President, and then adds to the President's support the great Washington Post, and criticizes them, and he might go out and add a lot of other Republican leaders and nearly all the great newspapers in the country, then by that time he would remind me of the story of the old Irish woman whose boy Jimmie had been caught in the draft. She went out to the camp to see how he was coming along. They had the boys out on the parade ground putting them through I. D. R., infantry drill regulations. Jimmie was not stepping along with the rest of them. She looked at them a little while and said, "Oh, look at that. Everybody is out of step but Jimmie." Well, I think that is pretty near the case of the gentleman from New York. Everybody is out of step but the gentleman from New York.

I asked him a question a while ago and then I was not permitted to follow it with another one. He is always talking about the President trying to drag this country into war. I asked the gentleman if he had not criticized the President for failing to put an embargo against Japan. The gentleman admitted that he had. Then I wanted to follow that up, but the gentleman would not yield. This is what I wanted to follow it with: Last fall, I think along in October, I saw certain statements in the newspapers, and I went to the Library and checked up on them.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM], in the Washington Post of October 14, 1937—and it was published in other papers—proposed to impeach President Roosevelt for his failure to put into effect an embargo against Japan; and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] backed him up and endorsed the proposition in the New York Times of October 17, 1937, that President Roosevelt ought to be impeached for not putting into effect an embargo against Japan.

How would Japan have regarded that embargo? China is out; China has no navy; China has no ships; China could not come to this country and get anything if we were giving it away; but Japan has a great navy, she has one of the great merchant-marine fleets of the world; and you have seen it in the papers every day for a year or two—and it is a fact—that she is very largely dependent on this country for the supplies and materials which she is using in this war against China. I cannot give you the exact figures, but it is a fact that Japan is getting such percentages of essential war materials—cotton, iron, and other things—from this country, that if she were cut off she might collapse economically in her war against China.

Japan is a nation that believes she has been mortally insulted and discriminated against and robbed of her place in the sun by the United States; a nation that considers the United States above all nations as standing in the way of her place in the sun; a nation that just as sure as the sun rises—perhaps 10 years from now, perhaps 25 years from now, perhaps 50 years from now, will try to rectify the situation according to her views.

Yet here is a man who always takes the floor and characterizes the President of the United States as a warmonger, as trying to drag this country into war, this gentleman has made the most provocative proposition against any of these warring nations that I have ever heard on the part of any public man. I say that would have been considered by Japan as an act of aggression against her, as an act of hostility against her, as an act intended to destroy her; because she would be virtually destroyed if she fell down in her present enterprise in China, if she bogs down, and she has my very best wishes that she may bog down. No other signatory to the Nine Power Pact proposed to embargo Japan and the United States was asked by these gentlemen to stick out its neck alone.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want 5 minutes more time. I got up to say a few words about something else, and I will now proceed with that.

Mr. Chairman, if a man could judge from all he reads and hears, he would conclude that the President or Congress, or both, were lying awake nights to think up some scheme to involve the United States in war.

A remark carrying this implication dropped recently by a Member on the floor of the House started a very different train of thought in my mind, and it was this: The President and Congress will never favor or support a declaration of war, or an act of war, by this Government, unless and until they are driven into such action by the country, and the country will never drive the President and Congress into such action unless and until it is exasperated and goaded beyond endurance by a foreign aggressor power, destroying American lives and property and wantonly and lawlessly violating and trampling upon American rights.

One might judge from all the loose talk one hears in Congress or on the air or reads in the press that this country has a record of unprovoked and unjust wars against other nations. The history of our wars has been that the country was marching before the Government gave the order. It has never been otherwise.

I have heard it stated here on the floor and elsewhere, that when we entered the World War we participated in an unjust war in which we had no business. I have never heard that statement made without resenting it to the bottom of my heart, as a libel upon the honor and unparalleled record of this great Nation and the 4,000,000 men who offered their lives in that war. It was a war to make the world safe for the United States, and thrust upon it by the destruction of our neutral shipping and the murder of American citizens on the high seas on neutral American vessels. Had America supinely submitted to this international outlawry she would have forfeited the respect of her own people and the people of the world.

And what are we spending all this money for now, the greatest peacetime expenditures for preparedness in our history, expenditures almost equalling those of war? What are we spending all this money for, and with the approval of the Nation? We are spending it because any man who is not blind can see a new threat arising to the peace of the world, our world, and the security of this continent, and we are preparing for any eventuality. There is no sure way to keep out of war, but the surest way to keep out is to be able to go in. That is what we are doing.

Mr. Chairman, where is this so prevalent war sentiment which is supposed to be driving the United States into war? I have never heard any Member in either House of Congress say, or read of him as saying, that he was in favor of the United States going to war. I have never heard or read any such statement upon the part of anyone connected with the administration. I have never heard or read any such statement on the part of any citizen of the United States. I have never seen any such line in a newspaper of the United States or heard it on the radio.

If a poll could be taken of the people of the United States, I am confident the answer would be unanimously "No." If there were any aye votes, they would not come from Americans. No such poll would be taken, because it would be just pure foolishness to take it. No; there is no sentiment in the United States, in or out of Congress, for this country to become involved in war.

It is just a lot of partisan politics to make it appear that there is a war sentiment on the part of the administration. For the first time in my long life I have seen a political party in this country play politics with our national defense and with our international relations. The highest-minded men and women in this country, regardless of party, agree that politics should cease at the water line. But in the lower brackets in politics, both in and out of Congress, there is obviously a feeling that some political advantage may be gained by poisoning the minds of the people of the country with the idea that the administration at Washington is seeking to involve this country in war.

Their difficulty is that they have 18 months to go before they can cash these mischievous inventions in votes. One of two things will happen. Either the United States will not be at war in 18 months or it will be at war at the overwhelming demand of the American people because of insufferable outrages against their rights, their security, and their national honor, such as inflamed them to action in 1917.

I feel confident that we will be at peace in 18 months. I feel confident that the dictator powers do not so underrate the spirit and ability of America as to provoke it into war. I feel that their memories are not so short as to have forgotten 1918, when the greatest of republics dealt the mightiest of military autocracies its death blow on the far fields of Europe. They will not so soon again make the fatal mistake of thinking that this country will not fight and cannot fight. [Applause.]

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. PATRICK. I have been greatly interested in the speech made by the gentleman from Colorado. I have heard every speech the President has made from his "I hate war" address down to the present date; and I have not been able to find any statement in anything our Chief Executive has said that could be considered as provocative of war. I would like to get the gentleman's idea, and I am sure the other Members would also, as to what it is that has provoked this war phobia, this war fear in the Nation when nobody wants to fight. I would like to know who wants to fight, and what he wants to fight about, and I would like to know what issues are involved. With this strange setting of apparently peaceful relations between this country and other countries, what is it that has inspired this war fear, this war phobia at this time?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I think I have indicated that it is nothing more nor less than political propaganda, a great deal of it originating right here on Capitol Hill, the irreconcilable isolationists, bitter-enders, and box-office pacifists, in the hope it will help them on their "forward to '40" campaign.

They think they can scare the country into voting the Republican ticket to keep the country out of war. They have rent the air day and night, in Congress and out, to scare the people into the belief that the President is trying to drag the country into war, and distorting his strongest peace pleas. At bottom it is a hate-Roosevelt campaign. If they have succeeded in making the people at home jittery, they have also succeeded in building up false hopes abroad. It is said that Hitler was misled by all this stuff to such an extent that Under Secretary Sumner Welles' blunt notification to the German Ambassador here in Washington that the United States reprobated the rape and absorption of Czechoslovakia, and the outburst of national approval which the Under Secretary's statement evoked in the United States, was very disillusioning to the Nazi dictator, a great shock to him.

They have been betting that "little" America, isolationist and fearful, is the road to the White House. I am betting that it is not. The President's peace efforts are bearing fruit in the world, and if the dictators do not take heed they are heading into another November 11.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS].

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, my remarks will be directed exclusively to that provision of this appropriation bill which makes an appropriation sufficient to keep in Annapolis 4 men for each Senator and Member of this House, 500 of whom will be graduated at the end of every 4 years with the rank of ensign. My contention is it is not only asinine but worse for us thus to throw away the people's money. Infinitely worse than this waste of taxpayers' money is the destruction of the morale of the manhood of the Navy which inevitably flows from this foolish practice.

We feed into the officer personnel of the Navy 500 men a year, and by our asinine legislation we inevitably force the Navy to kick out 337 of those men at the peak of their efficiency after 21 years' service, when they are 40 or 41 years of age, and after we have ordered and forced an investment of the taxpayers' dollars to the extent of $24,000 to $35,000 apiece in those men. No matter how good they are, no matter how splendid may be their attainments in their specialties or in the regular line, they must "walk the plank." When we take these boys, with patriotic fervor and enthusiasm, and invite them to invest their lives in Uncle Sam's Navy, when we appoint them to Annapolis, they do not go into Annapolis to "climb the ladder" but "walk the plank." It is wrong economically; it is wrong morally; and it is most outrageous for us to blast these choice young lives by such a system. Not only that but it is killing the manhood of the Navy. It does not do much good to put iron in ships unless you put iron in the men who man them. No accumulation of matériel, no battleships, no armaments are better than the men who man them. It is the proud tradition of the American Navy that even when our old wooden ships were sinking and when the opposing commander put up the flag demanding surrender, we said, "We have only begun to fight." We tie our sinking wooden hulls to the opposing ships, then go over and snatch victory out of the jaws of defeat. Why? Because we had the manhood.

Now, then, we are killing the manhood of our personnel now. How? By making them bootlick to rise. The Army of the United States has no such handicap in any of the ranks under colonel. During those years they can look any man in the eye and tell him where to head in; but in the Navy the junior officers must attract the attention of the hierarchy and ingratiate themselves if they are to gain promotion.

Mr. TERRY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I yield with pleasure to the distinguished gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. TERRY. Is it the contention of the gentleman that we have too many midshipmen entering the academy?

Mr. HOBBS. There is no question about that, certainly.

Mr. TERRY. Or is it a criticism of the method of selection of personnel later on, or promotion?

Mr. HOBBS. Both.

Mr. TERRY. The gentleman feels that increasing the number of midshipmen is entirely unnecessary, even in the face of expansion of the Navy now going on?

Mr. HOBBS. There is no proposal to increase. Five are already authorized, but appropriation is limited to four. Four is too many. If you could conceive the officer personnel of the Navy as a pyramid, the only sane thing for us to do is to narrow the base and temporarily broaden the top; then, having narrowed the base, as the amendment which I will propose to this bill Monday will do, inevitably that pyramid will assume its natural shape throughout the years without further adjustment; but until you do narrow the base and quit feeding into this machine, which chews them up and spits them out with the stigma of failure upon each of them, there is little need to talk about improving the system of selection. Feeding in too many is the basic evil.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I gladly yield to the eminent gentleman from Connecticut, a member of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Has the gentleman given any consideration to the possibility that we might graduate a number somewhat similar to the number graduated today, give them a short period of training so that they would be valuable in case of emergency, and drastically narrowing the base at that point, say, after 2 years of active service? This would give them some experience in naval work and still let them out with the advantage of the education which they receive and with naval value to us, at the same time soon enough so that they can go on to other civilian occupations without handicap because of being brought along until 1941 or 1942, as the gentleman points out, under the present system.

Mr. HOBBS. Not only have I given consideration to that suggestion, but in my opinion it is a capital one. Then you do not mislead the boys that you put into Annapolis into believing they are investing their lives in a naval career. You will deal fairly with them. That is what I am pleading for. Instead of kicking them out, keep them out, and whether you do it by the plan suggested by the gentleman from Connecticut or by my more radical plan makes no difference to me. Both present advantages. I can see the advantage of the plan that the distinguished gentleman points out, in that you would then build up an experienced and efficient Reserve Corps for the Navy.

Mr. DARDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I am happy to yield to the distinguished gentleman from the seaport of Virginia.

Mr. DARDEN. The gentleman has touched upon a question that I believe has given the Committee on Naval Affairs more trouble and more genuine concern than any other part of naval legislation. How, as a practical matter, with, roughly, 600 midshipmen leaving the Academy, and there now being 64 admirals, is it possible to create an orderly flow of promotion through the respective grades without in some way providing for elimination of a certain number of them?

Mr. HOBBS. It cannot be done; but I am saying that no matter how perfect your selection system in the Navy may be, until you narrow the base of this officer-personnel pyramid, or, in other words, until you reduce the intake, no matter how perfectly the selection system may be administered and no matter how perfectly it may be designed by the great Committee on Naval Affairs, this situation cannot be avoided. Inevitably the stigma and disgrace of failure come to excellent officers. The manhood of the Navy is at stake.

Mr. DARDEN. I believe that unquestionably the gentleman has a strong position and is dealing with something that has caused a great deal of trouble, but there must be a large number of junior officers to man the fleet in the naval shore stations. You cannot possibly bring them to command without disposing of a certain number.

Mr. HOBBS. That is true.

Mr. DARDEN. For instance, there are 260 captains and 64 admirals, and you must have a large number of ensigns, junior lieutenants, and lieutenants to fill the lower grades. How are you going to supply those to the Naval Establishment and at the same time get rid of those in the later grades without eliminating them by selection?

Mr. HOBBS. My conviction is that we should put into the service a sufficient number of officers to give the Navy plenty of choice, and that only those who measure up to the highest standard of manhood and efficiency should be retained; but I insist that any system which requires the expulsion of 337 out of every 500, no matter how good they may prove, is extravagant and immoral. My amendment will not stop the intake, but merely reduce the number from 514 a year to 414. We are still going to give an abundance of junior officer material to select from, but we are going to try our best to eliminate the necessity of bootlicking superior officers in order to attract attention and insure promotion. We simply insist that any system is indefensible which forces officers to climb by stepping on the necks of other officers who are just as good.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HOBBS. I care not how distinguished and admirable the members of the selection board may be, they are human beings, and human beings will be human. When they know a man and know he is good, there their inquiry stops. They do not go on, and they do not have time in the limited period the selection board sits to compare the man they know with numerous others who are just as good or better. Those who compose the selection boards will tell you so. The result is that they pick the men they know. Therefore, it behooves every mother's son of the lower officers of the Navy to become known to the members of the selection boards and they do it by ingratiating themselves in every conceivable bootlicking way with their superior officers. I do not blame them for it, because there is no other way in God's world for them to advance in this man's Navy. What we are trying to do is to save that situation by curtailing the intake.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. It gives me pleasure to yield to the distinguished gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Am I correct now in assuming that the Navy Department, the Naval Affairs Committee, or any other one in authority cannot come in here and show that they use a proper means of selection when they take men of that type for promotion instead of taking men who have enough manhood to stand up and not do the bootlicking? In other words, what type of man would we prefer to have as an officer, a fellow who has some backbone or one who does nothing but bootlick?

Mr. HOBBS. We would not only prefer to have a real man, but our Navy cannot do its best unless it be manned by men. And the men selected are good men, but they would be better if they could be independent. We ought not to waste the people's money in building up a naval armament unless we are going to do something to guarantee these fine boys, whom we select with so much care, and educate and train so scrupulously and at so much expense, that they will have a fair chance to build a lifetime career in an honorable service. I say, instill some iron in manhood and not put it all in ships. [Applause.]

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield so much time as he may desire to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. SANDAGER].

Mr. SANDAGER. Mr. Chairman, to almost everybody in the House today is just Thursday, a little warmer and clearer perhaps than yesterday. But to my colleague [Mr. RISK] and myself this day has much more significance, for it is the occasion of the one hundred and sixty-third anniversary of the Declaration of Independence from Great Britain by our State, the State of Rhode Island. On May 4, 1776, 2 months before the rest of the Colonies took this historic step, the sturdy settlers of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, the smallest, if you please, of all the Colonies, with a full knowledge of the possible consequences of their act, defied the law, the majesty, and the armed power of the Crown.

Although you may not be aware of it the flag that flies over the Capitol today is a flag provided by the Rhode Island Society of Washington. This flag, after being christened to the air on this Rhode Island anniversary, will be donated to Rhode Island State College to be flown over this fine institution of learning at Kingston, R. I.

I do not desire to unduly transgress upon the time and the deliberations of the House, but on the occasion of this anniversary permit me to say that the spirit of independence has always flourished in Rhode Island and still flourishes there today. We were the last of the original 13 States to adopt the Constitution, so fearful were the founders of Little Rhody that the Union might circumscribe their liberties or supersede our State authority. We never did ratify the eighteenth amendment and even sent our attorney general down before the United States Supreme Court to protest the validity of that well-intended but hopelessly idealistic piece of legislation. And history has proved that in this instance the sound judgment of Rhode Island was correct. Rhode Island, famous in tradition, in history, in industry, and progress may be the smallest State in the Union from standpoint of geography, but down through the years she has always bulked large in worth-while achievements. Our State flower is the violet, emblematic of modesty, but our most famous State bird is the Rhode Island Red; and who can blame him if he crowed lustily and proudly this morning? [Applause.]

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 17 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD].

THE MARKET—THIN OR OTHERWISE

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, markets determine the division and multiplication of labor. Without markets and a medium of exchange living standards must necessarily be low. Free markets and ample money and credit facilities are the means which cause men to take an interest in doing the things other men want done. These elements enable men to utilize the selfish purposes and lead to men's helping one another voluntarily. When government, through action or inaction, destroys the freedom of the market, ample money and credit facilities cease to function because of the sudden narrowing of the market resulting from Government orders. Free and competitive market prices guide the economic activities of mankind. Economically speaking, the greatest responsibility of government is to maintain free markets and ample money and credit facilities. Our form of government was not organized for the purpose of controlling markets, fixing prices, and conducting business enterprise. Therefore it is unfit for economic planning. As a matter of fact, the Congress as organized and operated under the committee system is utterly incapable of comprehending the problem involved in economic planning by the Government. Considering the Federal control of price and production of farm products, the N. R. A., reciprocal-trade agreements, loans and subsidies, purchase of gold and silver and the exchange stabilization fund activities along with the absence of purchasing power on the part of agricultural workers and the vast number of unemployed industrial workers, all give us sufficient proof of these statements.

CREDIT AND CURRENCY MANAGEMENT AND PRICE LEVEL

Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of contributing to the discussion dealing with monetary control and price levels, which has been prompted by recent statements made by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, I wish to submit the following:

Under the above caption, Federal Reserve Board Governor Chester Davis delivered an address before the Farm Bureau Federation at New Orleans, December 14, 1938, which I feel is open to serious question if not criticism. His presentation, I believe, carries misstatements of fact and theory. The result is a total lack of any constructively democratic solution for the paradox of farm "surpluses" when "disparity" develops and farm prices are low relative to other prices. These observations are now made in an effort to correct some of the misstatements which I believe appear in his address and other recent releases by the Board dealing with the relation of prices and prosperity to money supply; for as Dr. Lauchlin Currie, of the Board's own staff, has shown in his Harvard Monograph on The Supply and Control of Money in the United States, our reserve system in money and banking has a "perverse elasticity" and so cannot be made to work, as it was supposed to, to supply the monetary needs of business.

What Governor Davis' and these other statements have shown is simply that the existing money system for which the Board stands sponsor, namely, the fractional reserve system in banking, renders impossible adequate price control by any superimposed measures, whether monetary or autocratic in character. To deliberately omit consideration or even mention of the possibility of price control by purely monetary measures, through such an innovation in flotation of credit, with 100 percent reserves for checking accounts or demand deposits, as was proposed by Dr. Currie in his monograph, can serve only to becloud public thinking and calls, it seems to me, for explanations to avoid the suspicion of bad faith. Such a system—call it "greenbacking" if you will—is undeniably constitutional, even though never actually tried. The reverse is true of existing practice; its constitutionality is questionable; it has been tried repeatedely and always has ended in disastrous failures which are euphemistically termed "business cycles."

Governor Davis' figures as to money supply are incorrect. They include savings deposits, which are neither circulating or hoarded money. He also erroneously refers to gold and other banking reserves as "money." Reduced to demand deposits and currency, the per capita supply is shown in the accompanying chart of indexes, based on the average for the last quarter century of experience with grain production and prices as related to money supply and income. This chart, be it noted, was prepared by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics. As the House rules will not permit the chart to be printed in the RECORD, I shall be glad to supply a copy to those inquiring.

It is seen from these comparisons that the policy of domestic production control which Mr. Davis, as Triple A Administrator, sponsored, cannot possibly produce parity by its program of scarcity. The chart shows the rate of production has not been materially related to the price trends involved in boom and depression which create the disparity of which agricultural interests justly complain. Parity has not been attained by scarcity even to the point of importation; for be it noted, despite reduced per capita consumption, indicated by disappearance figures, during the present Democratic regime, the United States, breadbasket of the nations, has greatly increased importations of grain.

In sharp contrast with this, there has been, throughout the whole period since 1910, positive correlation between money supply and income per capita on the one hand and the price movements which have affected the parity position of grain prices on the other. Without exception, rising grain prices have been associated with rising money supply, and vice versa. The facts, as shown by the chart, are thus diametrically opposed to Governor Davis' assertions and also to the implications of the Board's March statement that money supply and the price relations which determine business fluctuations, have not usually changed together. For example, the chart shows that as respects the purchasing power of the farmer's bushel of grain, such relations have always changed together, except at the peak of speculation during the war.

More striking still is the movement of the national income—the President's great objective—with money supply. During previous periods of prosperity and sustained or rising money supply, income has moved to a relatively high position. But it has never recovered that position since it lost it in 1931.

To a considerable degree this seems attributable to an excess of foreign refugee and speculative accounts carried in this country as a result of our gold-purchase policy. Chiefly, however, the "great economic reform" of low interest rates under the Democratic administration's bank subsidy policy effected by bond "sales" and political and bureaucratic squandering, has resulted in a dangerous discrepancy between money supply and income, accompanied by lower grain prices than at any time in the whole 28-year period, except 1932, despite a rise in money supply to an unprecedented peak. The close relation previously existing between money supply and income has been disturbed by the policy of deficit financing through the Reserve System of banks, and the danger of inflation has thus been seriously enhanced. Under these conditions, the Reserve Board now rudely dispels the illusions of the sponsors of the system, both past and present, by candidly stating that it has no powers which can control inflation. Consider this statement of the Board:

> The ability of the banks greatly to expand the volume of their credit without resort to the Federal Reserve banks would make it possible for a speculative situation to get under way that would be beyond the power of the System to check or control. The Reserve System would, therefore, be unable to discharge the responsibility placed upon it by Congress, or to perform the service that the country rightly expects from it. (Annual Report for 1938, p. 22.)

In its recent—March 6—statement, the Board adds, significantly, that its "control of the amount of money is not complete and cannot be made complete." Since basic commodity prices, especially those of cereals, as shown in the chart, are in fact sensitive to money supply, we hardly need more authoritative testimony that a different system which can control money supply to the end of stability in staple crop prices is imperatively needed.

In view of this situation, it is difficult to see how the Board can justify the wholly negative character of its recent presentations which I fear carry misstatements and misinterpretations of facts. It may be true that, to quote the Board's statement dated April 8, "There are many phases of economic life that are not susceptible of control through monetary means alone," but that does not warrant the Board's position "that stability in production and employment is a more satisfactory objective of public policy than price stability alone." The notion that economic stability and monetary stability are different problems remains unsupported, for the Board's statement that "concerted action by many agencies within and outside the Government, which have an influence on economic activity, is essential for the achievement of recovery and an adequate national income," does not warrant the inference that these activities cannot be brought about by price controls through correct monetary action. Nor is it in evidence that they can be brought about without such action. Certainly, they are not being brought about by the political squandering of bank credit which the Board has in a way sponsored. Merely because such needed activities have not been and cannot be brought to bear by the illusory monetary and credit controls of the past is no basis for the sweeping negations implied by the Board's statements.

The Board is not, in my opinion, logically entitled to conclude that "since the money supply, however measured, is larger now than at any previous time, the difficulty must lie, not in the scarcity but in the inadequate use of the existing supply," if it seeks to imply that such a state of affairs cannot be remedied by a new approach to the problem of supplying money and "credit." I am of the firm opinion that the way in which the supply of money is created and floated can and does have a vital effect on the way it comes to be used in trade, and therefore (as the Board itself admits), on the level of prices.

Indeed, the very economists listed in Professor Spahr's National Committee on Monetary Policy do not deny the effect of money supply on prices. Let us quote from a recent exhaustive treatise on the Theory of Prices, by Dr. Arthur W. Marget, an outstanding student of price theory who is listed by Dr. Spahr as one of his subscribing economists: Page 352:

> Emphasis on the importance of changes in the stock of money for an understanding of the process of price determination is not the mere result of blind piety, but is an ineluctable necessity which is not in any fundamental sense escaped by the device of starting the analysis in the middle by assuming the magnitude of the stream of money payments (or of any segment of the stream of money payments) as given independently of changes in the quantity of money.

Now, how can any rational person take any other position in view of the facts as presented in this chart of crop prices recently prepared by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics? The chart clearly shows that an adequate national income, insofar as it has ever been attained, has, up to the time of instituting the policies of the present Democratic administration, moved precisely with the supply of money available for use. The present policy of depressed interest rates and squandering publicly "borrowed" bank credit, much of it at excessive prices on gold for interment in Kentucky, has broken that relation.

It is obvious, therefore, that an adequate—I quote again from the Board's April statement—"determination of the mechanism and policies that would contribute most to the effectiveness" of an exclusively nonlending, public monetary control as suggested by Dr. Currie, cannot be judged by our past experience which was without such control. Congressional study of the problem, as urged by the Board, will not, then, serve to "clear the way for consideration" by Congress of the "broader aspects of a constructive program for further economic recovery and stability," but will, on the contrary, make such consideration quite uncalled for if such a constructive program comprises the regulation by public authority, directly or delegated, of the field of enterprise which belongs to free, private initiative under a competitive system of trading through a neutral medium of exchange. May I submit that Congress can properly, constitutionally and effectively, deal with the "underlying objective, which, broadly speaking, is the fullest practicable utilization of the country's human and material resources," but only indirectly by monetary action. For in serving this objective, Mr. Chairman, we cannot successfully ignore the quantitative control of the money system as related to prices and to fiscal and taxation policies. [Applause.]

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW].

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may read in the course of my remarks a few paragraphs from a newspaper.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I understand that 169 Members out of the 531 Members of the House and Senate have served under the flag of the United States in some war. I am one of those, and perhaps because of that I am particularly concerned over the trend of affairs today. I do not intend here to either criticize or to attempt to say that I understand the present situation fully, but I want to read to you a paragraph or two from the Washington Daily News of this date.

One of them states:

LINDBERGH SAYS EUROPE ISN'T IN DANGER OF WAR

Col. Charles Lindbergh has told friends he is confident there is no immediate danger of war in Europe, it was learned today.

Persons who have conferred with Colonel Lindbergh said he is discounting war talk in this country with the contention that people abroad are not concerned about war.

I have a great deal of confidence in the views of Col. Charles Lindbergh. He has had an opportunity to travel widely and discuss matters with some very well informed people. Several of my personal acquaintances recently returned from abroad corroborate Mr. Lindbergh's views as quoted. Others differ.

Then, on page 25 of this paper, Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, under One Man's Opinion, writes as follows:

The executive assistant to the Assistant Secretary of War is quoted in the news as having said to the United States Chamber of Commerce: "An Army industrial college is now training about 60 Army and Navy officers each year to direct the mobilization of industry." This refers to the vast regimentation of business that would come if we got into a new world war. It would be necessary to get out the increased production to supply the Army and sustain the civilian population without too much deprivation.

The significant fact revealed by this testimony is that when that gigantic task of industrial management suddenly becomes necessary it is to be directed by Army and Navy officers now being trained by the War Department in an "industrial college." This "training" consists in a few months' get-rich-quick course in the mechanics of industry given to soldiers in the War Department. The instructors are professional soldiers, too, except that there are a few lectures by industrialists.

About the most pathetic spectacle in business life is an Army officer resigning to go into industry. I know just how sad it is because I did it and I have observed others who did it. It took me 7 buffeted years to begin to suspect what it was all about, and some of my Army service was along lines far better adapted to that field than that of most officers.

Take a kid and wall him up in West Point for 4 years like a cloistered monk. Turn him loose to an Army life where he is a little less insulated and his business transactions consist largely in drawing and spending his pay check every month. Teach him that his future security is in his retirement pay and that the service expects him to live up to his position. Grind into him that the way to get things done is to give and obey arbitrary orders. Surround him with comrades with whom he has little competition, since promotion comes by seniority, everybody of equal rank lives on the same scale and there are no sharp trading and clever little schemes. Repeat for 20 years and then spill him into the totally different and far more wolfish world and life of industry.

He is a babe in the woods. It is impossible to describe the extent and infinite variety of his ignorance and bewilderment. He just doesn't know what makes the machine tick. His impulses and his very method of thinking do not adapt themselves to this strange surrounding. It takes years of disappointments, false and hard knocks to adjust him.

But you can't convince an Army officer of this. His argument is that he is by profession an expert executive and therefore can administer anything.

So long as this error is confined to an officer resigning to go into business it is just a pathetic personal tragedy. But if it comes to the infinite extension of that error by putting officers in charge of all industry in war it will be a national disaster. No cramming course in "industry" and nothing he can read out of any books can make the average officer fit for business administration, much less to "direct the mobilization of industry."

The War Department itself has no business whatever "directing" industry in war. That is a mammoth and a vital task—as great and vital as fighting a war. The Army already has the latter risk. It should not jimmy up the works by taking on another just as big the moment the guns begin to roar. It will need all its regular officers to train troops. It would be just as absurd and disastrous to use them on this job as it would be to elbow all the generals aside and put industrial leaders in command of armies. Put armies under soldiers and industrial mobilization under industrialists and let all shoemakers stick to their lasts.

If one correlates these two articles and others that one may find from time to time in the newspapers and magazines, and also in the reports in the Congress, one must get the idea that the United States is doing more talk of war than they are doing in Europe; that we are expanding our armaments not solely for national defense but for possible aid in war to other nations abroad. There is no question but that we should make some plans to prepare for the mobilization of our industry in the event our shores are attacked, but I call your attention to the fact that if we should get into a war, that very mobilization would mean dictatorship in this country. The steps that are proposed to be taken in the event of war are the mobilization or conscription of industry and agriculture and commerce and labor. That is nothing more nor less than military dictatorship. Once taken, these steps would be most difficult to retrace at this stage in the world's history.

I believe there are very few, if any, Members of this House who would countenance with any degree of equanimity of soul and spirit a dictatorship in the United States, but I call your attention to the fact that if we stake steps toward militant alliances or other steps that lead to war, we must also anticipate dictatorship.

It is, therefore, incumbent upon every Member of this House, regardless of his political affiliation or the shade of his opinions—every Member who hates the thought of dictatorship in this country, to do all within his power to avoid inviting war. He must do everything possible and judge all his actions in that light.

It seems to me it is a lot more important that we successfully maintain democracy in the United States as an example to an autocracy-ridden world than that we should become embroiled in war and lose it on the evidently fallacious plea that we are thereby helping to defend world democracy. In defending it we would lose it.

Now, I offer this seriously for your consideration, because I am most deeply interested in the United States, as you are, and I dearly love my country, as you do. [Applause.]

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself so much time as I may require.

Mr. Chairman, on March 27 last, Admiral Leahy, Chief of Naval Operations, responding to the questions propounded by members of the subcommittee as to whether or not the estimates as submitted were or were not padded or exorbitant, said, as appears on page 41 of the hearings:

The estimate figures submitted by the various agencies of the Navy Department have already been pruned to a minimum consistent with what are considered the needs for reasonable national security. It would therefore, in my opinion, be jeopardizing national security to reduce the present number of vessels and aircraft in active service, to fail to man the fleet effectively with officers and men, to delay the authorized shipbuilding and aircraft-building programs, or to fail to build up the shore establishments and reserve stocks in support of the fleet.

It is my opinion that the prospect of international disturbance in the near future fully warrants expediting the authorized naval-building program as much as is practicable with the facilities that are available or that can be made available.

Your subcommittee, after weeks of intensive study of all the matters and things incident to the consideration of adequate appropriation for the needs of the Navy and the defense of the country, in the exercise of its well-considered judgment, fully realizing the responsibility it assumes, has brought in a bill which does not, however, meet either the requests of the Department, or the suggestions as approved by the Budget, but which, on the contrary, cuts $19,956,212 therefrom; which once was a considerable sum of money.

One other thing, Mr. Chairman, and I am through. I cannot omit to direct your attention and that of all thoughtful Americans to an inconspicuous colloquy which speaks volumes with respect to the war hysteria situation and propaganda which covers the country today. Interrogating Admiral Leahy, Chief of Naval Operations, and de facto Acting Secretary of the Navy, Mr. McLeod, of Michigan, asked, and I quote from the hearings on page 886:

Mr. McLEOD. Admiral Leahy, at any rate, any of the present building program is not in anticipation of the present conditions in Europe, so-called emergency, or whatever we might term them?

Admiral LEAHY. The present building program of the United States is based upon the building programs of other naval powers, and not upon the imminence of war in the near future.

Mr. McLEOD. It has nothing to do with the present-day war talk; is that right?

Admiral LEAHY. No; nothing whatever.

Nothing whatever! So says Admiral Leahy. Think that over. Admiral Leahy should know. He does. The American people should.

There has been too much rabble-rousing, war-provoking, careless, ill-considered, emotional propaganda and hysteria-generating talk. We must mind our own business and provide for adequate defense—not for aggression.

Too much talk by those who either will not or do not know. It should certainly be welcome and reassuring news to the American people to know that we are not in imminent danger of being drawn into a world conflict. It is comforting to know this, and Admiral Leahy is right, despite all the scareheads and ill-considered statements to the contrary emanating from the White House and from a would-be occupant thereof. We do not have to go to war. We will not go to war except in defense of America and Americans. [Applause.]

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MASSINGALE]

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman and Members of the House—that is, those who are present—I suppose, I know, in fact, that nobody will get any benefit particularly from anything I may say on this subject. I fill up sometimes when I listen to general debate in this House, because I go upon the assumption that every Member of this House has quite a bit of devotion to this country and its interests and welfare. I get awfully sick and tired and full of this eternal carping and criticism of men in high official positions, especially of attacks on the President; and I am talking about the attitude of some Members toward him.

It seems to me so far beneath the dignity of Congress for a man to get up here and insinuate that the President of the United States is not a loyal, devoted citizen of this Republic that I kind of boil over. I have no use for it. In the last 10 days the President probably has answered all of the demands that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], who is what you might term "Secretary of State in expectancy" [laughter], has made against him this year. Last year Mr. FISH criticized him along different lines. Now this year he is criticizing him again. It does not make any difference what attitude the President assumes about foreign relations or the policy of the country, he could never satisfy that distinguished constituent of his. Mr. FISH boasts nearly every day that the President is one of his constituents with whom he cannot agree. Mr. FISH could not have a seat in this House if he were not one of the President's constituents, but you never hear of the President boasting about that. I do not have any feeling of ill will toward Mr. FISH; rather I like and at times admire him, because I know that his record in general has been fine. He has served more time in the service of the Government of the United States than I have. I do not mean in Congress, but I mean in military service. I honor him for it. I understand he made a wonderful record in the World War.

My contribution was made in another war. Some fellow asked me, "Which one, the Revolution?" I told him no, it was in 1812 [laughter], and that was just a little far back. [Laughter.] But the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] is laboring under the delusion that the country has suffered materially because he happens not to be Secretary of State, and this has been the bone of his contention and the basis upon which his criticism of the President generally is made. I said a while ago that he was "Secretary of State in waiting," or in expectancy; and I did not mean to imply that Mr. FISH, the distinguished gentleman and critic from New York, is pregnant with any hope of ever being able to deliver. [Laughter.] I just wish that kind of stuff would cease in this House, for we have more important matters to determine. A few days ago I took the floor of the House and made the statement that I thought it ill became a body of such intelligence as this House is possessed of to waste a day trying to devise means by which a certain patent medicine for asthma cure could be shipped from one State to another in violation of the Pure Food and Drug Act, to the utter neglect of urgent need for farm-relief legislation pending.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Just one kind of speech has been made today—all critical of the President and contending we are not in danger of attack—and I agree that there is no danger of immediate attack; but I have a peculiar feeling toward a man, an American citizen, who does not think we ought to go ahead and get ready right away, for the day of treaties is past. Respect for treaties does not amount to anything any more. You will remember that the second fiddler for the dictators in Europe, Mr. Mussolini, made this statement—and I make no attempt to quote his exact words—in substance: "Italy no longer respects treaties." Hitler, of course, does not respect treaties because he set two aside the other day. It has become common practice. Mussolini made the statement the other day that he respected no treaties. He said, "The thing that measures my respect and regard for another nation is the size and number of the guns it can bring to bear."

What are you going to do about it? I say it is the duty of this Congress to see to it that we have an adequate supply of guns, and, when such people get ready to go, that we just draw the curtain aside and say, "Mr. Mussolini, look at them. If you want to go up against them, here they are. You know the kind of soldiery America produces."

Why not go ahead and vote this bill, and even more? Instead of having a 45,000-ton battleship for the defense of America, if it were possible to design one of 450,000 tons, I would be for it, with world conditions as they are. I think we ought to quit this petty politics of criticizing the President of the United States when he has told us plainly what his policy is; and you know that the Congress of the United States in any emergency is going to support the President in his program for the defense of this country. This Congress knows that only political snipers take any stock in the statement that the President wants war or is a war monger. Why, of course, this Congress is not going to vote to send any of our boys over to the shambles of Shanghai, or into Germany, or into Italy; it is not necessary to do that. The President said he was opposed to it. What we want to do is to make sure of the adequacy of our Navy to defend the United States.

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASSINGALE. I yield.

Mr. KITCHENS. As I understand the gentleman, he prefers to make this country safe so that a man like Bergdoll would rather come back to the United States and go to the penitentiary than live where he now lives.

Mr. MASSINGALE. So far as I am concerned Bergdoll is welcome to stay where he is now living.

Mr. KITCHENS. And all these American ladies like Anna Gould and Barbara Hutton marrying foreign titles are now coming back to America.

Mr. MASSINGALE. I think they show their good sense, and it heightens my respect for the sex that they want to come back to this country.

Mr. KITCHENS. I am glad to note that the gentleman agrees with me.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired, all time has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, namely:

The CHAIRMAN. Under the order of the House previously made the Committee will now rise.

Accordingly the Commitee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Cox, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 6149, the Navy Department appropriation bill, 1940, had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. TALLE, for May 5, 8, and 9, on account of official business.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, by request I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK] may extend his own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an article appearing in the Philippine-American Advocate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address delivered in Washington, D. C., by Mr. Ralph E. Flanders, of Springfield, Vt., director of the New England Council.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont?

There was no objection.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made in the Committee of the Whole today and to include therein the entire article from which I quoted.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short resolution introduced by me, together with a memorandum submitted in support of that resolution by Mr. Gonzales Quinones, secretary of the Puerto Rican Farmers' Association.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO]?

There was no objection.

WITHDRAWAL OF PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF], who has been granted special permission to address the House this afternoon, has asked to have this order vacated.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under a previous special order of the House, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWEENEY] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include in my remarks a table of the possessions and dominions controlled by the British Government, the method by which they were secured, and the date of acquisition.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWEENEY]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, as the time approaches for the much-heralded visit of the British King and Queen to the United States, I feel I would be derelict in my duty as a public official if I did not make a humble contribution by way of suggestion for the entertainment and comfort of their royal majesties. Remembering the kindness their forbears exhibited for centuries to my ancestors in Ireland, indeed I should be an ingrate if I did not in some way show my gratitude to the reigning rulers of the synthetic British democracy. Therefore I suggest that the State Department officials charged with providing entertainment for the King and Queen of Great Britain seriously consider the following program.

Call upon all the residents in the District of Columbia to create as nearly as possible a true London atmosphere. For the duration of the visit Pennsylvania and Constitution Avenues should be renamed Piccadilly Circus and the Strand, respectively.

All persons using the telephone during the visit of the royal couple in Washington should refrain from using the vulgar American expression "Hello" and substitute the more civilized and practical British salutation "Are you there?" Instead of greeting each other daily with that horrible "What do you know?" "What's doing?" "How's things?" let us be British and say "Cheerio" and "Quite right."

At the state dinners let the conventional evening dress for men be abandoned and red jackets donned. And let there be printed on all menus a copy of the Declaration of Independence, as a reminder of the reign of George III over the American Colonies—a reminder that we have not forgotten old wrongs that would reappear should American men and industry be drafted to save Britain from its doom.

Perhaps it would be asking too much to even suggest that the royal couple while staying at the White House take a stroll across the street to the Treasury Building and make at least a down payment on the British war debt of $5,419,388,374.72, which represents principal and interest due poor old Uncle Sam as of March 1, 1939.

Information has leaked out that the committee in charge of the reception will recommend that certain public buildings be closed during the stay of the royal rulers. I sincerely hope that the United States Treasury will be included in the list, if you know what I mean.

If the King and Queen are anxious to see our bloodthirsty Indians, show them the modern-version Indian before his air-conditioned tepee gloating over his Agricultural benefit checks.

Should they wish to see our slaves, let them go into any business office in the United States and watch our businessmen work night and day under the whip of the tax collectors.

Or they may desire to see the jolly old opposition in America: let them see our Republicans in a state of suspended animation waiting for the time to turn their own rascals into office.

At least they should be taken for a short visit to Walter Reed, Mount Alto, and St. Elizabeths Hospitals. Let them see the woeful wrecks a war to save Britain made of American manhood. It would be a good thing to dramatize, so that Americans will let the world know we will never do it again. Also, it might cause the British rulers to realize that a substantial payment on the war debt might help these broken veterans who are still paying for helping Britain.

Should they come to the House for a joint session of Congress, may I respectfully suggest we open with The Star-Spangled Banner, so that the tune of America may not confuse them as to its sentiment, and let us close with the reading of Washington's Farewell Address.

It will be a serious occasion when the British rulers lay a wreath on the tomb of the Unknown Soldier. Methinks I can hear the shade of that unknown but immortal American boy cry out, not to the individuals but to the Government they represent, "Because of you I am here."

As the shadows of evening draw nigh bonfires should be lighted on Capitol Hill and on the White House grounds, lest they forget August 24, 1814, when the British burned the Capitol and the White House.

It is regrettable the time of the royal couple is not sufficient to permit their paying a visit to Fort Knox, Ky., to view our gold pile. Such a sight would brighten their eyes and make their mouths water. As a compensation, may I respectfully suggest that the United States Marine Band, after it tires playing Rule Britannia, Rule the Waves, oblige by playing Our Gold Kentucky Home.

Let them visit our navy yards and arsenals, our military posts and forts, so that they may know we do not need Britain.

I trust our colleagues from the historic State of Massachusetts will extend to our guests an invitation to visit Faneuil Hall and Bunker Hill. Perhaps, they may be able to induce the Daughters of the American Revolution to give a tea party on the Boston Commons—I am sure it will not be black tea, if this ever takes place.

Our distinguished patriotic colleague, Mr. SOL BLOOM, of New York, recently in assisting the publicity department of the world's fair did a fine job in dramatizing Washington's trip from Mount Vernon to New York City for his first inaugural. Why not have the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] who is so well versed in history, arrange another Paul Revere ride? It would take but little effort and expense to have a modern Paul Revere mount his steed at the International Bridge at Buffalo, N. Y., a week in advance of the arrival of the distinguished guests, and journey to Washington announcing that warning which has thrilled American schoolboys for years, "Here come the British."

The climax of their visit, in my opinion, will be the trip to Mount Vernon. Respectful and courteous as he was in life the shadow of our immortal George Washington will look down with sympathy and smile understandingly at these rulers by divine right. He will accept their homage, but more emphatic than he was in life he will cry out to his confused but loyal countrymen:

I fear the Greeks bearing gifts. No entangling alliances with foreign powers is still my advice to my countrymen.

Surely, in my opinion, this is more than a social visit. A recent press dispatch proclaims it to be an official visit. I quote from the Times-Herald of April 20, 1939:

ROOSEVELT VISIT TO BRITAIN HINTED

LONDON, April 20.—Disclosure the forthcoming visit of King George VI and Queen Elizabeth to America will be official and not private, as hitherto anticipated, indicates President Roosevelt is expected to visit Great Britain officially, quarters well informed on court etiquette said today. Citing the state visit here of President Albert Lebrun and other precedents, these quarters said a return visit by Roosevelt was considered virtually automatic.

There is no doubt but that this visit was arranged in advance with purpose and intent by the Cliveden set of Great Britain, led by the expatriate American-born Lady Astor. This set has assayed the role of the late Lord Northcliffe and are now the No. 1 propagandistic agency for the British Empire. Few of us are so naive as to deny the right of the King and Queen, or the leader, call him what you may, of any nation, to visit the United States or any part of the world. The world ought to be a habitat to roam as man willed, consistent with respect for the rights of his fellow men. Great Britain only has made this impossible by her ruthless seizure of territory in the past and her cruel conquest of millions of people throughout the world, now under domination and influence.

It is significant to note that the new British Ambassador to the United States, Lord Lothian, will assume his office shortly after the visit of the King and Queen of Great Britain. Lord Lothian is no stranger to this country. As secretary of the Rhodes Scholarship Fund he makes frequent visits to the United States to strengthen British-American friendship. He has recently been quoted in the newspapers as stating that—

The Ten Commandments and the Sermon on the Mount has caused more wars than anything else because of controversies over how they should be applied.

The distinguished British statesman evidently is well versed in the history of his country. There is one commandment broken by his country more often than by any other nation in the history of mankind, and that is the commandment "Thou shalt not steal."

A glance at any map of the world will prove beyond contradiction that the possessions Great Britain seized by conquest and now holds with material profit is the direct result of violating the seventh commandment.

During the visit of Lord Lothian to the United States last winter he was quoted in the American newspapers as saying: "England will fight. There can no longer be any doubt of that." He also made it emphatically clear that he considered the future peace of the world dependent upon the closest possible cooperation between Great Britain and the United States. These two countries, he believes, can and should police the world.

Apparently, he was selected as Britain's Ambassador to the United States because of the views he holds on Anglo-American relations. I predict that just as soon as he is safely ensconced in the British Embassy at Washington, the floodgates of propaganda will be opened, and "in perfect good faith advance the highest moral reasons for the most concrete diplomatic actions," until the helpful British Ambassador will be settling the international problems of the United States.

Recently I forwarded to my colleagues in the House of Representatives a copy of Name the Aggressors, by Louis B. Ward. This publication proves beyond doubt that the greatest aggressor since the dawn of civilization has been the government that our distinguished guests now represent. We hold no brief for the dictators of Germany, Italy, or Soviet Russia. We are not concerned with their internal affairs. While we protest and always will give expression of protest against the persecution of any group of people because of their religious or political belief, we have never yet invoked intervention in a case that is not of concern to us as a nation.

Our participation in the last World War, brought about by the international bankers and the traitorous conduct of our erstwhile British Ambassador, Walter Hines Page, is a lesson we should never forget. Many of the agencies that helped to propagandize this country before the last World War are still functioning with their subversive propaganda. This would be a great day if Andrew Carnegie had lived to extend a welcoming hand to a British King and Queen on American soil.

It was Andrew Carnegie who said in his book entitled "Triumphant Democracy," published in 1893:

Time may dispel many pleasing illusions and destroy many noble dreams, but it shall never shake my belief that the wound caused by the wholly unlooked for and undesired separation of the mother from her child is not to bleed forever.

Let men say what they will; therefore I say that as surely as the sun in the heavens once shone upon Britain and America united, so surely is it one morning to rise, shine upon, and greet again the reunited state—the British-American union.

God forbid that such a day should ever come, a day when this country will be bound by an alliance with Great Britain, to crush the eternal hopes of millions of her children in all parts of the world who are praying for the God-given right of autonomy and independence.

It was Andrew Carnegie who gave tremendous sums of money by way of endowments to popularize British-American friendship and the "hands across the sea" propaganda through the Carnegie Foundation for International Peace. This agency is aided and abetted by the English Speaking Union, the Sulgrave Institute, and the Rhodes Scholarship fund, which takes from our shores scores of young Americans each year to be educated at Oxford in the doctrine of British imperialism and then turned loose in the United States to undermine and attempt to destroy our democracy.

In these days of excitement and passionate condemnation of aggressor nations, let us keep the record straight and not succumb to the plea of Great Britain, whose far-flung empire is the fruits of bitter aggressions in the past. Because these aggressions occurred in other years is no justification for the premise that the sins of yesterday are to be forgotten. I append herewith a list of the dominions and possessions of Great Britain throughout the world. They are the harvest of British seeds of aggressions sown in years long past.

The fruits of aggression

The last few months has witnessed a deluge of propaganda uncanny in its parallel with that of 1914, 1915, 1916, and 1917, before we entered the great World War. This generation of Americans, wise in their judgment because of the disastrous experience of the last World War, are definitely determined that no American boy will again die in battle on foreign soil. The American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the Disabled Veterans of America, and practically every patriotic organization, who have the interest of the Republic at heart, have registered their conviction on this important question.

It is not the Rome to Berlin axis we need fear in this so-called crisis. It is only imperial Britain that can plunge us into another disastrous war. Britain is attempting now to create a London to Paris to Moscow axis in an effort to bolster her fast-deteriorating empire. Until such time as the rulers of the so-called synthetic democracy get out of the six counties in Ireland she now holds by military strength alone, restore to the struggling millions in India their right to freedom and independence, release her hold on the colonies in South Africa and elsewhere in the world, they cannot approach this or any other nation, nor appear before the court of public opinion with clean hands, urging us to give at least our moral support in condemning the aggression of a Hitler, a Mussolini, or a Stalin. Perhaps the British rulers will explain to the American Jews interested in the Zionist movement to establish a homeland in Palestine why the Balfour declaration was scrapped after she solemnly promised the United States she would notify us in the event of such action; and why, if she be the friend of the persecuted Jew, she erects barriers against the settlement of refugee Jews in Palestine.

The Dies committee, instructed by this Congress to investigate subversive activities against the Government of the United States, will do well to investigate the pro-British agencies in this country who are now actively engaged in propagandizing as they were before our entrance into the last World War.

There are those who will say this speech is not good form, and that it violates the courtesies extended to our distinguished guests from Great Britain. But good form and the truth are generally inconsistent. More crime is disguised with formality than black masks. More outrages are committed a la Chesterfield than a la Dillinger. The chancelleries of the world are stocked with formal precedents, designed to make histories of pillage appear in good taste. Human rights have been torn to shreds with all the aplomb of an Emily Post. Be debonair, but destroy, have said the international vandals for centuries. I am more intrigued by character and integrity than by polish and good taste. I do not subscribe to boorishness, but frankness while it may be brutal, is not necessarily boorish. Therefore, I speak frankly, and will risk criticism, so that I may save my country.

While we welcome the British King and Queen, no doubt very personable people as royalty goes, let us not forget to show them we are in the midst of a war, a war against unemployment, a war against economic royalists, so termed by our President, who are fighting progressive legislation designed to make the lives of working classes in this country a little better. While we are showing honor to the King and Queen, why not show them our factories idle and good Americans on relief. High taxes caused this. Money wasted on the World War to save England to make more wars make these high taxes necessary. Were the King and Queen to come here with a substantial payment on the war debt, there would be a decent purpose in the visit. But no, they come here as advance agents for Britain's next war. Britain is desperate—therefore the monarchy stoops to democracy. Arrangements have already been made to assure a stooping without indignity. The formalities will be as rigid as autograph hounds and celebrity chasers will permit.

But let us direct all our efforts to winning our domestic war within the confines of our beloved country and give no heed to the crafty and selfish diplomats of other nations, who in 1917 took our men and our money under the pretense of making the world safe for democracy, a war which every fair-minded historian now knows was a war to save England from destruction. I cannot believe that the Members of this Congress, or perhaps the Congresses to follow in the future, will ever again permit this country to engage in a war on foreign soil. On the contrary, with our unlimited resources, we are able to sympathize but stand aloof from the constant quarrels of Europe and Asia, extending in the language of George Washington—

> Justice toward all nations and guarding against the insidious wiles of foreign influences, taking care always to keep ourselves by suitable establishments on a respectable defensive posture.
> Against the insidious wiles of foreign influence (I conjure you to believe me, fellow citizens), the jealousy of a free people ought to be constantly awake, since history and experience prove that foreign influence is one of the most baneful foes of republican government. Europe has a set of primary interests which to us have none, or a very remote, relation.

In the light of the coming visit of British rulers these admonitions are as timely today as they were then. We can expect the visting personalities will be attractively press-agented, and the American public will be psychologized into saving the homey little couple from Hitler and Mussolini. Let us treat them neither too casually nor too warmly. It is well for our future that they do not leave our shores with an impression that we will follow them with an army or funds to fight their battles. It is better that they understand quite definitely we will not. Let us make it emphatic to the British King and Queen leaving America that we are steeped in the traditions of Washington; that all the gold in the British Treasury, and all the power of her mighty fleet and army will not and cannot bring about a permanent alliance with this country to pull her chestnuts out of the fire and freeze more solid the fruits of her past aggressions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GRISWOLD] is recognized for 20 minutes.

THE DAIRY FARMER

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, on March 21 I spoke in this House in regard to the Canadian treaty and its probable effect on the dairy farmers of my State. In the time I have this afternoon, I want to discuss that treaty further as to what is actually taking place under this trade agreement. The Canadian trade agreement, as all other treaties or agreements, represents an exchange or trade of benefits and concessions. It is very plain from the reading of the treaty and a tabulation of the concessions granted that Canada asked for and received excessive lowering of rates on dairy and agriculture products and the United States asked for and received reductions on the duty on manufactured products and machinery of all kinds. Canada asked for and received concessions that benefited her farmers, and the United States surrendered the farm market for the benefit of the manufacture of iron, steel, and metal goods. Canada asked for concessions which she expected to use for the benefit of the farmers of Canada. I now want to call to the attention of the Members of this House exactly what is taking place, so that later on when the full effect of the treaty becomes apparent it cannot be said we did not know what was taking place.

CATTLE IMPORTS

I want first to call attention to the cattle imports into this country, as every farmer in the northern half of the United States, at least, is vitally affected by the price of the surplus cattle he can put on the market. Under the low duty granted Canada in the 1936 treaty we imported into this country last year 434,022 head of cattle and exported from the United States only 3,059 head. On January 1 of this year a new trade treaty was entered into with Canada still further reducing the duty and placing no limit on the dairy cows that might be imported. During January and February of this year, for which figures are now available, 183,880 head of cattle were imported. At this rate over 1,000,000 head of cattle will be imported this year.

Last year 78,597,007 pounds of canned beef were imported into this country and 1,500,932 pounds were exported. Under the new treaty we have received in the first 2 months of this year 7,489,057 pounds of canned beef.

Last year 181,951,288 pounds of hides were imported and 44,815,074 pounds were exported. During the first 2 months of this year 8,549,660 were imported.

The three items I have just quoted figures for, I believe, show very plainly what is taking place and what we may expect in prices for dairy cows or beef cows either sold for dairy purposes or for slaughter. The placing of the low tariff on dairy cows with no limit on the number that may be imported under this low rate is going to take away from dairy farmers a large part of their market for dairy cows. There is no hope but for low prices for dairy cows and, in fact, all cattle, unless the present trade treaty is changed.

CHEESE

The general tariff by Congress, previous to the trade treaties, placed a tariff of 7 cents a pound on cheese, and this tariff was high enough to stop the importation of cheese to any price-lowering extent. The 1936 trade treaty with Canada lowered the tariff on cheese to 5 cents per pound. Under this tariff in 1937 over 60,000,000 pounds were imported, and last year 54,431,870 pounds were imported. There were exported 1,480,943 pounds of cheese, a very small amount. On January 1 of this year, under the new trade treaty, the duty on cheese was reduced to 4 cents per pound and no limit placed on the amount that might be imported. Cheese imports have been of a very dry cheese, which in effect further reduces the duty to about 3½ cents per pound. In spite of the very low price prevailing for cheese, in the first 2 months of this year 8,339,238 pounds of cheese have been imported. Any effort that increases the consumption or price of cheese in this country may be partly nullified by a flood of foreign cheese. The price of cheese and butter always maintain the same relationship to each other. There cannot be cheap cheese without cheap butter, and the price of cheese and butter controls the price of all dairy products.

HOGS IMPORTED

The north-central part of the United States is the greatest hog-producing section in the world. The byproducts of their creameries and cheese factories, in combination with the corn they raise, produce an ideal feed for the raising and marketing of pigs and pork products. Under the trade treaty the duty on hogs has been reduced one-half, and last year 56,396 head of hogs were imported, and only 303 head were exported. There were also imported hams, shoulders, and bacon to the extent of 44,347,264 pounds, and 8,737,041 pounds exported. There is no limit placed on the amount of pork products that may be imported under these low duties. This flood of imports cannot help but force and keep hog prices down.

BARLEY

Another example of the damaging effects of the present trade treaties is found in barley. One of the Northwest's few cash crops is the production of barley suitable for use in the brewing industry. Wisconsin's production alone is over 22,000,000 bushels annually, and the State ranks third or fourth among the States in barley production. The amount of barley suitable for malting purposes and the demand of the malting industry determine the price the farmer receives for his barley. Under the trade agreement with Canada during the last year 100,575,670 pounds of barley malt were imported into this country and only 135,571 pounds were exported. During the first 2 months of this year 12,482,686 pounds of barley malt have been imported. Under these conditions it is very probable our market for good barley will be low.

POULTRY

Poultry is one of the leading products of the North Central States, and the duty on both poultry and eggs has been drastically reduced. Last year 428,304 pounds of live and dressed turkeys were imported, and it seems very probable that this year, with further reduced tariff, large quantities of both poultry and eggs will be imported.

FISH

My State is bordered by Lake Michigan, Lake Superior, and the Mississippi River. With the boundary of water and the thousands of lakes, fishing has been an important source of revenue for all Northern States. The trade treaties have drastically reduced all duties on fish, and last year there were imported 302,623,795 pounds of fish and a very small amount exported. During the first 2 months of this year 63,977,497 pounds of fish have already been imported. Judging this year's importation by the amount of fish already imported, it bids fair to exceed the 300,000,000 pounds imported last year. The fishermen are facing a difficult situation.

FURS

The production of furs, while a comparatively new industry, has reached very large proportions as a source of revenue to many farmers and businessmen. The Northwest is the leading fur-producing section of the United States. The drastic reduction of duties on raw furs has led to the importation last year of over 95,000,000 furs, while we exported 11,384,517 furs. Already in the first 2 months of this year 16,909,644 furs have been imported, and unless the import of furs can be stopped by an increase in tariff the fur farmers of the United States are facing ruin.

I have now discussed just 10 of the many farm products allowed to enter from foreign countries and their probable effect on the farmers' market. Many others might be included, but I believe the 10 products I have quoted serve to emphasize the seriousness of the situation.

The imports of farm products and the constant threat of even larger imports has forced the dairy and farm market to the bottom and is going to keep it there. The farmer in his desperation to make ends meet is going to come to the Congress and ask for large appropriations. He is going to demand parity payments, subsidies, and other payments in a desperate effort to keep out of bankruptcy. Whatever this Congress may do to aid the farmers' price structure will only be met by a further flood of imports. The Canadian treaty is a stumbling block to any agricultural program. To restore agricultural conditions, not only in my State but in the Nation, I believe it absolutely necessary that we first repeal the trade agreements and restore former duties on farm products. The American farmer must be given back that which up to now he has always had—the American market.

I realize my voice may be a voice crying in the wilderness, as far as this Congress or this administration, is concerned. I cannot, however, stand idly by and see the ruination of the great dairy industry without, to the best of my ability, pointing out and protesting against what is taking place.

While I believe the restoration to the farmer of the American market is fundamental, I do not believe that alone can restore to normal agricultural conditions.

Every attempt by preceding Congresses to benefit by special legislation or grants some particularly hard-pressed group or class has not been successful. The progress back to normal conditions must be by all groups and classes. Men must have work before farm prices can reach parity.

The laws, regulations, and taxes that cripple industry and prevent the employment in industry of our idle men must be repealed. The man who would employ labor must be fostered and encouraged. A large part of the products of the farm are raw materials and must pass through the process of manufacture before they are readily saleable commodities. The crippling of industry and manufacture acts as a dam to the outlet of farm products and causes them to seek an escape through low prices. Our canning factories and other factories that consume farm products must be allowed to operate at capacity.

Mr. Speaker, I am asking that the farmer be given back his American market. I am asking that we repeal oppressive laws and allow industry to operate to the end that all men have jobs in private employment at reasonable wages.

THE PARITY PRICE BILL

Mr. HARRINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include therein an address delivered by a citizen of my district.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HARRINGTON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARRINGTON. Mr. Speaker, for almost 20 years the Congress of the United States has recognized the fact that there is a farm problem in the United States. Somewhat vaguely too has Congress recognized that somehow and in some way the farm problem is linked inexorably with all of our economic ills. The wonder is not that we have not solved the problem but that we have begun to understand it at all. Under several parties and several administrations sincere efforts have been made by several Congresses and by several Presidents to find the solution. Much has been tried and much has proven worthless. But some good has been done and the clumsy, halting, mistaken steps that we have made have not all been futile. We have come a long way on the road to successful and clear understanding of our elusive objective and probably no greater progress has been made in the past 20 years than during the past 6 years under the analytical, sincere, and courageous Henry Wallace, the present Secretary of Agriculture. Unrelenting in his desire to bring back to the American farmer a fair price and a fair profit for his products, he has not lost sight of the general welfare. He has been bitterly attacked, opposed, and confronted by great obstacles. Many have ridiculed him, yet there is no one who does not know deep in his heart that no better friend of the American farmer ever occupied the chair of Secretary of Agriculture in any Cabinet under any President.

Disagree if you will—no one can fail to recognize the fact that for the first time in history a farm bill, designed to aid the American farmer, is actually on the statute books in operation, and upheld by the Supreme Court of the United States. For the first time in history a farmer can obtain loans on the lifeblood of this country, the food and fiber crops which he, the farmer, raises. For the first time in history those loans are based upon the storage of the farmer's crops on his own farm; and for the first time the principle of parity for agriculture is definitely established as part of the law of the land. Certainly these accomplishments are worthy of praise and commendation. I want to go back to just one—the principle of parity.

It is an excellent word—"parity"—derived from the Latin "paritas," meaning equal. Webster's Dictionary defines it as "The quality of being equal or equivalent, a like state or degree; equality"—and again—"equality in purchasing power * * *."

It is the basic principle of a bill which I have introduced today. Parity for agriculture and parity for labor and business. These are its objectives, and if my research is correct these things it will accomplish. It is true that we have the principle of parity in the present Farm Act; that is, loans are made on the basis of 52 percent of parity, but my bill goes further—it establishes the principle of parity throughout our entire economy. Again if my research is correct, I say that when this measure is enacted into law it will probably accomplish what President Roosevelt has so often stated to be his objective—a national income of eighty-five to one hundred billion dollars annually.

Lest it be thought that I desire to take credit for work of others, may I say that much of the painstaking research and actual drafting of the bill itself is the work of an Iowa farmer from my district, Mr. Carl Wilken. I have assisted and collaborated with him in the studies he has made along with several other citizens—farmers, students, and editors of my district. I was much impressed with the conclusions of Mr. Wilken and invited him to come to Washington to discuss with interested Members the philosophy of the bill. He appeared before the House Committee on Agriculture at my request and through the courtesy of the gentleman from Texas, MARVIN JONES, chairman of the committee. His testimony and statement appear in the recently published hearings on the general farm program—serial A, pages 461 to 481, inclusive. On several occasions I have arranged for small groups of Members and various governmental department officials to meet with Mr. Wilken and me.

I am sure that each of you who has had the opportunity of a complete and full explanation of the parity price bill at these group meetings have become increasingly conscious of the logic and reason in our approach to the solution of the problem which has been troubling us for so long a time.

Briefly, the bill assures producers of basic crops parity prices for their product without acreage restriction. Crops included are wheat, corn, oats, cotton, sugar, and tobacco, with a provision for inclusion of rye, barley, and rice at the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture.

The Secretary of Agriculture through the Production Credit Corporation would be authorized to make loans of not less than 75 percent of the current parity price of such crops as indicated by the general commodity index averaged over the period 1922 to 1929. Crops would be stored on the farm during the period of loans.

September 1 of each year would be designated as "Agricultural Surplus Liquidation Day." On that day the Commodity Credit Corporation would buy up crops in excess of the current year's estimated needs and 35 percent of a normal average year's yield would be stored to constitute an "ever-normal granary," and pay full parity therefor.

In turn the Government agency would dispose of such purchases (1) by adding them to the national reserves, (2) by export at the world price; (3) by subsidizing their use in new commercial channels such as industrial and fuel alcohol, plastics, and other products, and (4) by use for domestic human relief.

To protect the domestic market against import competition and thereby maintain the parity price schedule, importers of agricultural raw materials would be licensed. The difference between landed cost and domestic price of such imports would be collected by the Government to help defray the cost of operating the program.

Provision is also made for the Secretary of Agriculture through the bank for cooperatives to grant credits and make loans to cooperative organizations storing nonperishable goods and products manufactured or processed from milk, fruit, vegetables and root crops, dressed poultry, and other products.

I firmly believe that our major economic problems arise mainly from the disparity of income between agriculture and industry and our failure to make our credit structure work. We have failed to realize that true wealth comes only from the ground—hence that must be the place of beginning of any solution for our difficulties. Wipe out all the industries in the country tomorrow and America would not starve. She would have the real wealth, the true wealth, the raw materials to live and rebuild; but render sterile every acre of farm land in America tomorrow and our present troubles would, by comparison, be only the aggravating hum of a mosquito on a June evening. America would die. Our people would perish.

Yes, truly this bill is a prosperity measure, a Budget balancer, a further projection of a vital principle recognized and adopted by our courageous Secretary of Agriculture. It will materially increase the farmer's income without penalty to the consumer. The increased buying power on the farms of the Nation will be directly reflected in higher factory pay rolls and greater national income. Our research, if correct—and we have used nothing but Government statistics to prove our contention—shows that factory pay rolls and national income follow farm income in the ratio of 1–1–7—that is, $1 of farm income accounts for $1 of factory pay roll and multiplies into $7 of national income.

I have not presented the bill before now out of deference to my friends who are as sincere as I and who have sponsored the cost-of-production bill in the interests of the American farmer. But I leave it to your own good judgment. The parity-price bill is a simple, effective, workable plan based on known and proven factors. It will work. It must work.

And now, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include therein an address delivered by Carl Wilken in Sioux City, Iowa, on Pareconomy—The Way to Prosperity—as follows:

PARECONOMY—THE WAY TO PROSPERITY

(Address by Carl Wilken, Sioux City, Iowa, president, Progressive Farmers of Iowa; secretary-treasurer, Raw Materials National Council)

Mr. Chairman, during the past 18 years we have gone through a hectic period. Ten million people are out of work, one-third of our population is underfed, underhoused, and underclothed, and the other two-thirds are doing without the things that they would like to have to increase their general welfare and happiness.

All because of the fact that we have too much of everything. Our people are hungry because we have too much food; our people are living in hovels because we have too much building material; and so on down the list. It does not make sense. The quotation "What poor fools these mortals be" still holds true.

In my talk this afternoon I am going to try to point out to you why such conditions exist and how easily we can remedy these conditions if we will but use a little old-fashioned common sense and a little old-fashioned arithmetic.

For 2 years I have carried on research work for the Raw Materials National Council, and the results have been amazing.

The problem of an organized society is how to bring enough money into circulation each year to enable the people to buy the wealth they can produce in order that all may live on an American standard, provide for the needs of government, and have something for a savings account as a foundation for security and growth.

There are just three ways to bring money into circulation, viz:

1. By the production and sale of the raw materials—products of the ground. That is the dollar we earn.

2. By direct issue by the Government as provided in the Constitution. The issue of money leads to inflation.

3. By taxation or some form of credit device. That is the method we have been following, and it leads to bankruptcy, because it dissipates the savings and future earnings of our people.

PRODUCTION AND PRICE

The process of creating wealth starts with the production of raw materials—the products of the ground. Manufacturing, transportation, and other functions of business and capital represent only services which could not be performed at all if the raw materials were not first produced.

The amount of real wealth brought into existence is measured by the number of units of raw materials produced. Society has invented measures of weight, length, and volume which never fluctuate and remain constant year after year, but our measure of value resembles a modern jitterbug.

The amount of goods and services such units of new wealth will buy is measured by the price per unit received by the producer of such new wealth. Therefore, the number of units of raw materials produced times the price received equals the new dollar income created during each production cycle or year; the turn-over of these dollars in the channels of trade determines the wages of labor and the collective income of the Nation.

For example, the sale of 1,000 bushels of wheat at $1 per bushel draws upon our capital structure for $1,000 and starts $1,000 on the way into our trade channels. One thousand bushels of wheat at 50 cents per bushel draw out only $500 and reduce the primary flow of money accordingly.

It is the bushels of wheat, tons of coal, pounds of meat, etc., that the people trade. The dollar measures the relationship of the commodities exchanged. When the producer spends the dollar received for his product he passes the purchasing power to the next man and the next.

The units of raw materials—new wealth—are transformed by industry into other forms of wealth and become permanent assets of society. That is not true of either the dollar of issue or the credit dollar.

Thus the dollar brought into circulation by the production and sale of raw materials—new wealth—is the only dollar which represents real wealth. It naturally follows that our national income is based on the amount and value of the new wealth produced. This leads us to the following formula: The sale of the annual production of new wealth must bring into circulation enough money so that, when turned over in the channels of business, it will provide a national income sufficient to operate the Nation as a solvent business institution.

RELATIONSHIP OF GROSS FARM INCOME TO NATIONAL INCOME

Since the gross agricultural income represents roughly 80 percent of all new wealth income and largely gages the industrial demand for other products of new wealth, the relationship of agricultural income to national income becomes the governing factor in our economy.

The relationship of agricultural income to factory pay rolls (the best index to the state of industry) and national income averages for all practical purposes 1–1–7. Meaning that each $1 of gross farm income creates $1 of factory pay rolls and $7 of national income or business in the United States.

That formula or relationship is the most important discovery since the signing of the Declaration of Independence and the writing of the Constitution of the United States, because it is the key to an economic democracy. Let us examine it briefly in order that we may realize its importance.

With that definite relationship holding true it makes it possible for a few men who control the speculative markets of the world to bring depression upon a Nation of 130,000,000 people and force them to exist by borrowing from their savings and by placing a mortgage on their future income, and in addition to that, take away their equity in their homes and other real estate.

Ladies and gentlemen, I am sorry to say that that is what happens. In July 1937, for example, the wheat market was in a strong position and our domestic grain buyers bought wheat for $1.14 and $1.15 per bushel as fast as it came to the market. But, a few weeks later the men in control of the grain markets of the world forced the price of wheat downward about 30 cents per bushel. For every 30 cents taken off the price of a bushel of wheat they deprived the man on the factory pay roll of 30 cents and they deprived the American people of $2.10 in collective income.

On the other hand, the formula means that whenever this Nation will use its good common sense and stabilize farm prices in direct proportion to the national income needed for prosperity our depression will be over. And it also means that the farm problem and the question of a price for raw materials is the No. 1 problem of every farmer, laborer, and businessman in the United States.

One of the most interesting examples of the loss we have suffered as a nation because we didn't mark the price of our new wealth properly is a comparison of the years 1928 and 1932, the former a year of prosperity and the latter a year of depression.

The Agricultural Yearbook for 1935 shows that in 1928 our total production of corn, oats, wheat, barley, rye, and flax was 5,333,000,000 bushels. In 1932 our production of the same crops was a little over 1 percent less and totaled 5,253,000,000 bushels. In 1928 the production of our principal meats, pork, beef, mutton, and veal, totaled 17,007,000,000 pounds. In 1932 our production of the same meats was 16,800,000,000 pounds.

The record shows further that in spite of the fact that over 10,000,000 people were unemployed in 1932 we consumed within the United States all but 148,000,000 pounds of this meat, or a little over 1 pound per capita. And we allowed that surplus to reduce the income of the United States $45,000,000,000, an amount equal to the total value of all the farm products produced in the 4-year period 1923–26, inclusive. Yet we claim to be an intelligent people.

If the price for corn and other products had been the same in 1932 as in 1928 it would have been impossible to have a depression, unemployment, and hunger. We had the wealth, but allowed someone else to fix the price of that wealth.

CONSEQUENCE OF FAILING TO STABILIZE FARM PRICES

Failure to stabilize farm prices at the 1926 level, when parity or an equal exchange value prevailed for agriculture, industry, and labor, has deprived this Nation of $233,000,000,000 of national income in the 8½ years beginning January 1, 1930, and ending July 31, 1938, and will cost us an additional loss of $16,000,000,000 in the last 6 months of 1938.

I will file, as part of the record, a table showing the approximate loss each year and a graph showing the relationship of the gross farm income to factory pay rolls and the national income.

Failure to stabilize farm new wealth prices at the level which existed in 1926, when parity or equal exchange value prevailed for agriculture, industry, and labor, has cost this Nation in 8½ years (January 1, 1930, to July 1, 1938, inclusive) approximately $233,000,000,000 of national income which the people might have had, as shown by the following table:

President Roosevelt has said that national income should be brought up to $100,000,000,000 per year. It should be in order to support the present public debt and tax structure, yield an American standard of life for our people and leave something for a savings account.

Ratio figure showing average relationship of farm income to national income is 1 to 7.

Relationship of farm income to labor income equal for all practical purposes. (Farm and labor income varied less than a billion dollars over 17-year period.)

In order that we may have some idea of just what this loss of $233,000,000,000 in national income amounts to, I will break it down into concrete form:

It would have paid all the farm mortgages	$9,000,000,000
It would have paid all the public debt	54,000,000,000
It would have built a million miles of paved roads at $30,000 per mile	30,000,000,000
It would have replaced 5,000,000 condemned homes at $4,000 each	20,000,000,000
It would have purchased all the farm land, livestock, and farm buildings in the United States	57,000,000,000
It would have purchased a new $1,000 auto for every laborer in the United States	40,000,000,000
Then there would be enough left over to give every farmer $1,000 cash for operating expenses	6,000,000,000
And enough more to pay off the railroad debt	17,000,000,000

GRAPHIC PRESENTATION OF RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN AGRICULTURAL INCOME, FACTORY PAY ROLLS, NATIONAL INCOME

The accompanying graph, based on Federal Government records (expressed in approximate terms) of agricultural, factory pay roll, and national income, affords an eloquent explanation of the effect of failure to stabilize basic new wealth income upon which industrial pay rolls and national or collective income are dependent:

On that basis, agricultural income must be brought up to $15,000,000,000 per year, which is entirely possible without resort to subsidies or conflict with any principle of constitutional law.

When we first discovered this formula, 1–1–7, about a year and one-half ago, and applied it to our economy the apparent loss was so enormous that we doubted our findings. I imagine that some of the people who have heard us explain this loss have felt that there was a question as to our sanity.

There is an old saying, however, that after you have made sure you are right, fight toward the goal. For the past 1½ years we have been contacting different groups of people in the United States and have challenged them to break down or disprove the 1–1–7 relationship. They have been unable to do so.

On the other hand we have been able to convince many of them that our formula is correct and that we as a nation have actually lost $233,000,000,000 in that period.

It seems that we have even been able to get the facts to our brain trusters. On November 3, 1938, Dr. Louis H. Bean, economic adviser to the Department of Agriculture, in a speech at Lexington, Ky., pointed out to an audience that the gross farm income is approximately 14 percent of the national income rather than one to seven. But 7 times 14 almost equals 100 percent, so we must admit that Dr. Bean is catching on.

Dr. Bean, however, outbillions our figures and I will quote from his address. "The accumulated losses in our money income, national and farm, contrasted with what our incomes might have been, are enormous. In 1930 our national income fell fourteen billions below the standard I have suggested. In 1932 it was forty-six billions below; in 1937, twenty-three billions; and in 1938, thirty-six billions—a total accumulated loss for the years 1930–38 of around two hundred and ninety-five billions."

The difference into total figures is due to the fact that Dr. Bean uses the year 1929, which was approximately 104 percent of parity, as a base, and we have used the year 1926, which was actually a period of parity exchange relationship, or a period when our dollar in its relationship to commodities was 100 cents.

I notice also that Dr. Bean, in his address, stresses the fact that the farm income depends on the national income when the reverse is true. Dr. Bean should try pumping water out of a well that has no spring flowing into it. Then he would realize that we must have the spring or flow of new wealth before we can have any national income.

As additional proof of our contention, I would like to quote from report No. 1295, prepared by the Senate Agricultural Committee to accompany the Pope-McGill bill, our Nation's last abortive attempt at farm legislation.

On page 14 of this report the committee shows that 1926 was the only year since 1800 that we had a 100-cent dollar in its exchange for the products of different groups. On page 17 of the same report the committee states as follows: "Agriculture demands that the farmer should have a 100-cent dollar; that the purchasing power of the dollar should be fixed and established at that point to serve the best interests of the people, trade, commerce, and industry, and that when that value is once fixed it should be stabilized at such value."

Their intentions seem to have been good, but the result was the passage of a bill which, if carried out as written, will stabilize the farm income at 52 percent instead of 100 percent of parity and will mean a perpetual depression and forced bankruptcy for the United States.

We suggest to the committee that in their next attempt they carry out their intention of giving the farmer a full parity price or a 100-cent dollar.

The cure for depression is to establish a parity relationship for all new wealth produced. Such legislation has been the apparent aim of Congress, but their thinking has been so confused with the many complexes of surplus, foreign trade, the Supreme Court, etc., that I feel it might be well to discuss some of them.

SURPLUS

The surplus problem is the biggest bogeyman of them all and the least understood. Surpluses are created by unequal production due to the vagaries of Nature, and are created by underconsumption due to lower or higher than parity prices. The parity price level is the point of continual maximum consumption.

Under our present system of operation at less than parity prices, we are fighting two surpluses—that of underconsumption and the natural surplus of seasonal production.

Our attempts at production control have been rather futile because the program which we adopted was one of increased production. It is a well-known fact that when a farmer buys a run-down or overcropped farm he seeds it to clover, but not to produce less—to produce more.

Our soil-building program, even though the farmers were led to believe that they were reducing production to obtain a price, will result in greater production. The same result would occur if we had a parity-price relationship. The laws of Nature would force the farmer to rotate his crops with legumes in order that he might produce more. In years of high prices we find that the acres in cultivation are reduced and that in years of low prices the acres of land in tillable crops are increased.

But, strange as it may seem, the records indicate that we never have had a permanent surplus of farm products. Even with the tremendous underconsumption that prevailed in 1932, the record shows a net import of farm products in that year of $7,000,000.

During the 5-year period 1926–30, when the average exchange value of the dollar approximated parity, the record shows that we imported an average of $2,200,000,000 worth of farm products and that our average annual net import was $350,000,000. In other words, we consumed all that we produced in the United States, plus $350,000,000 of foreign farm products each year.

It might be interesting to mention a few of the items that we imported on the average each year during that period. We imported 378,135 head of cattle, 447,000,000 pounds of hides, 144,000,000 pounds of meat products, 76,000,000 pounds of cheese, 253,000,000 pounds of wool, etc., each year.

FOREIGN TRADE

The second complex which we must discuss is that of foreign trade. The very fact that we had a net import of farm products would indicate that the world market for farm products depends on the domestic market in the United States.

Our foreign trade depends on what we buy from other nations and not on what they buy from us. For example, if we would increase our farm prices to the parity level so that our national income would be increased to $85,000,000,000, we would require about $5,000,000,000 of imports. These imports would create the credits for any exports that we might wish to make.

Tariffs do not materially hinder imports and exports. If we were to protect our American market up to the parity level, the demand for foreign products would actually be increased because of the added purchasing power and consumptive demand in the United States.

We consume within the United States about one-half of the world's production of new wealth, and if 50 percent of the world's market were restored to our parity level, it would do much to restore world prosperity.

If we established the value of our dollar at parity, with tariff protection up to that point, the rest of the world could revalue its monetary medium up to that level in much the same way that they increased their price of gold when we increased ours.

THE COST OF A FARM PROGRAM

I will now discuss the question of what a farm program of parity prices will cost the Government. If we will realize that the Government is none other than ourselves, and use the 1–7 relationship of farm income to national income as a guide, a little arithmetic will show a huge profit.

For example, the parity value of all farm products annually produced is approximately $12,000,000,000. With that as a base for our primary gross farm income, the dollar turn-over will create approximately $85,000,000,000 of collective income for the Nation.

If we were to tax this collective income for enough to give away 10 percent of our total production, it would require $1,200,000,000, leaving a net of $83,800,000,000.

Compare this to our national income of about $55,000,000,000 for 1938 and a national deficit of about $4,000,000,000 annually.

In other words, if we had our price level stabilized at parity we could give 10 percent of our farm products to China and increase our national income $32,000,000,000 at the same time.

Our experience during the World War proves this contention. We gave the Allies about $10,000,000,000 worth of goods each year—at least, we haven't been paid for them—and our laboring men were wearing silk shirts while at work and they had the money to pay for them.

WHAT CAN BE DONE?

We now come to the question of how can we establish parity prices for farm products? Can a program be devised to do the job? Yes; we feel that a very simple program to maintain parity prices can be put into operation.

All we need to do is to pattern our farm program after that of our life-insurance companies. Using the law of averages and a little arithmetic they establish the cost of insurance per thousand on a 10-, 20-, or 30-year policy. Reserves are created to take care of unexpected losses, and our State laws require the insurance companies to carry a 40-percent reserve to protect the policyholders. Life insurance, up to this time, has been the soundest business in our financial set-up.

We have the same condition of natural hazards in the production of farm products that life-insurance companies have in death losses. Let us, then, follow the same procedure.

A normal crop at parity prices is the foundation for our prosperity or a sufficient income to operate the Nation as a solvent business institution. Let us use 100 units of new wealth as a basis for a simple analysis of what should be done.

Our first step should be to provide against droughts and other production hazards. Reserves of at least 35 percent should be created on every farm so that in years like 1934 and 1936 we will have our 100 units of wealth, and enough feed for our livestock.

If we produce in excess of normal needs after the reserve has been established, we can add to the reserve as insurance companies do and as we have done with gold, or we can dispose of it and pay ourselves an additional dividend.

For example, supposing we had 10 percent in excess of our reserves and annual requirements. If we could dispose of the excess at parity we would increase our normal prosperity 10 percent, if we dispose of it at 50 percent of parity we would increase our normal prosperity 5 percent. Finally, if we gave it to the Chinese we would still have prosperity because we have the base of 100 units which at parity prices means prosperity.

Legislation providing for handling the farm problem in that way can be, in fact already has been, written and, as mentioned before, was introduced in Congress as the Harrington bill.

The bill provides for a loan of 75 percent of parity on all basic farm crops with the loans callable at parity. Such a loan would have the practical effect of stabilizing grain prices at parity.

At the present time we are using the commodity loan, but the loans have a call date on them such as October 1, and their practical effect is to set the top price and the bottom price under normal conditions. The call date also allows corn processors and millers to use the future market to buy at the low as established by the loan.

The corn trade, on the other hand, is fearful of dumping on the call date and is unwilling to buy because of possible market losses when the loan is called. Under the Harrington bill loans would not be callable until a 35-percent reserve had been established or the price had reached parity.

Such a loan would do two things. It would place the farmer in the same position as the merchant and provide for the orderly marketing of the grain at the parity-price level. Second, the mandatory loan of 75 percent would automatically create the credit dollars needed to operate the Nation.

With the loan callable at parity it would fix the value of the dollar at the parity-price level and, as suggested by the Senate Agricultural Committee, fix the value at 100 cents.

The next step in the bill is to take care of the excess if and when it occurs. In the bill we provide that the Commodity Credit Corporation act collectively for all of us in the disposal of the surplus. The surplus cannot be dumped on the domestic market, thus assuring every dealer that the price is not going to be forced below parity, and it must be sold in the foreign market, to new industries, added to the reserve or by gift to be used as food for the poor, thus avoiding the necessity of community-chest funds, etc.

The direct loss on the excess, if any, must be absorbed by society as a whole, which can easily be done because of the gain of about $32,000,000,000 in national income resulting from parity prices.

Any products subsidized by sale into new industries, although showing a direct loss, will increase the collective income because of the turn-over of the dollar.

For example, a bushel of corn sold at 40 cents to a new industry such as power alcohol would turn over seven times and create $2.80 in national income.

It might be well to say a few words about alcohol. The alcohol industry for power and other industrial purposes is destined to be one of the largest industries in the United States. Oil companies, of course, will at first react against the use of alcohol as a fuel. But if they can be brought to realize that surplus grains can be used for fuel purposes and in that way help to stabilize prices at parity, the additional volume of business resulting from increased national income will more than offset any loss in gallonage through replacement by alcohol.

A simple bill exempting motor fuel containing 10 percent of alcohol from payment of the 1 cent Federal tax on motor fuel would start that industry off at a fast pace and make it possible for it to pay parity prices for raw materials.

This, of course, is an indirect subsidy, but that is the method we have used for many years to help industry.

Many other new industries can be built to consume our raw materials and to employ our idle labor.

The protective tariff and the turn-over of the dollar have been the two contributing factors in making it possible for the 130,000,000 people in the United States to do 50 percent of the world's business. With the aid of the tariff system we maintained the price of what we produced. We protected the home market for our own people, and the turn-over of our money in that market made this a rich nation.

In the words of Abraham Lincoln, "When we trade with ourselves we have both the goods and the money."

TARIFFS

The tariff problem has been the greatest political football this country has ever known. At the present time we have the so-called free-trade party in control, but their record does not make them free traders. They also believe in tariffs.

Through the use of reciprocal-trade agreements they reduced the rates on farm products, while at the same time the steel industry enjoyed the benefits of a tariff system which in effect increased the tariff on steel from $8.14 per ton in 1932 to $14.47 in 1937.

If tariff protection is a good thing for the steel industry, why isn't it also a good thing for agriculture?

Our tariff problem must be based on arithmetic rather than on the power of pressure groups. In the Harrington bill we have devised such tariff protection.

Under the Harrington bill all importers of farm products or competitive products would be required to pay a license fee equivalent to the difference between the landed cost and the domestic parity price at the point of entry plus freight from the nearest rate-basing point. The amount of the fee, being based on price, would move up and down with the world market and would protect us against manipulation of foreign exchange and foreign markets.

Such a tariff for industry and agriculture would make it possible to trade our surplus with other nations without any loss.

For example, if we traded a bushel of corn in the world market at 45 cents per bushel for a pocket knife at the world price of 45 cents when it entered the United States, we would collect a license fee representing the difference between the world and the domestic parity price and in that way absorb the loss on the corn, and vice versa.

I have given you in brief the essential features of a suggested bill. A bill that would give us an economy of parity price relationship, or, as we say it, "pareconomy." The same objective can be obtained by other methods, but after examining all the farm bills that have been written, I feel that the Harrington bill is the most simple and democratic approach to the whole problem.

It has one weakness, if it can be called a weakness, and that is its democratic approach. It depends on the basic foundation of every democratic form of government—the intelligent cooperation of society.

Under the bill dealers are not forced to pay parity prices. We feel that if the measure of the 1–1–7 relationship of the farm dollar to national income is understood, that business will police itself. The man who would pay less than parity for farm products would be public enemy No. 1, and every businessman would be on his trail.

But if it must be done by legislation which will force the dealer to pay parity prices, we will offer no objection.

IN CONCLUSION

In conclusion I would like to impress upon you the importance of the message I have given you. We are losing in daily dollar income about 60 cents per capita, or about $230 per capita for 1938.

This loss of income is resulting mass poverty, the most fertile soil for the various isms that have attacked the world. Even in our own Nation we hear charges and countercharges of communism, fascism, etc. Let us act before it is too late.

We must make this problem of parity prices for new wealth our No. 1 problem. Let's take off our coats and roll up our sleeves and get the job done. Our welfare and our happiness and prosperity are at stake.

Let's forget our political differences, because, after all, parity prices will be the same regardless of what political party introduces and passes the required legislation. We should organize public opinion and ask our Congressmen and Senators to make it their No. 1 problem. Finally, let's stop mortgaging our future, and let's insist that our next Congress stop the racketeering in our economy.

The parity-price structure for farm products will automatically make it possible to balance our Budget within 12 months and make it possible for our Nation to operate as a solvent business institution.

I have given you the key that will unlock the door to a prosperity such as this Nation has never enjoyed.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. TENEROWICZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TENEROWICZ]?

There was no objection.

PROTECT AMERICAN DEMOCRCACY—KEEP OUT OF FOREIGN WARS

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include therein an article by John T. Flynn.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ANGELL]?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, on April 27 I made some observations in the House on the question of whether or not the United States should take sides in a European war. Attention was called to the foreign policy we have followed since the time of George Washington—with one exception, namely, no entangling alliances with foreign nations. I set forth in detail the price we paid for our participation in the World War, giving official figures from several Government departments as to casualties, service-connected disabilities, money costs, and the debts owing to us by foreign governments arising out of the war. From these considerations our course seems clear, namely, that we should not take sides in any European conflict.

Our participation in another foreign war would mean that we would be called upon to play a major part in financing it, as we did in the World War. There are still owing to us foreign obligations of some $13,000,000,000. Our money cost of the World War, including Veterans' Administration, interest on the war debt, and settlement of war claims, amounted to $41,765,000,000 on June 30, 1934. With the present debt in excess of forty billions, we could not finance another such conflict without wrecking our economic and financial structure. To engage in such a conflict would require lodging of dictatorial powers in the Executive and would likely result in the overthrow of our democracy as we have known it through the years.

I believe the American people are almost of one mind, that we should mind our own business, take care of our domestic problems, and enter into no alliances or combinations with foreign powers for the purpose of attempting to shape the course of Old World controversies. Such a course does not mean that America is not sympathetic to the desire to maintain democratic processes throughout the world. It does mean, however, that we want to remain at peace ourselves. We have our own problems here in the Western Hemisphere. We insist upon the maintenance of the Monroe Doctrine, which is a command to foreign nations to keep out of this hemisphere, and as a corollary we must likewise keep out of European territory. The problem of Congress and the administration unquestionably is to steer the course of America in such a fashion that we will not be embroiled in a foreign war. In order to accomplish that end, it is necessary that we refrain from making any alliances—economic, military, or diplomatic—which will place us in a position that will make it difficult for us to avoid participation in such a war if one takes place.

The most potent force to keep America out of war is the Congress and the administration. The President and the Congress represent the American people and are charged with safeguarding the peace of America, and they can, if they so will, keep America out of war.

Mr. John T. Flynn, the economist, discussed some phases of this problem in Tuesday's, May 2, 1939, issue of the Washington Daily News.

Mr. Flynn's article referred to is as follows:

PLAIN ECONOMICS

(By John T. Flynn)

NEW YORK.—A lot of confusion is getting into the criticisms of the President's foreign policy. The most oft-repeated is that, in order to draw attention away from the bad economic situation at home, he is seeking to involve America in Europe's quarrels.

The defense to that criticism takes this form—that it is unthinkable that the President would plunge the country into war to save his political career.

It seems quite clear that no case can be made against the President on the charge that he is trying to put us into war for any reason. The President is probably as eager to keep the country out of war as anyone. Looking carefully over the various statements of this controversy I do not find that any responsible person has charged that the President wants to plunge the country into war.

The only serious criticism I have been able to find is that the President, in his method of seeking to avert war in Europe, is apt to create a situation which will lead us into war.

The President's position is that if war comes in Europe it will be impossible for us to keep out of it. For that reason he believes he should do everything possible to keep Europe out of war.

It is on this point that his critics assail him. They say, first of all, that his method of trying to avert a European war will ultimately involve us. His method very plainly is to first identify the aggressors and then give the impression that this country recognize them as aggressors and then do everything short of war to aid the nations on the other side of the threatened battle line. Therefore, our immense armaments are raised, our battle fleets are mobilized, our tariff laws are invoked to reveal to the aggressors that in their thinking they must keep the force of the United States in mind.

If all this fails and war comes, the President insists that we cannot stay out. His critics say that we most certainly cannot if his present policy is pursued. What will get us into the war if it comes? First, giving full play to the propaganda of one side and suppressing that of the other. Next, an administration constantly selling war scares to the people and keeping them jittery. Next, giving economic and financial aid to one side and using all our power to injure the other, "short of war."

If that is attempted the injured side will certainly seek means to neutralize or, if possible, cripple our aid to the other side. When they do public indignation will flame up here. This flame will be fed by the President and those who support his policy of being economic allies of one warring group.

When things reach this stage, of course, nothing can keep us out. Nothing can keep us out now but a President and a Congress who realize that they represent the American people and are charged with safeguarding the peace of America, who are determined to follow every path that will lead away from war, who will prevent this country from becoming the ally of either side either in a military or economic or financial sense.

An administration like that can keep us out of war. An administration that is determined to take sides from the outset will surely get us into war even though it may be devoted to peace.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct attention at this time to the annual meeting of the United States Chamber of Commerce that is being held in the city of Washington, D. C. In my opinion, this annual meeting of the United States Chamber of Commerce should be helpful to the Congress when economic rather than political questions occupy our attention. These men are all earnest men whose only crime, in the minds of the irresponsible radicals, is that they have been successful. Together they form a great treasure house of sound economic advice which we badly need here in the Capitol. They offer us their help courteously and with respect for our own responsibility.

I hope the Congress will be able to draw from their suggestions something of value and aid in the solution of the many problems confronting our country, particularly the economic and tax structure, under which business is struggling at this time.

SENATE ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced his signature to an enrolled bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 513. An act to provide for the promotion on the retired list of the Navy of Fred G. Leith.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 28 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Friday, May 5, 1939, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS

There will be a meeting of the Committee on Naval Affairs at 10:30 a. m. Friday, May 5, 1939, for the consideration of H. R. 5766, to provide for the acquisition of drydock facilities for the Navy on San Francisco Bay.

COMMITTEE ON ROADS

There will be a meeting of the Roads Committee on Friday, May 5, 1939, at 10 a. m., for the continuation of hearings on H. R. 4541.

COMMITTEE ON LABOR

The Committee on Labor will continue hearings in the caucus room of the House Office Building at 10 a. m. Friday, May 5, 1939, on proposed amendments to the National Labor Relations Act.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, MAY 5, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

God be merciful to us and bless us and cause His face to shine upon us, that Thy way may be known upon earth, Thy saving health among all nations. Let the people praise Thee, O God; let all the people praise Thee. Oh, let the nations be glad and sing for joy: for Thou shalt judge the people righteously and govern the nations upon earth. Let the people praise Thee, O God; let all the people praise Thee. Then shall the earth yield her increase; and God, even our own God, shall bless us. God shall bless us; and all the ends of the earth shall fear Him.

Through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 70. An act to amend section 90 of the Judicial Code, as amended, with respect to the terms of the Federal District Court for the Northern District of Mississippi;

S. 270. An act for the relief of Lofts & Son;

S. 752. An act to amend section 78 of chapter 231, Thirty-sixth United States Statutes at Large (36 Stat. L., sec. 1109), relating to one judicial district to be known as the district of Idaho, and dividing it into four divisions, to be known as the northern, central, southern, and eastern divisions, defining the territory embraced in said divisions, fixing the terms of district court for said divisions, requiring the clerk of the court to maintain an office in charge of himself or deputy at Coeur d'Alene City, Idaho; Moscow, Idaho; Boise City, Idaho; and Pocatello, Idaho; and to authorize the United States District Court for the District of Idaho, by rule or order, to make such changes in the description or names to conform to such changes of description or names of counties in said divisions as the Legislature of Idaho may hereafter make; and

S. 1038. An act for the relief of L. M. Bell and M. M. Bell.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include therein a brief editorial from the Wichita (Kans.) Beacon of May 3, 1939.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUDLOW and Mr. LEMKE asked and were given permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein three brief editorials from the American Metal Market relative to silver.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Delaware?

There was no objection.

Mr. McDOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a petition of various citizens of my town of Wilkinsburg, Pa.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a statement on the fur-farming business in this country.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I take the floor for this moment to direct your attention to the manner in which the Government is spending, yes, wasting, a lot of its money. The able gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] has asked the question a number of times as to where Congress is going to "get the money." This is to direct your attention as to how we spend some of this money and seem to care nothing about it.

This Congress appropriated several million dollars for the New York World's Fair. I am not discussing the merits of the fair. We have recently been advised that Federal aid to the fair will far exceed the estimates and that further appropriations will be requested.

Here is an example of why these estimates will be exceeded, and also an example of how the Government's money is being wasted. I want to direct your attention to an article that appeared in the newspapers this morning, stating that the management of the world's fair erected a plaster of paris statue, supposed to be a likeness of Abraham Lincoln, and paid $4,000 of Federal funds for it. Two thousand dollars was paid to a New Yorker named Louis Slobodkin, the sculptor who designed the statue. The other $2,000 was spent by the Government for enlarging, casting, and constructing a pedestal for it.

Last Saturday, the day before the world's fair opened, Mr. Hays, executive assistant to the World Fair Commission, said the statue was too big, unsatisfactory, and out of place and ought to be removed. So, representing a total cost to the Government of $4,000, the 15-foot figure, called the rail joiner, was unceremoniously carted away from the Federal building, smashed to pieces, and thrown in the rubbish. I realize that these days we seem to give little attention to such comparatively small items as $4,000—$4,000—enough to buy an average Kansas farm absolutely wasted.

Mr. STEARNS of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Hampshire?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEARNS of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, on Monday last I was absent on important business in my district. As a veteran, there is no matter that is of deeper interest to me than the welfare of my fellow veterans; and had I been present when roll call No. 60 was taken, I should, of course, have voted "aye."

NATIONAL AVIATION DAY

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 111) designating August 19 of each year as National Aviation Day.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this resolution has already passed the Senate, and, as I understand, it has a unanimous report from the committee.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I may state to the minority leader that it passed the Senate yesterday afternoon. Further, I believe it might be interesting to know that resolutions identical in character have been introduced in the House individually by 15 Members on both sides of the aisle. The Members who have sponsored these resolutions are Representatives ANDERSON of Missouri, ASHBROOK, MERRITT, MASON, MARTIN of Colorado, MAAS, CARLSON, PETERSON of Florida, SHANLEY, SPARKMAN, SHEPPARD, SIMPSON, VOORHIS of California, WALLGREN, and myself.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Is any cost connected with this?

Mr. RANDOLPH. There will be no cost whatever. This is simply the designation of the day and does not make it a legal holiday, nor does it necessitate any expense on the part of the Government.

Mr. RANKIN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, can the gentleman tell us why this particular date was selected?

Mr. RANDOLPH. August 19 is the birthday of one of the great pioneers in aviation, and this date was selected on which to celebrate an annual aviation day in his honor and in honor of all our air heroes. It comes at a time of the year when it is felt the exercises can be most appropriately handled and will not interfere with school schedules.

Mr. RANKIN. Is that the anniversary of Lindbergh's flight to Europe?

Mr. RANDOLPH. It is not.

Mr. RANKIN. It ought to be.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I agree with the gentleman that Colonel Lindbergh is truly one of the great airmen of the world. It is to honor the achievements of such as he that we are asking for the designation of a national aviation day. August 19 is the birthday of Dr. Orville Wright, who was the first man to successfully fly a heavier-than-air machine. It is thought fitting and proper to designate his birthday as the day upon which to celebrate the rapid progress which has been made in the field of aviation and to make our people increasingly air conscious.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is authorized to designate August 19 of each year as National Aviation Day, and to issue a proclamation calling upon officials of the Government to display the flag of the United States on all Government buildings on that day, and inviting the people of the United States to observe the day with appropriate exercises to further and stimulate interest in aviation in the United States.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RIO GRANDE COMPACT

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 4997) giving the consent and approval of Congress to the Rio Grande compact signed at Santa Fe, N. Mex., on March 18, 1938.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent and approval of Congress is hereby given to the compact signed by the commissioners for the States of Colorado, New Mexico, and Texas at Santa Fe, N. Mex., on March 18, 1938, and thereafter approved by the legislatures of the States of Colorado, New Mexico, and Texas, which compact reads as follows:

RIO GRANDE COMPACT

The State of Colorado, the State of New Mexico, and the State of Texas, desiring to remove all causes of present and future controversy among these States and between citizens of one of these States and citizens of another State with respect to the use of the waters of the Rio Grande above Fort Quitman, Tex., and being moved by considerations of interstate comity, and for the purpose of effecting an equitable apportionment of such waters, have resolved to conclude a compact for the attainment of these purposes, and to that end, through their respective Governors, have named as their respective Commissioners:

For the State of Colorado, M. C. Hinderlider;

For the State of New Mexico, Thomas M. McClure;

For the State of Texas, Frank B. Clayton; who, after negotiations participated in by S. O. Harper, appointed by the President as the representative of the United States of America, have agreed upon the following articles, to wit:

ARTICLE I

(a) The State of Colorado, the State of New Mexico, the State of Texas, and the United States of America are hereinafter designated "Colorado," "New Mexico," "Texas," and the "United States," respectively.

(b) "The Commission" means the agency created by this compact for the administration thereof.

(c) The term "Rio Grande Basin" means all of the territory drained by the Rio Grande and its tributaries in Colorado, in New Mexico, and in Texas above Fort Quitman, including the Closed Basin in Colorado.

(d) The "Closed Basin" means that part of the Rio Grande Basin in Colorado where the streams drain into the San Luis Lakes and adjacent territory, and do not normally contribute to the flow of the Rio Grande.

(e) The term "tributary" means any stream which naturally contributes to the flow of the Rio Grande.

(f) "Transmountain diversion" is water imported into the drainage basin of the Rio Grande from any stream system outside of the Rio Grande Basin, exclusive of the Closed Basin.

(g) "Annual debits" are the amounts by which actual deliveries in any calendar year fall below scheduled deliveries.

(h) "Annual credits" are the amounts by which actual deliveries in any calendar year exceed scheduled deliveries.

(i) "Accrued debits" are the amounts by which the sum of all annual debits exceeds the sum of all annual credits over any common period of time.

(j) "Accrued credits" are the amounts by which the sum of all annual credits exceeds the sum of all annual debits over any common period of time.

(k) "Project storage" is the combined capacity of Elephant Butte Reservoir and all other reservoirs actually available for the storage of usable water below Elephant Butte and above the first diversion to lands of the Rio Grande project, but not more than a total of 2,638,860 acre-feet.

(l) "Usable water" is all water, exclusive of credit water, which is in project storage and which is available for release in accordance with irrigation demands, including deliveries to Mexico.

(m) "Credit water" is that amount of water in project storage which is equal to the accrued credit of Colorado, or New Mexico, or both.

(n) "Unfilled capacity" is the difference between the total physical capacity of project storage and the amount of usable water then in storage.

(o) "Actual release" is the amount of usable water released in any calendar year from the lowest reservoir comprising project storage.

(p) "Actual spill" is all water which is actually spilled from Elephant Butte Reservoir, or is released therefrom for flood control, in excess of the current demand on project storage, and which does not become usable water by storage in another reservoir: Provided, That actual spill of usable water cannot occur until all credit water shall have been spilled.

(q) "Hypothetical spill" is the time in any year at which usable water would have spilled from project storage if 790,000 acre-feet had been released therefrom at rates proportional to the actual release in every year from the starting date to the end of the year in which hypothetical spill occurs; in computing hypothetical spill the initial condition shall be the amount of usable water in project storage at the beginning of the calendar year following the effective date of this compact, and thereafter the initial condition shall be the amount of usable water in project storage at the beginning of the calendar year following each actual spill.

ARTICLE II

The Commission shall cause to be maintained and operated a stream gaging station equipped with an automatic water stage recorder at each of the following points, to wit:

(a) On the Rio Grande near Del Norte above the principal points of diversion to the San Luis Valley;

(b) On the Conejos River near Mogote;

(c) On the Los Pinos River near Ortiz;

(d) On the San Antonio River at Ortiz;

(e) On the Conejos River at its mouths near Los Sauces;

(f) On the Rio Grande near Lobatos;

(g) On the Rio Chama below El Vado Reservoir;

(h) On the Rio Grande at Otowi Bridge near San Ildefonso;

(i) On the Rio Grande near San Acacia;

(j) On the Rio Grande at San Marcial;

(k) On the Rio Grande below Elephant Butte Reservoir;

Similar gaging stations shall be maintained and operated below any other reservoir constructed after 1929, and at such other points as may be necessary for the securing of records required for the carrying out of the compact; and automatic water stage recorders shall be maintained and operated on each of the reservoirs mentioned, and on all others constructed after 1929.

Such gaging stations shall be equipped, maintained, and operated by the Commission directly or in cooperation with an appropriate Federal or State agency, and the equipment, method, and frequency of measurement at such stations shall be such as to produce reliable records at all times.

ARTICLE III

The obligation of Colorado to deliver water in the Rio Grande at the Colorado-New Mexico State line, measured at or near Lobatos, in each calendar year, shall be 10,000 acre-feet less than the sum of those quantities set forth in the two following tabulations of relationship, which correspond to the quantities at the upper index stations:

DISCHARGE OF CONEJOS RIVER

Quantities in thousands of acre-feet

550	326
600	376
650	426

Intermediate quantities shall be computed by proportional parts.

DISCHARGE OF RIO GRANDE EXCLUSIVE OF CONEJOS RIVER

1300	740
1400	840

Intermediate quantities shall be computed by proportional parts.

(4) Rio Grande at Lobatos less Conejos at mouths is the total flow of the Rio Grande at the U. S. G. S. gaging stations near Lobatos, less the discharge of Conejos River at its mouths, during the calendar year.

The application of those schedules shall be subject to the provisions hereinafter set forth and appropriate adjustments shall be made for (a) any change in location of gaging stations; (b) any new or increased depletion of the run-off above inflow index gaging stations; and (c) any transmountain diversions into the drainage basin of the Rio Grande above Lobatos.

In event any works are constructed after 1937 for the purpose of delivering water into the Rio Grande from the Closed Basin, Colorado shall not be credited with the amount of such water delivered, unless the proportion of sodium ions shall be less than 45 percent of the total positive ions in that water when the total dissolved solids in such water exceeds 350 parts per million.

ARTICLE IV

The obligation of New Mexico to deliver water in the Rio Grande at San Marcial, during each calendar year, exclusive of the months of July, August, and September, shall be that quantity set forth in the following tabulation of relationship, which corresponds to the quantity at the upper index station:

DISCHARGE OF RIO GRANDE AT OTOWI BRIDGE AND AT SAN MARCIAL, EXCLUSIVE OF JULY, AUGUST, AND SEPTEMBER

Quantities in thousands of acre-feet
Otowi index Supply (5)	San Marcial index Sulppy (6)

1900	1730
2000	1856
2100	1985
2200	2117

Intermediate quantities shall be computed by proportional parts.

The application of this schedule shall be subject to the provisions hereinafter set forth, and appropriate adjustments shall be made for (a) any change in location of gaging stations; (b) depletion after 1929 in New Mexico at any time of the year of the natural run-off at Otowi Bridge; (c) depletion of the run-off during July, August, and September of tributaries between Otowi Bridge and San Marcial by works constructed after 1937; and (d) any transmountain diversions into the Rio Grande between Lobatos and San Marcial.

Concurrent records shall be kept of the flow of the Rio Grande at San Marcial, near San Acacia, and of the release from Elephant Butte Reservoir, to the end that the records at these three stations may be correlated.

ARTICLE V

If at any time it should be the unanimous finding and determination of the Commission that because of changed physical conditions, or for any other reason, reliable records are not obtainable or cannot be obtained at any of the stream-gaging stations herein referred to, such stations may, with the unanimous approval of the Commission, be abandoned, and with such approval another station, or other stations, shall be established and new measurements shall be substituted which, in the unanimous opinion of the Commission, will result in substantially the same results, so far as the rights and obligations to deliver water are concerned, as would have existed if such substitution of stations and measurements had not been so made.

ARTICLE VI

Commencing with the year following the effective date of this compact, all credits and debits of Colorado and New Mexico shall be computed for each calendar year: Provided, That in a year of actual spill no annual credits nor annual debits shall be computed for that year.

In the case of Colorado, no annual debit nor accrued debit shall exceed 100,000 acre-feet, except as either or both may be caused by hold-over storage of water in reservoirs constructed after 1937 in the drainage basin of the Rio Grande above Lobatos. Within the physical limitations of storage capacity in such reservoirs, Colorado shall retain water in storage at all times to the extent of its accrued debit.

In the case of New Mexico, the accrued debit shall not exceed 200,000 acre-feet at any time, except as such debit may be caused by hold-over storage of water in reservoirs constructed after 1929 in the drainage basin of the Rio Grande between Lobatos and San Marcial. Within the physical limitations of storage capacity in such reservoirs New Mexico shall retain water in storage at all times to the extent of its accrued debit. In computing the magnitude of accrued credits or debits, New Mexico shall not be charged with any greater debit in any one year than the sum of 150,000 acre-feet and all gains in the quantity of water in storage in such year.

The Commission by unanimous action may authorize the release from storage of any amount of water which is then being held in storage by reason of accrued debits of Colorado or New Mexico: Provided, That such water shall be replaced at the first opportunity thereafter.

In computing the amount of accrued credits and accrued debits of Colorado or New Mexico, any annual credits in excess of 150,000 acre-feet shall be taken as equal to that amount.

In any year in which actual spill occurs, the accrued credits of Colorado, or New Mexico, or both, at the beginning of the year shall be reduced in proportion to their respective credits by the amount of such actual spill: Provided, That the amount of actual spill shall be deemed to be increased by the aggregate gain in the amount of water in storage, prior to the time of spill, in reservoirs above San Marcial constructed after 1929: Provided further, That if the Commissioners for the States having accrued credits authorize the release of part, or all, of such credits in advance of spill, the amount so released shall be deemed to constitute actual spill.

In any year in which there is actual spill of usable water, or at the time of hypothetical spill thereof, all accrued debits of Colorado, or New Mexico, or both, at the beginning of the year shall be canceled.

In any year in which the aggregate of accrued debits of Colorado and New Mexico exceeds the minimum unfilled capacity of project storage, such debits shall be reduced proportionally to an aggregate amount equal to such minimum unfilled capacity.

To the extent that accrued credits are impounded in reservoirs between San Marcial and Courchesne, and to the extent that accrued debits are impounded in reservoirs above San Marcial, such credits and debits shall be reduced annually to compensate for evaporation losses in the proportion that such credits or debits bore to the total amount of water in such reservoirs during the year.

ARTICLE VII

Neither Colorado nor New Mexico shall increase the amount of water in storage in reservoirs constructed after 1929 whenever there is less than 400,000 acre-feet of usable water in project storage: Provided, That if the actual releases of usable water from the beginning of the calendar year following the effective date of this compact, or from the beginning of the calendar year following actual spill, have aggregated more than an average of 790,000 acre-feet per annum, the time at which such minimum stage is reached shall be adjusted to compensate for the difference between the total actual release and releases at such average rate; provided further, that Colorado or New Mexico, or both, may relinquish accrued credits at any time, and Texas may accept such relinquished water, and in such event the State, or States, so relinquishing shall be entitled to store water in the amount of the water so relinquished.

ARTICLE VIII

During the month of January of any year the Commissioner for Texas may demand of Colorado and New Mexico, and the Commissioner for New Mexico may demand of Colorado, the release of water from storage reservoirs constructed after 1929 to the amount of the accrued debits of Colorado and New Mexico, respectively, and such releases shall be made by each at the greatest rate practicable under the conditions then prevailing, and in proportion to the total debit of each, and in amounts, limited by their accrued debits, sufficient to bring the quantity of usable water in project storage to 600,000 acre-feet by March 1 and to maintain this quantity in storage until April 30, to the end that a normal release of 790,000 acre-feet may be made from project storage in that year.

ARTICLE IX

Colorado agrees with New Mexico that in event the United States or the State of New Mexico decides to construct the necessary works for diverting the waters of the San Juan River, or any of its tributaries, into the Rio Grande, Colorado hereby consents to the construction of said works and the diversion of waters from the San Juan River, or the tributaries thereof, into the Rio Grande in New Mexico, provided the present and prospective uses of water in Colorado by other diversions from the San Juan River, or its tributaries, are protected.

ARTICLE X

In the event water from another drainage basin shall be imported into the Rio Grande Basin by the United States or Colorado or New Mexico, or any of them jointly, the State having the right to the use of such water shall be given proper credit therefor in the application of the schedules.

ARTICLE XI

New Mexico and Texas agree that upon the effective date of this compact all controversies between said States relative to the quantity or quality of the water of the Rio Grande are composed and settled; however, nothing herein shall be interpreted to prevent recourse by a signatory state to the Supreme Court of the United States for redress should the character or quality of the water, at the point of delivery, be changed hereafter by one signatory State to the injury of another. Nothing herein shall be construed as an admission by any signatory State that the use of water for irrigation causes increase of salinity for which the user is responsible in law.

ARTICLE XII

To administer the provisions of this compact there shall be constituted a Commission composed of one representative from each State, to be known as the Rio Grande Compact Commission. The State engineer of Colorado shall be ex-officio the Rio Grande Compact Commissioner for Colorado. The State engineer of New Mexico shall be ex officio the Rio Grande Compact Commissioner for New Mexico. The Rio Grande Compact Commission for Texas shall be appointed by the Governor of Texas. The President of the United States shall be requested to designate a representative of the United States to sit with such Commission, and such representative of the United States, if so designated by the President, shall act as Chairman of the Commission without vote.

The salaries and personal expenses of the Rio Grande Compact Commissioners for the three States shall be paid by their respective States, and all other expenses incident to the administration of this compact, not borne by the United States, shall be borne equally by the three States.

In addition to the powers and duties hereinbefore specifically conferred upon such Commission, and the members thereof, the jurisdiction of such Commission shall extend only to the collection, correlation, and presentation of factual data and the maintenance of records having a bearing upon the administration of this compact, and, by unanimous action, to the making of recommendations to the respective States upon matters connected with the administration of this compact. In connection therewith, the Commission may employ such engineering and clerical aid as may be reasonably necessary within the limit of funds provided for that purpose by the respective States. Annual reports compiled for each calendar year shall be made by the Commission and transmitted to the Governors of the signatory States on or before March 1 following the year covered by the report. The Commission may, by unanimous action, adopt rules and regulations consistent with the provisions of this compact to govern their proceedings.

The findings of the Commission shall not be conclusive in any court or tribunal which may be called upon to interpret or enforce this compact.

ARTICLE XIII

At the expiration of every 5-year period after the effective date of this compact, the Commission may, by unanimous consent, review any provisions hereof which are not substantive in character and which do not affect the basic principles upon which the compact is founded, and shall meet for the consideration of such questions on the request of any member of the Commission: Provided, however, That the provisions hereof shall remain in full force and effect until changed and amended within the intent of the compact by unanimous action of the Commissioners and until any changes in this compact are ratified by the legislatures of the respective States and consented to by the Congress, in the same manner as this compact is required to be ratified to become effective.

ARTICLE XIV

The schedules herein contained and the quantities of water herein allocated shall never be increased nor diminished by reason of any increases or diminution in the delivery or loss of water to Mexico.

ARTICLE XV

The physical and other conditions characteristic of the Rio Grande and peculiar to the territory drained and served thereby, and to the development thereof, have actuated this compact and none of the signatory States admits that any provisions herein contained establishes any general principle or precedent applicable to other interstate streams.

ARTICLE XVI

Nothing in this compact shall be construed as affecting the obligations of the United States of America to Mexico under existing treaties or to the Indian tribes, or as impairing the rights of the Indian tribes.

ARTICLE XVII

This compact shall become effective when ratified by the legislatures of each of the signatory States and consented to by the Congress of the United States. Notice of ratification shall be given by the Governor of each State to the Governors of the other States and to the President of the United States, and the President of the United States is requested to give notice to the Governors of each of the signatory States of the consent of the Congress of the United States.

In witness whereof, the commissioners have signed this compact in quadruplicate original, one of which shall be deposited in the archives of the Department of State of the United States of America and shall be deemed the authoritative original, and of which a duly certified copy shall be forwarded to the Governor of each of the signatory States.

Done at the city of Santa Fe, in the State of New Mexico, on the 18th day of March, in the year of our Lord 1938.

M. C. HINDERLIDER.
THOMAS M. MCCLURE.
FRANK B. CLAYTON.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

POSTAL EMPLOYEES

Mr. WHELCHEL. Mr. Speaker, by authority of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 3812) granting postal employees credit for Saturday in annual and sick leave law, thereby conforming to the 40-hour work-week or 5-day-week law, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 2, line 9, after "General", insert ": Provided, That the 15 days' leave shall be credited at the rate of 1¼ days for each month of actual service."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. WHELCHEL. Mr. Speaker, by the same authority I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 3230) to amend the statutes providing punishment for transmitting threatening communications, with Senate amendments, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments as follows:

Page 3, line 22, after "thereon", insert ": Provided, That any defendant in an indictment hereunder, relating to communications originating in the United States, shall, upon motion duly made, be entitled as a matter of right to be tried in the district court of the United States in which the matter mailed or otherwise transmitted was first set in motion; that is, in the mails or in commerce between the States."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from Georgia explain how the Senate amendments affect the House bill?

Mr. WHELCHEL. The Senate simply adds a proviso, Mr. Speaker, as reported by the press, and that proviso carries throughout the bill wherever its necessity is called for. The gentleman understands that this bill passed the House some days ago and is to amend the statute providing punishment for transmitting threatening communications in the mail.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Do the amendments change the purpose of the bill in any degree?

Mr. WHELCHEL. Not at all.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MILK INVESTIGATION BY DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA COMMITTEE

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the special subcommittee investigating the milk situation in the District of Columbia may be allowed to sit during sessions of the House today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks, and to include therein a resolution from the Legislature of Puerto Rico in behalf of the coffee growers.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Puerto Rico?

There was no objection.

DETENTION OF CERTAIN ALIENS

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5643) to invest the circuit courts of appeals of the United States with original and exclusive jurisdiction to review the order of detention of any alien ordered deported from the United States whose deportation or departure from the United States otherwise is not effectuated within 90 days after the date the warrant of deportation shall have become final; to authorize such detention orders in certain cases; to provide places for such detention; and for other purposes.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is not a quorum present.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 65]

Allen, Pa.	Elston	Jeffries	Reed, Ill.
Bates, Ky.	Evans	Johns	Robertson
Boykin	Fay	Jones, Ohio	Romjue
Buckler, Minn.	Fitzpatrick	Kee	Routzohn
Buckley, N. Y.	Flaherty	Kelly	Sabath
Bulwinkle	Flannagan	Kennedy, Michael	Schwert
Burch	Leland M. Ford	Kirwan	Sirovich
Byrne, N. Y.	Fulmer	Landis	Smith, Ill.
Byron	Gerlach	Lord	Smith, Maine
Chapman	Gifford	McReynolds	Smith, Wash.
Claypool	Gillie	Mansfield	Smith, W. Va.
Curley	Gross	Marshall	Sumners, Tex.
Darden	Hancock	Monkiewicz	Talle
Dies	Healey	Myers	Wadsworth
Ditter	Heinke	Oliver	White, Idaho
Douglas	Hill	Osmers	White, Ohio
Doxey	Hoffman	Peterson, Fla.
Elliott	Horton	Reece, Tenn.

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and fifty-nine Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

FEDERAL FOOD, DRUG, AND COSMETIC ACT

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 5762) to provide for temporary postponement of the operations of certain provisions of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. LEE, CHAPMAN, and MAPES.

DETENTION OF CERTAIN ALIENS PENDING GRANT OF PASSPORTS OR OTHER DEPARTURE ARRANGEMENTS

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 5643.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 5643, with Mr. THOMASON in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the first reading of the bill will be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MASSINGALE] 10 minutes.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, I want to speak for a few minutes on what is known as the Hobbs bill, which we are now considering, H. R. 5643, and to give my views as clearly as I can on this piece of legislation.

I believe that the bill, though drawn by a gentleman of splendid legal attainments, is unconstitutional. I think it is an unfortunate bill to be presented to this House under existing conditions. I believe nobody would gainsay the fact that under ordinary procedure followed in the courts of America, there are just two methods prescribed for bringing a man to court on a criminal charge. One is by presentment on information and the other is by indictment by a grand jury. There are no other summary remedies or procedures by which a man can be tried, convicted, and incarcerated, that I know anything about. This bill endeavors to authorize the imprisonment of certain classes of aliens for indeterminate and indefinite terms without any law authorizing such to be done. My contention is that this act would be unconstitutional because it denies to the persons who may be involved the equal operation of the public laws of this country.

It is unconstitutional further, in my judgment, because it does not operate with any degree of uniformity whatever.

It is further unconstitutional by reason of its uncertainty, in that the punishment that might be inflicted under this law, if it should become a law, would not operate alike to any two men charged with the violation of the same law, unless they might happen to come from the same foreign jurisdiction. The right to deport an alien does not include any right of indefinite imprisonment under the guise of waiting an opportunity for deportation. That has been expressly held by the courts of this country.

This bill does not define any crime or does not define it to be a crime against the laws of the United States for a man to reside here after he is subject to deportation or after an order of deportation has been entered against him by the Secretary of Labor. This bill, if it should be enacted into law, places a higher responsibility, authority, and jurisdiction on the Secretary of Labor than it does in the courts of the country. Briefly speaking, this bill means nothing more nor less than this: If the Secretary of Labor should conclude that a person ought to be deported for violation of some rule or law of the Government of the United States, she shall have the right to put that man in prison, in a stockade, in a detention camp somewhere to be established in the United States, for how long a time? Until such time as he can get his travel papers or his passport from the country whence he came, and you do not know how long he is going to remain in jail.

I will give you a little illustration of the operation of the bill, as I understand it. I do not like to come here and oppose a bill from my own committee, especially when proposed by so eminent a gentleman as the author of this bill, but I cannot vote for a bill of this kind. What little legal learning I possess absolutely forbids that I surrender what I regard as an American right and adopt some Hitlerism philosophy, and transplant it over here to govern us in this country. That is what this means.

I want to give you an illustration of how, according to my judgment, the bill might not operate with any degree of uniformity on two fellows deported for the same offense. Suppose one of those men was a citizen of Great Britain at that time. Under this bill, whenever the passport arrived from Great Britain, we can deport that fellow, found guilty of a violation of some of the immigration laws of this country, and he may not be here 60 or 90 days, just a reasonable time, in order that he might be deported.

But suppose that the fellow was a citizen of Czechoslovakia. He had as much right to come into the United States as a citizen of Great Britain, but there is no Czechoslovakia any more. There is nobody there to issue him a passport to go back home, unless he can get it out of Hitler. Now, what happens? Suppose he can never get his travel papers from Czechoslovakia or from any ruler or dictator who has seized that country; what does it mean? Under the terms of this bill it simply means that the Secretary of Labor has the right, simply as a Department head of the Government of the United States, to keep that poor devil in the penitentiary or in a stockade or in a detention camp, whatever you call it, so long as he lives. [Applause].

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE].

Mr. GWYNNE. Mr. Chairman, I believe this to be a very good bill. I will not take up the time of the Committee in explaining the bill, because I dare say that will be done by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS].

Let me suggest, however, an amendment to this bill which I trust will be adopted. If you will turn to page 6 you will notice that an alien may file a petition with the circuit court of appeals in the circuit in which he is detained. The present bill provides, however, that the decision of that court shall be final. That is, there would be no appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. It is my judgment that the usual appeal should be allowed in this case as is allowed in every other case. I have several reasons for that.

In the first place, we now have instituted a very efficient system of appeals to the Supreme Court. I would not like to see it disrupted. Furthermore, I doubt the constitutionality of any law which prohibits any person from going to the Supreme Court on a constitutional question. I think an amendment will be offered along this line and I hope it will be adopted by the Committee.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. Is it the gentleman's opinion that the present wording of the bill precludes any appeal to the Supreme Court?

Mr. GWYNNE. I presume it does.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield.

Mr. GWYNNE. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Are the United States district courts to be deprived of jurisdiction in these cases?

Mr. GWYNNE. As I say, an amendment is to be offered relative to appeals.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Frequently the circuit court of appeals is in another State from that in which the person concerned may live. I would ask the gentleman if his committee distrusts the district courts of the United States to such an extent that they are proposing to deprive them of the jurisdiction they have always had in immigration cases?

Mr. GWYNNE. No; I am sure that is not the case.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE. I yield.

Mr. WALTER. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the present methods of presenting these matters before the courts are in no wise affected and that the usual method, namely, habeas corpus, will still exist and is in no wise affected by this act.

Mr. GWYNNE. The gentleman is entirely correct.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE. I must decline to yield for the present. Now let me say a word as to the constitutionality of the bill. I believe this bill is constitutional. In 5 minutes one cannot make much of an argument, but I will outline what my argument would be if I had the time. When you test the constitutionality of any statute you must determine it by asking three questions: First, is the subject of the legislation within the powers of Congress? We all agree that it is. Deportation, of course, is within the legislative powers of Congress. Second, is this particular legislation reasonably incident to that power and a reasonable method and means of carrying out the right to deport? Some say that it is not because we provide for detention. We think of detention ordinarily as punishment for crime, but let me remind you that there are many times when detention may overtake a person even though he is guilty of no crime whatever. To give you a few illustrations of what I mean, a person may be accused of crime and may be detained even without bail. A person may be insane and may be detained. A person may be detained by the Government in aid of enforcing various quarantine laws. It is true that the detention must not go beyond the necessities of the case and must have some regard, of course, for the rights of the individual, and must not detain him more than necessary to carry out the policy of the Government—in this case to effectuate deportation.

If you will examine this bill, you will find that the rights of the alien who is detained are carefully safeguarded. He can be admitted to bail, for example.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GWYNNE. The third question on the test of constitutionality is, Does the law itself run counter to any specific provision of the Constitution? It has been pointed out, or will be, that certain decisions of the United States Supreme Court have already held this type of legislation unconstitutional. I have read these cases but, far from arriving at any such conclusion, I am satisfied the cases hold that this type of legislation would be clearly constitutional. For example, there is the case of Wong Wing against the United States. In that case the Government tried to make the presence of an alien, after he had been ordered deported, a crime, and punishable as such. The Supreme Court did not even say you could not make that a crime. As I understand their holding in that case it was that if you do make it a crime and punish it by hard labor, for example, you must, under the fifth and sixth amendments to the Constitution, give the man the right of trial that any criminal has.

This is in no sense a criminal statute. In no sense does it impose any criminal punishment whatever; and I think the author of the bill has drawn it very carefully to eliminate any notion whatever that this is a criminal statute. This is a detention statute only and it is in the aid of deportation, which is clearly within the right of Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER].

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, it is essential in the consideration of this bill to bear in mind the fact that it deals with a class of people that certainly ought not to be given any great consideration. This act does not apply to an alien unless he has been at least twice convicted of a felony involving moral turpitude, unless he has been convicted of the violation of the so-called White Slave Act, unless he has been convicted of a violation of the narcotic laws, and has been ordered deported because of the commission of one or more of these offenses.

Mr. GWYNNE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. WALTER. I shall be pleased to.

Mr. GWYNNE. Has the gentleman received a communication from the C. I. O. relative to this bill and relative to their position in regard to it?

Mr. WALTER. I received a communication signed by Mr. Leo Pressman, who, I understand, is general counsel for the C. I. O. I cannot make myself feel that the C. I. O., or any other organization, would be willing to take the position that they are opposing a measure that removes from our society a vicious, un-American class of aliens.

Whether or not that communication was official or Mr. Pressman's own undertaking I do not know. I should like to believe, however, it was Mr. Pressman's own undertaking, and not the official act of that organization.

During the course of examination of charges recently made against the Secretary of Labor it became apparent to the members of the Committee on the Judiciary that our solemn mandates and our laws could be very easily thwarted through refusal of certain foreign countries to recognize the sovereignty that is ours. There were many cases, in some of which the Secretary of Labor was criticized for not deporting aliens, in which deportation warrants had issued after hearing and after all of the safeguards that are thrown about these people had been taken, where the countries of which these aliens were nationals refused to grant a visa to the alien against whom the deportation warrant had issued. I am of the opinion that in many cases it was deliberately done in order not to have these people returned to their shores.

Let me say if they are not good enough for Russia, Austria, Germany, or any of these other countries, then they are not good enough for America. [Applause.]

Mr. SACKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SACKS. Does this act include those who were convicted under the eighteenth amendment, for instance, where the courts held a violation of that act was a felony?

Mr. WALTER. No; it does not apply, in my opinion, because there has never been the deportation of an alien for violation of a liquor law in the history of our country.

Mr. SACKS. Could it be applied?

Mr. ROBSION of Kenucky. They have to be convicted within 5 years.

Mr. WALTER. No; the gentleman is mistaken. They have to be convicted of more than one felony involving moral turpitude no matter how long they have been in the United States, or they must have been convicted and sentenced to a year in prison for the commission of a felony involving moral turpitude within 5 years of their admission into the United States.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GAVAGAN. I would like the gentleman to inform me if he has given any consideration to the ex post facto effect of this bill?

Mr. WALTER. Yes. Our committee gave very serious consideration to that matter, and we find it would apply to approximately 460 alien criminals who have been ordered deported and who are now walking the streets of America today.

Mr. GAVAGAN. If it has ex post facto effect, is it not clearly unconstitutional?

Mr. WALTER. I do not think it is unconstitutional, because, after all, this is not an attempt to punish anyone for the commission of a crime. It is merely an attempt to carry out our own method of ridding our shores of undesirable criminal aliens.

Mr. BENDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BENDER. Will the gentleman explain whether this measure is retroactive? I have been told that if such a crime as outlined by the gentleman had been committed 25 years ago, or two crimes had been committed some years ago, and the alien has since married and has a family, he is subject to the provisions of this act. Is that correct?

Mr. WALTER. That is correct, if a deportation warrant has issued.

Mr. BENDER. Would a deportation warrant be issued considering the crimes that were already committed?

Mr. WALTER. Yes.

Mr. BENDER. Could a deportation now be issued as a result of those crimes that were committed many years ago?

Mr. WALTER. That is right; except it is not likely that would occur.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. I want to make a suggestion in answer to the question propounded by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SACKS]. These must be live or pending cases. Where a warrant of deportation has been issued and the person has been released because the country of origin will not receive him, and is at large today on his own recognizance, or on a bond.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Does the gentleman seek to justify the constitutionality of this bill on the basis that the detention is incident to the deportation proceedings, and that therefore it is a civil proceeding?

Mr. WALTER. Precisely.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. But when that detention becomes unreasonable it is no longer incidental to deportation. Then does the gentleman still deem that detention incident to the deportation proceeding, or does he deem that to be punishment in addition to that of deportation?

Mr. WALTER. It is not punishment in any sense of the word, and I may say to the gentleman from New York that no matter how long this alien criminal must be detained I think it is advisable that we take those people out of circulation. [Applause.]

Mr. MARCANTONIO. That is not the issue.

Mr. WALTER. During the course of the discussion on the rule the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN] said:

> I say the regrettable part of this bill is that it puts too much power in the hands of the Secretary of Labor, a Department that has continuously demonstrated its inefficiency and its neglect in dealing with these aliens.

May I say that this bill does not place any more power in the hands of the Secretary of Labor than the Secretary of Labor already has, and has had for a good many years.

As far as the refusal of the Secretary of Labor to exercise properly the powers given her is concerned, there is not a scintilla of truth in that accusation. In the one case about which the splendid and capable Secretary of Labor was criticized—that is, the Strecker case—it was found on investigation that Mr. Strecker's deportation was ordered a year and a half before a passport could be secured. The Secretary of Labor was criticized for not doing that which she was unable to do because of either connivance on the part of the country of which Mr. Strecker was a national or its refusal to recognize our laws.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I should like to hear what the gentleman has to say in answer to the point made by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MASSINGALE].

Mr. WALTER. I believe I can best reply to the gentleman's question by saying that in my judgment my very dear friend from Oklahoma is mistaken about what this bill does. The gentleman regards this detention as a punishment for the commission of a crime and then on that false premise discusses the methods of prosecuting for the commission of a crime. This bill does not attempt to punish anyone for committing any crime.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CELLER. Would the gentleman say that detention by the Secretary of Labor for 5 years, or 10 years, because there is no limitation in the bill, is merely incident to the deportation process?

Mr. WALTER. Yes; I say it is merely incident to the deportation process and justified because of its being the only method of carrying out our sovereign powers which have already been asserted.

Mr. CELLER. Would the gentleman say that is a deprivation of liberty?

Mr. WALTER. It is not a deprivation of liberty within the meaning of the Constitution.

Mr. CELLER. I disagree with the gentleman.

Mr. WALTER. That is too bad. [Applause.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON].

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, these are unusual times, and we must be prepared for any eventuality. I believe every alien in this country who has been here for any length of time and has not taken the trouble to take out citizenship papers is a potential enemy in time of stress. [Applause.]

The world is sitting on a powder keg. We see heads of governments taunt and flaunt each other. Only last Friday the chief of a great government broadcast to the world a message. I for one resented it. [Applause.]

I have reference to Herr Hitler's amazing address of last Friday in reply to Mr. Roosevelt's proposal for a 10-year moratorium. If he did not insult, he at least made sport of our President, as witness the following extract from his speech:

> You and I, Mr. President, came to power at the same time and you had resources at your disposal, Mr. President, which excelled ours a hundred times. * * * I am sure that you have found it so easy to solve all your problems that now you turn to the world at large.

A sly dig, was it not?

What business is it of Hitler's that there are 11,000,000 Americans out of work? He does not have to feed them.

What business is it of Hitler's if the President has failed to keep the promises he made to the American people in 1932? It is not he who has sweated and suffered as a result.

True, we have great and grave problems here at home, but we have done much. Our President has created a national debt that would buy several Germanys. I defy Hitler to match that debt. [Laughter.]

Those who believe in the philosophy of the New Deal are proud of W. P. A. It is bigger, better, and more expensive than any in all the world. [Laughter.] Indeed, we are so proud of our set-up that we have had W. P. A. exhibits at the world fairs in London and Paris for all the world to see, and the activities of that organization are now being displayed in a beautiful $500,000 building at the world's fair in New York. I defy Herr Hitler to produce anything that compares to our W. P. A. in kind, quantity, or quality. It simply cannot be done.

If we want to put up "hands off" signs in South America, that is our business. If we want to interfere in Asia or Europe, that is also our right. We now have in power a broad-minded administration. While it is ostensibly wedded to democracy, it is not above showing royal honors to visiting dictators from abroad if they are our kind, as witness the splendid pageant we put on for the dictator from Nicaragua this noon, when we held a huge parade in his honor. Thousands of soldiers, sailors, and marines, with scores of tanks that tore up the pavements on our streets, antiaircraft, artillery, and cavalry paraded down Constitution Avenue in his honor. Heading the parade was a White House limousine bearing that great Democrat, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, and the stern dictator from Nicaragua, sitting side by side, carrying on an amiable conversation, thus proving that the lamb and the lion can be made to lie down side by side in peace. Overhead droned hundreds of aircraft burning the taxpayers' money.

Let me say to Herr Hitler that if we want to see examples of militarism and military splendor it is not necessary for us to journey to Berlin and Rome to do so. We can put on as good a military show as they. We have money to burn for that and other purposes.

Let Herr Hitler mind his own business and we will do likewise—maybe. [Applause.]

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentlewoman from New York [Mrs. O'DAY].

Mrs. O'DAY. Mr. Chairman, 3 or 4 years ago Sinclair Lewis wrote a novel relating how the United States, the greatest democracy in the world, became a totalitarian state, not overnight or all of a sudden by the edict of one man but because its citizens neglected to guard their civil liberties. Through carelessness or indifference they relinquished those liberties one by one until such time as a ruthless minority seized the reins of government and established a totalitarian state.

This novel is a very exciting book. It is fantastic, but in reading it you say to yourself, "It can't happen here," which, by the way, is the name of the book. "It can't happen here," but it can happen here, and if this bill becomes law we will have taken the first step along the road Sinclair Lewis points out to us.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. O'DAY. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALTER. I believe that in the gentlewoman's State there is provided a penalty of incarceration for life for criminals who have committed three felonies.

Mrs. O'DAY. Has not that law been repealed?

Mr. CELLER. If the gentlewoman will yield, I may say that in the law of our State there is a due-process provision, and there is provision for jury trial and hearing of evidence before an impartial tribunal. That law does not give to an executive officer the right to apprehend any man and put him into any kind of a camp or place of detention.

Mr. WALTER. In this case the man has already had two jury trials.

Mrs. O'DAY. I am not a lawyer. I am told this bill is unconstitutional, but that I do not know. I do know, however, that it is a negation of every idea and policy and principle that our country holds most dear. I can imagine with what satisfaction Hitler will learn that his emissaries in this country have so influenced Congress that it is following his example and setting up detention or concentration camps during peacetime. Of course, they are not called concentration camps, they are called detention camps, but Hitler knows as well as anyone else how swiftly a detention camp can be transformed into a concentration camp.

This bill is a vicious and un-American bill and should be defeated. [Applause.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER].

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I read the novel to which the lady from New York refers and I did not get just the same reaction she did. That novel demonstrates that governments are usually destroyed in one of two ways: Firstly, by war; secondly, by the people, through their legislative authority, yielding up to the executive the powers that the people in their constitution reserved to themselves.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Not just now.

It seems to me that if we pursue that course and yield day after day and session after session to the Executive the powers which the Congress has, the time will come when we have surrendered sufficient powers so that all that stands between the American people and a dictatorship is the desire or the inclination of the Executive to be a dictator. He will have the Army to enforce those powers. If the Congress continues to surrender its functions, we will bring about by evolution a dictatorship just as potential as a dictatorship brought about by force. Yes, my friend from New York, it may happen in America. But all that has nothing to do with this bill.

I think when we come to consider legislation there are always two propositions to which the Congress should give consideration: Firstly, Is the proposal necessary or desirable? We do not want to enact any legislation that is not necessary or is not desirable.

Secondly, is it constitutional? We do not want to enact any legislation—and should not under our oaths—that we honestly believe to be unconstitutional.

Now, so far as the constitutionality of this bill is concerned, I have no concern. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE] has stated the constitutional question correctly. I shall not repeat, but do concur in his opinion.

The Supreme Court of the United States has repeatedly held that the right to exclude or to expel aliens is an inherent and inalienable right of every sovereign and independent nation. The right of the United States in this regard stands unchallenged. The right to detain an alien subject to deportation is but a necessary incident of the right to exclude or deport that alien.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Not just now. I am sorry, but I do want to make a statement. I want to be courteous.

Let there be no mistake as to whom this bill affects. The Bureau of Immigration advises that during the last year in 460 cases aliens, who had been ordered deported by the proper authorities, could not be deported because of the failure or refusal of the foreign governments to grant passports for their return to the lands of their origin. In other words, the duly constituted authorities of our Government, under constitutional laws enacted by the Congress, determined that these 460 persons were subject to deportation, were undesirable citizens, were aliens who did not think enough of our country to become citizens. Notwithstanding all of this, simply because some foreign nation refused to permit these undesirable aliens to return to their homes, there was nothing that the United States could do about it. It hardly seems possible that a condition exists where this type of alien is permitted to thumb his nose at our laws and our authority, and that we can do nothing about it. This bill is a step in the direction to vitalize our immigration law.

This is not a criminal law. It is a civil procedure. No alien can be accused of any crime under this law. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MASSINGALE] proceeds upon the theory that the aliens affected by this bill are charged with some crime or violation of the statute laws of our land and are, therefore, entitled to trial by jury before they can be deported. Our law provides the specifications for deportation of undesirable aliens. For instance, if an alien is a Communist and advocates the overthrow of our Government by force and violence, then he is deportable. If an alien under certain conditions commits crime and is found guilty in the courts of a felony involving moral turpitude, then he is subject to deportation. There is nothing complicated or subtle in this reasoning, and the Government may proceed to send the alien back to the land from whence he came. However, under the law of nations the United States cannot ship to any other nation any undesirable alien found within our borders unless that nation grants to the alien a passport or reentry permit. Let us take Communist Russia for example. Communists enter this country from Russia, either legally or illegally. Then if one of them so conducts himself as to make him subject to deportation and our officials proceed to deport him, giving him the protection of our constitutional right of habeas corpus and all the safeguards of the courts, and the procedure is legal and regular, and the only thing that prevents the return of this undesirable alien to his native Russia is the refusal of that country to cooperate with the United States in these circumstances, Russia should not be permitted to prevent this country carrying out its law.

The Bureau of Immigration advises that about 50 persons will be affected each year if this bill becomes a law. Now, the American people do not want these Communists, organizers, agitators, and promoters of communistic philosophy creating disturbances and trouble in this country. Our people want to send them back from whence they came. On the other hand, the Third Internationale in Russia wants to spread the gospel of the Bolsheviki throughout the world. They are awaiting the day of the great revolution, and nothing serves their purpose better than to have their advocates and representatives in the United States. Of course, there is a very good reason, therefore, why they will not grant permits whereby these agents in the United States may be expelled from the United States. Believe me, however, if this bill becomes a law, and there is a possibility that these radical representatives and proponents of this foreign doctrine may be detained in places like Ellis Island, they will have no trouble in getting the consent of their mother countries for their return.

This bill implements the deportation law but does not affect all deportable aliens. In order that I may be most liberal I quote from the minority report filed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER], wherein he says that this bill "relates only to aliens who fall into the following categories: (1) Criminals, (2) violators of the narcotic laws, (3) anarchists and kindred classes, and (4) immoral cases."

Now is there any good reason why any alien criminal, who has committed a crime involving moral turpitude and is deportable under the laws of our country, should be permitted the same privileges as our law-abiding citizens and run at large in our midst? Is there any reason why the alien narcotic peddler, who goes about the country peddling poison and death to all those weak souls who will buy, should have protection? Is there any reason why an alien anarchist, who is deportable, should enjoy the freedom of our land? And last, but not least, is there any reason why the alien procurer, the violator of the white-slave law, those who profit and live by the vice, degradation, and immorality of our womanhood, should be permitted to remain with us in violation of the immigration laws?

It seems to me that some of our friends are showing more concern for these four groups affected by this bill than they are about our citizens, our young womanhood and manhood, and the preservation of those things which mean so much to America.

It is insisted here that the enactment of this law means the confinement in concentration camps of large numbers of aliens who reside in this country, and who have been residents of this country for many years, establishing homes and rearing families. The destruction of these homes by a ruthless government, cruel separation of families, and the herding of these aliens in stockades is pictured. Now, this is impossible under any fair interpretation of this bill. In the first place, the bill explicitly provides that those coming within the law may be—

> Confined, though not at hard labor, until such time as deportation shall have become feasible, or departure from the United States otherwise shall have been arranged, or until the Secretary of Labor, upon such evidence of good cause, shall order the release of such alien, temporarily or permanently, on such bond as may be required, with or without rescinding the warrant of deportation.

Parenthetically, I might observe that if the present Secretary of Labor proceeds as leniently in the enforcement of the deportation laws of the future as she has in the past, there might be reason to doubt the efficacy of this law. It is true that very unusual discretion is given to the Secretary in order that no injustice or arbitrary and unreasonable hardships may be imposed upon any of these deportable aliens.

In this connection, I call your attention to the language, on page 3, line 8, of the bill, where specific instruction is given to the Secretary of Labor, making clear that she has sufficient power and authority to see to it that none of the hardships which are feared by the opponents of this bill are wrought. Why, under this provision the Secretary can even release from detention any deportable alien, simply because the Secretary feels that by reason of age the health of the alien might be injured by detention, or that she feels that there is little likelihood of the alien resuming the course of conduct which made him deportable.

Another objection that has been urged to this bill in this debate is that power is given to the Secretary of Labor to set up concentration camps at her will anywhere in the United States, in which she will be permitted to imprison and confine these deportable aliens. In this connection let me call your attention to section 3 of the bill, which provides that—

> The Secretary of Labor is authorized and directed to arrange for proper places of detention in established institutions for those aliens required by this act to be taken into custody and confined.

It is true that the bill as originally introduced did give the Secretary of Labor authority to establish detention farms. This has been eliminated and when this bill becomes a law, and these aliens are detained, it will be in an established institution, and the Judiciary Committee was advised that the place would probably be Ellis Island in New York. You will recall that this is the immigration station through which all immigrants entering the United States through New York must pass. It is not a prison. It is not a stockade or anything of that kind and, for my part, it is really too good a place to keep these undesirable aliens at Government expense.

It is interesting to note who is opposing this bill. No objections were raised by any group or organization, so far as I have been able to learn, until after the bill was reported. Then Mr. Lee Pressman, writing as general counsel for the C. I. O., severely condemned the bill, and demanded that Members vote against it. Then today I think every Member received a letter from the president of one branch of the Farmers' Union, protesting against the enactment of the bill. Let it be remembered that the Farmers' Union, as we have known it for the last few years, is split into two groups, the question of the activity of Communists within the union being the principal point of difference. I have been unable to learn of any other group action opposing the bill.

It is commonly known that the Communist Party has been trying to worm its way into American labor organizations and to accomplish its purpose through these channels. This being the case, it does seem that any group of organized labor is doing itself a great injustice by taking action, the purpose of which is to prevent the deportation and elimination from this country of these alien agitators, many of whom do their most destructive work in organized labor units.

I stand squarely with the American Federation of Labor, with the American Legion, and with all veteran and patriotic organizations in the belief that every lawful means should be used to return these alien agitators to their own countries. Of course, it is true that this bill, as indicated above, affects only the four groups mentioned.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point just for an observation?

Mr. MICHENER. I have not much time, but I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. O'CONNOR. That brings up the instant case that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MASSINGALE] pointed out. The map of Europe is being rewritten——

Mr. MICHENER. I yielded for a question. The gentleman can get time to make his own speech.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Suppose this alien who has been ordered deported and is going to be detained has no home to which to return, what are we going to do with him? Is he not being deprived of his liberty without due process of law under those circumstances?

Mr. MICHENER. I am very pleased to answer the question with reference to the Strecker case. We have all heard about that and that is the case referred to here. This man Strecker——

Mr. O'CONNOR. No; it is the case instanced by MASSINGALE.

It is the case he pointed out where the alien's country had been taken over by Germany and the man had no place to go and was ordered deported and was kept and detained with no home to return to.

Mr. MICHENER. Yes; that is the Strecker case. It was Poland, not Germany. If the gentleman were as familiar with it as my friend from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO], whose organization employed the counsel in that case for Mr. Strecker, he would be as anxious to make it impossible for deportable aliens to remain in this country as I am.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield, since he mentioned my name?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I want to state on that point that my organization was not interested in Mr. Strecker as an individual, but that it was interested in preserving democratic procedure in the United States, and the Supreme Court of the United States agreed with my organization, so we must have been right.

Mr. MICHENER. Yes; the Supreme Court did agree, in some particulars, and I hope the gentleman is able to get some consolation out of that rather unusual opinion. The Department of Labor attempted to deport Strecker. They proceeded to a point where a warrant of deportation was issued. This Government found that he was an undesirable alien, that he was a Communist, and that he should be deported; but the country from which he came refused to accept him. Then Strecker sought relief in the courts, and there was much delay. However, he was finally discharged by the court. Had the court upheld the deportation, and had the country of origin refused to take him back, he would be with us regardless of the findings of the Labor Department and the courts.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. WALTER. May I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the Strecker case is exactly on all-fours with the hypothetical case mentioned by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MASSINGALE], in that Mr. Strecker was a national of Poland, and subsequently there was a change in the geography, and the country that Poland finally became a part of did issue, after a year and a half, a passport.

Mr. MICHENER. Yes. If those countries—Russia, for instance—send their propagandists to this country, of course, they do not want them back home. They want them in America where they can be spreading the poison of communism. In the Strecker case his native country would not receive Strecker until after the proceedings were started in Washington and after this country became so aroused and there was such a hullabaloo about it all over the country.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. No. I have some things I wanted to say, and my time is very limited.

The question of whether or not this bill is retroactive has been raised. It is not retroactive in the sense that a new crime has been created. It is retroactive to the extent that it provides additional method and conduct in connection with the deportable alien between the time of his arrest and his final expulsion from the country. Under existing law he is detained under bond. Under this law he might be detained in custody. An amendment to the bill would readily remove any doubt on this point.

Mr. SACKS. Will the gentleman yield on that point?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. SACKS. I will support the bill if it is not retroactive.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes; I yield briefly.

Mr. MAGNUSON. The gentleman started out by justifying the legislation on the ground that it was desirable or necessary. If this only affects 50 people, why is it necessary?

Mr. MICHENER. It may not be necessary, but it is certainly desirable to rid this country of even 50 people who are propagandists for a philosophy that does not coincide with the philosophy of our Government. Get these alien "reds," radicals, law violators, and criminals out of the country; get back to fundamental Americanism—and this bill will go a long way toward that objective. [Applause.]

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO].

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me it is grossly unfair to confuse the issues. The issue here is not one of protecting criminal aliens. I, for one, am very proud of the part I played as assistant United States attorney, in bringing about the punishment and deportation of many, many criminal aliens. Therefore, I repeat, that is not the question. The question is not one of protecting criminal aliens. The question is a question of protecting and defending democratic procedure and due process, in keeping with true American traditions.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Yes, I yield.

Mr. BROOKS. As assistant United States attorney the gentleman was aware of the fact, I am sure, that the process of convicting a man of a crime was a different process from that of deporting him; is that correct?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Certainly.

Mr. BROOKS. One was a criminal action, and the other was a civil action. There was no double jeopardy. Is that not right?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. There was no double jeopardy in the deportation of a criminal alien. There is no question about that. Nor is there any question of lack of due process in proceedings for the deportation of a criminal alien who falls within the various classes enumerated by the act of 1917.

Deportation, however, is carried out in accordance with the law. Certainly no Member of the House is going to stand here and advocate either deportation or other kind of punishment of a criminal alien, or any other kind of alien, except as it be in accordance with the Constitution and the statutes.

What does this bill attempt to do? In considering this question let me read to you section 20 of the present Immigration Act, passed February 5, 1917. I read as follows:

> Pending the final disposal of the case of any alien so taken in custody (in deportation proceedings) he may be released under a bond in the penalty of not less than $500, with security approved by the Secretary of Labor, conditioned that such alien shall be produced when required for a hearing or hearings in regard to the charge upon which he has been taken into custody, and for deportation if he shall be found to be unlawfully within the United States.

This particular section has been defined by the courts time and time again, particularly the portion "taken into custody." Confinement has been defined by the courts to be confinement within a reasonable period of time, a period that is reasonable in the light of the requirements and the time that is necessary to effectuate deportation. In one of the leading cases on this subject, the case of United States v. Wallace (279 F. 405), the Court said:

> This and every other deportation order requires the proper official to return the alien to "the country whence he came," and for that purpose "to purchase transportation for the alien." Under familiar law this necessarily means that the transportation is to be obtained and the deportation effected within a reasonable time. What is a reasonable time varies with circumstances; during the World War it was a matter of even judicial cognizance that opportunities for deportation were rare and long delayed. We now take cognizance of the fact that peace has been declared, and regular communication with the British Isles reestablished, and we therefore express our opinion that unless this relator, or any other person similarly situated, be actually deported within 4 months after such alien has exhausted his legal remedies, any further or other detention under pretense of awaiting opportunity for deportation would amount, and will amount, to an unlawful imprisonment, from which relief may be afforded by a new habeas corpus.

This bill contravenes that express finding of the Court, for the bill establishes confinement for an indefinite time, a time which may run to any length, even for life. In deportation cases the only justification of confinement without due process is when the confinement is reasonable as an incident to deportation. The moment, however, confinement is not reasonable—the moment confinement is either permanent or beyond reasonableness—it ceases to be an incident to deportation; it becomes imprisonment. Under this bill you would be imprisoning these aliens without due process of law; and I submit that for the purpose of dealing with a few aliens you are substituting by this bill an undemocratic, unconstitutional procedure, substituting for our own democratic procedure one which is entirely alien to our democratic institutions of law.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Congress has no power to imprison anyone without providing for due process. Once an alien is detained for an unreasonable period of time such detention becomes imprisonment, and in this bill it is imprisonment without due process of law.

Mr. GWYNNE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I yield.

Mr. GWYNNE. Due process is provided in the bill. It provides for appeals in the regular way.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I am coming to that.

Mr. Chairman, it is contended by the proponents of the bill that it meets the due-process requirement. The fact is the bill contains merely the color of due process. It provides that the alien or his attorney may file a petition with the circuit court of appeals. This is not due process. The gentleman from Iowa is a good enough lawyer to know that the circuit court of appeals never disturbs the findings of fact of any administrative officer in this type of case. The court never passes on the weight of evidence in these cases. The circuit court of appeals will not disturb the findings of fact made by the Secretary. The matter of providing appeal to the circuit court of appeals is simply providing for the stamp of approval on an illegal detention, because it affords the person involved no review as to the facts. The court merely passes on the question of proper procedure.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. All that section provides is to say that the procedure of the Secretary of Labor is in pursuance of that section; but no finding of fact can be upset by the court.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. No finding of fact can be reviewed by the court.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I yield.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. In regard to the question of constitutionality, many Members of Congress, including myself, feel that these aliens who are teaching anarchy, who are selling opium, are trying to undermine our system of government. Does not the gentleman feel that Congress has the right to pass legislation detaining certain criminal aliens who we feel are trying to overthrow our system of government?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. First of all, there are laws now on the statute books to take care of such people and situations adequately. Second, whatever power Congress has to deal with any person in the United States, this power must be exercised in conformity with the fourteenth amendment and must provide for due process. This bill does not provide for due process. The only manner in which you seek to justify this bill on the question of due process is that the detention is incident to deportation proceedings, which are civil proceedings. The courts have said, however, that when the detention is unreasonable it becomes a criminal detention; hence, it must be accomplished only by due process of law.

Several Members rose.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. After making a short statement I shall be pleased to yield.

Let me refer to a question raised by the gentleman from Michigan as to concentration camps. No concentration camp is mentioned in this bill. The word "camp" does not occur in the bill; the word "concentration" does not occur in the bill. What makes a concentration camp? Is it the barbed-wire fence that makes a concentration camp? That does not make a concentration camp. If a person is sent by due process to a place that is surrounded with a barbed-wire fence, that is not a concentration camp.

What constitutes a bastille and what constitutes a concentration camp is the method by which persons are sent to those places. Imprisonment without due process of law is concentration camp imprisonment. Therefore inasmuch as this bill confines people without due process of law and it sends people to places of detention without due process of law I submit we are entirely correct in characterizing this bill as a concentration camp or bastille bill or a lettre de cachet bill and we are importing into our country a totalitarian system of criminal procedure which is repugnant to the Constitution, repugnant to the Declaration of Independence, and repugnant to our democratic form of government.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. As I understand the gentleman's previous remarks, he was concerned mainly about the constitutionality of this proposed bill.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. And the democratic traditions that we have maintained throughout the years in our criminal procedure.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. With regard to the constitutionality feature there is a difference of opinion in the House on that question. If it is unconstitutional the Supreme Court will eventually decide that matter, will it not?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. But there cannot be any difference of opinion as to the undemocratic procedure established by this bill.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen, this is an important bill. Its purpose is to make effective our laws providing for the deportation of enemy and criminal aliens. It does not affect anyone except enemy or criminal aliens. All aliens who get into the United States legally come in under the promise that they will obey the laws of this country and will not become public charges upon the American people. Under this bill no alien can be placed in a detention institution unless he has been ordered deported as a Communist, anarchist, or a member of some other like group advocating the overthrow of this Government by violence or unless such alien has been twice convicted of a felony involving moral turpitude or is engaged in the business of selling or handling narcotics in violation of law or is engaged in the business of white slavery and promoting prostitution. If the Department of Labor finds an alien that may be deported on any of these charges, then the Department of Labor issues a warrant of deportation and the alien is given a full hearing before the immigration authorities, and if the decision is adverse to the alien he may go into the United States district court under a writ of habeas corpus, and if adverse there he may appeal to the circuit court of appeals, and then to the Supreme Court; and if the rulings are adverse to him he must then leave the country or be detained as provided in this bill.

Many alien enemies and criminals have been ordered deported. In order to return to their own country they must receive a passport issued by their own country. We now have in this country about 460 enemy and criminal aliens that have been ordered deported, but they insist that they cannot go back to their own country because they have no passports, and insist that they may remain in the United States. The purpose of this bill is to detain these criminal and enemy aliens until they do secure passports and leave this country as ordered by the immigration authorities and the courts of our country.

Our Judiciary Committee had what the members considered reliable information that a very large percentage of these aliens are Russian Communists. Russia will not issue any passports for the return to Russia of these Russian aliens that have been ordered deported. They are here as propagandists, teaching and preaching communism and the overthrow of this Government by force. The conclusion is inescapable that Russia does not desire these Communists to leave the United States. Russia wants them to remain here to spread communism.

This bill provides that any criminal alien or any enemy alien that has been ordered deported and fails to leave this country shall be detained in some institution until he does leave or until the Secretary of Labor orders his discharge. Such alien will not be placed at hard labor while detained, as such provision would likely render this measure unconstitutional. Some Members of the House have declared the provisions of this bill an outrage and denies to these aliens due process of law. The provisions of this bill do not attach until the alien has had his full hearing before the immigration authorities and until his case has been passed on by the highest court in this land if he desires. It is after all steps have been taken to determine that the alien has violated the laws of our country and should be deported and is ordered deported. This law does not apply to the deportation of any aliens except criminal aliens, those that have been convicted at least two times on felonies involving moral turpitude or guilty of selling or peddling dope and narcotics in violation of law or guilty of promoting and carrying on white slavery or prostitution, or membership in and aiding and promoting communism, anarchy, or other like organization teaching, and advocating the overthrow of the United States Government by violence.

If this "kettle of fish," the worst group of criminals and enemy aliens, would themselves obey the laws of our country, respect the flag and country that gives them shelter, and adhere to decency and morality, there would be no necessity for this bill. These groups of criminal and enemy aliens talk loud and long about the protection of our Constitution and our laws, yet they spend their time in open defiance of our laws, disrespect for our flag, and would if they could overthrow our Government. [Applause.]

In every State we have laws that provide that incorrigible children may be placed in detention institutions. We detain insane persons, American citizens, because the welfare of the community and the safety of the citizens require it. Why should we not detain these enemy and criminal aliens who violated their promise on entering this country and many of whom would overthrow it if they had the chance?

I am satisfied that this act will be a deterrent. Aliens will begin to realize that they cannot violate our laws, public decency, and threaten the very life of our Nation with impunity, and when they are detained there will be a way found by them or by their governments to permit them to get back to their home countries.

There is a provision in this bill to prevent any undue hardship. The Secretary of Labor is vested with authority to release any person detained where good cause is shown. In determining good cause, the Secretary of Labor's action will be guided by either one or all of the provisions on page 3 of the bill: First, the age and health of the alien may be taken into consideration; second, if it shall appear that the alien will not resume the course of conduct which made him deportable. The Secretary of Labor may find that the alien detained will cease to be a criminal or cease to preach communism and the overthrow of this Government; or, third, may discharge him if it shall appear that the alien is unable to secure a passport through no fault of his own and that he will not violate the laws or endanger this Nation.

It is believed that not more than 50 persons a year will come under this act. When we pass this law and these Communists and other criminal aliens find that they cannot run loose in America and carry on their criminal and other un-American activities they will then begin to get their passports and leave our country. [Applause.]

Why this tender regard for these criminal and enemy aliens? Why all these appeals to keep in our country criminals that have been at least twice convicted of felonies or are guilty of peddling dope or carrying on the business of white slavery and prostitution? It seems to me that every law-abiding, God-fearing man and woman in this country would be anxious to get rid of them.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I am very much impressed with the gentleman's argument and there is only one point which I would like to have made clear. Does the gentleman believe the bill protects the man or woman who is ordered to be deported and who has no country to go back to; that is, the country from which he came has been wiped out, say, by Germany, or Great Britain, or some other country?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. The bill on page 3, as I have stated, gives the Secretary of Labor the right to protect the interests of such person. The Secretary of Labor can release such person at any time upon proper showing; but, of course, we do not expect the Secretary of Labor to grant a release if the person is going out and continue to commit felonies, peddle dope, promote prostitution, or preach the overthrow of this Government.

Congress has passed laws providing for the deportation of these types of aliens. The Department of Labor is from time to time ordering their deportation, but we now have 460 criminal and enemy aliens in this country that the deportation orders cannot be carried out because these aliens claim they have been unable to get passports. The net result is our deportation laws are nullified and these criminal and enemy aliens are permitted to run loose in this country. In other words, they have defied Congress and the United States Government. It is a direct challenge to the authority and sovereignty of this country. We must make our deportation laws effective and thereby uphold our laws, protect our people, and preserve the sovereignty of the United States. This bill accomplishes that very purpose. If we fail to do this, more and more criminal aliens, and the most dangerous, will resort to this scheme in order to remain in our country. [Applause.]

This bill means that a criminal or enemy alien cannot himself, or in conspiracy with his Government of Russia or other nation, defy the United States Government, its mandates, or the judgments of its courts. [Applause.]

Mr. EATON of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. EATON of New Jersey. I am not a lawyer, but I am an American citizen and a layman and I am puzzled by this question. If criminal aliens subject to deportation are not permitted by their own countries to return to the land of their origin and circulate there, why should they be permitted to remain and circulate in this country, whose laws they have violated?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I thank the gentleman for his thoughtful observation. I am at a loss to understand the deep concern of a number of our colleagues for these particular groups of criminal and enemy aliens. We cannot proceed under this proposed law unless they have violated their solemn promise to obey our laws made to enter our country. They are merely our guests. They have violated every principle between guest and host. They have committed felonies or have tried to destroy this Nation, or both. Is it not your duty and mine to pass this bill and protect our country?

I am more concerned in the welfare of our country than I am in the welfare of a lot of criminal aliens who are Communists or persons engaged in selling dope or carrying on the nefarious business of white slavery and prostitution for profit. [Applause.]

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. FORD].

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to H. R. 4768, because I am convinced that this democracy of ours should not stultify itself by employing the methods of the dictator nations. Among these methods is the "detention" of suspected or feared or "undesirable" persons, not as punishment of crime but because the Government fears or hates them. Such detention is without due process of law and is therefore inimical to all. The usual places of "detention" are concentration camps.

While this bill does not specifically provide for such camps, the implication is there. Read between the lines.

Democracy today is engaged in a bitter struggle for existence. With nation after nation falling under the rule of dictators, the tendency is for the democracies, under nervous strain, to adopt the very methods that have undermined and destroyed freedom and representative government in other nations. I do not want my country to yield to hysteria and employ the methods of the dictators; one of those methods is and always has been the concentration camp.

If I read my history correctly, the existence of concentration camps on the island of Cuba, instituted by General Weyler, called at the time "Butcher Weyler," was one of the factors that helped enrage the American people and fanned the flames of the Spanish-American War in 1898. The very idea of human beings kept in prison because the Government fears them is nauseating to Americans. It is true that the class at whom this bill is aimed is the criminal or undesirable alien who cannot be deported because his native government refuses to accept him.

In the troubled and changing conditions that exist it is natural for us to resent this. We do not want these criminals, and we cannot get rid of them. That is the situation.

Therefore, it is argued, let us deprive them of their liberty, just as the dictator countries deprive racial and religious minorities of their liberties without due process of law.

This is as logical as it is un-American.

As I see it, the proposed course is subversive of all our principles of justice, of human rights, of decent forebearance in dealing with those in our power and at our mercy.

What, then, shall we do?

Authorize the Secretary of Labor to parole them, just as we parole many persons who have been convicted of crime.

These undesirable aliens should not be turned loose. Neither should they be held in "detention" unless serving sentences for crime. To protect the public they should be paroled under strict rules. If they fail to obey the laws, then they should be tried and convicted and sent to prison in the legal way, the American way, the democratic way.

To follow any other course is to start something we may not be able to stop. If one undesirable class—and these deportable aliens are undesirable—is to be detained because Congress so orders, what guaranty have we that some other class may later, as hysteria increases, be "detained" by act of Congress?

To preserve liberty under law we must undeviatingly refuse to make a single exception, even in the case of the most undesirable alien.

That is the American way. [Applause.]

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Utah [Mr. MURDOCK] such time as he may desire.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Chairman, imprisonment without due process of law is one of the oldest, and certainly the most cruel, instruments of tyranny. Slavery itself was but one form of illegal constraint, and any deprivation of liberty is slavery, regardless of the terms by which legalistic bickerings may disguise it. The most dangerous weapon of absolutist monarchies was the stolen power to imprison their enemies without cause. Every student of history recalls the vicious practice by which French kings drove their subjects to violent revolution, the issuance of lettres de cachet, with which the monarch and his friends could, by merely affixing their signatures to an order, bring about the incarceration of their private or public enemies. While the unseen power of the lettres de cachet existed no man was free, no man was safe. If a private citizen, even in defense of his acknowledged rights, dared to incur the ill will of a nobleman, he might find himself thrown into a dungeon without trial, without right of appeal, and without hope of liberty. The assault on the Bastille, which is still celebrated in France, and which certainly was one of the important milestones along the path to human freedom, was the inevitable result of centuries of suffering under the royal prerogative of imprisonment without due process of law.

The Anglo-Saxon race, during its whole history, has fought relentless war against imprisonment without trial. In the Magna Carta the English barons extorted from King John a promise that no man would be imprisoned without trial by his peers. In the remotest days of English history we find the institution of trial by jury, and in every age we see the English people insisting upon that right as a natural one, as an inalienable one, as the very foundation of freedom. The first colonists who came to this country brought with them the right of trial by jury.

In every colony that right was acknowledged, respected, and protected at all costs. And when the Federal Government was created by the ratification of the Constitution, the fathers, in order to preclude any attempt to deny that right by the new government, brought about the adoption of the Bill of Rights, designed primarily to insure equal justice to all.

I do not think the time has arrived when we should begin to assault the foundations of our freedom. I do not believe that any excuse whatever would justify an act of Congress which, directly or indirectly, denied equal justice to any man under the protection of the American flag. Let it be remembered that there have always been subversive activities, that there have always been enemies of order and good government, that there have always been ungrateful aliens. Let it be remembered that in the days when the Constitution was adopted there were those who disapproved of the American form of government, and those who would have resorted to force to undermine it. But in spite of these facts, in spite of the existence within our borders of foes of our system, the fathers believed, as I believe, that the guaranty of equal justice to all men was of transcendent importance. Under our system of government, even the murderer is entitled to a fair trial before he is punished, even one clearly guilty of treason must be brought to justice in accordance with law, even the criminal, the archenemy of society, has the right, the inalienable right to a trial before he is imprisoned.

The jealousy with which our progenitors have guarded these personal and civil rights is attributable to their recognition of the fact that liberty is indivisible. If the criminal may be condemned without a trial today, perhaps tomorrow the innocent man may be condemned. If today the ungrateful alien may be imprisoned without due process of law, who may say that tomorrow may not see the rebuilding of the Bastille? Once we begin to tear down the temple of equal justice we have destroyed its symmetry. It can only exist as a whole. If one part is torn away, the rest will surely fall. It is not so long ago that our greatest citizen said, "This Nation cannot endure half free and half slave." Let the echo of those words remind us that when equal justice is denied to one, citizen or alien, innocent or guilty, it is no longer equal, it is no longer justice.

Regardless of the good intentions of its sponsors, in which I sincerely believe, it seems to me that the bill now before us is a direct assault upon the American system. The bill, upon its face, tells its own tale. It provides for the "detention" of certain classes of aliens. It provides that such aliens shall be confined, but—mark this—"not at hard labor." Why were those words "not at hard labor" inserted in the bill? Surely not because its sponsors desire to insure the enforced idleness of such aliens. No; it was recognized by those who wrote the bill that if such aliens were confined at hard labor the law would clearly contravene the express provisions of the thirteenth amendment to the Constitution. Let us look at that amendment. I quote:

SECTION 1. Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States or any place subject to their jurisdiction.

Let it be noted that the amendment, by its terms, applies not only to white men but to black; not only to innocent men but to guilty; not only to citizens but to aliens. That amendment, as everyone knows, was intended to destroy a vile and cruel institution—human slavery. But it is thought that to constitute slavery or involuntary servitude the victim must be forced to work. And so in this bill, in the hope that what is unconstitutional may be made to seem constitutional, the words are inserted "not at hard labor." But if you rob a man of liberty, if you confine him in a prison or in a concentration camp or in a road gang, can he be said to be free because he is not compelled to work? The question answers itself. Slavery does not consist alone of compulsion to labor. Slavery is the imposition of the will of one man upon others without their consent.

Slavery is the deprivation of liberty. Slavery is none the less slavery because the master is kind, or the place of enslavement comfortable. Slavery frowns through this thin legal mask, "not at hard labor," frowns at Americanism, menaces liberty, threatens our system of equal justice. Let us, in equity, look to the substance, not to the form. Let us remember that here is one form of that thing of which Lincoln said that one day he would strike it, and strike it hard. Let us not parry his blow.

The bill before us is prefaced with certain "whereas" clauses, obviously designed to beguile us into accepting it. The first clause reads:

Whereas the right to exclude or to expel aliens, or any class of aliens, absolutely or upon certain conditions, in war or in peace, is an inherent and inalienable right of every sovereign and independent nation.

Why was it thought advisable to introduce this bill with such a clause? The American people know that the Nation has the inalienable right to expel or exclude aliens. The courts have said so in innumerable decisions. The Supreme Court has said so with emphasis. The Congress has said so by the enactment of exclusion and deportation laws, time and time again, and no one denies that right. Has Congress nothing more important to do than repeat undeniable truisms? We had better enact into law one of the many decisions of the Federal courts on the subject than to invest with the solemnity of law this trite statement. But, as if the declaration of the unquestionable were the prerogative of Congress, this clause is followed by another:

Whereas the exercise of such sovereign power by the United States of America should not be hampered, limited, nor thwarted by any other nation.

Has anyone dared to say that Hitler should legislate for us? No. Has any foreign nation dared to assume to hamper, or limit, or thwart our sovereign power to exclude or deport aliens? No. Then why this declaration? Have some Congressmen just discovered its truth? No. As is so frequently the case, these perfectly innocuous statements are designed to serve as sugar coating for an otherwise unpalatable pill. They are the sheep's clothing in which the wolf of reaction masquerades. The next clause reads:

Whereas the right to detain an alien subject to deportation is but a necessary incident of the right to exclude or deport.

Whereas the bill promised to be a mere legislative tautology, it has now become a judicial fiat. Of course, the reasonable detention of an alien subject to deportation is but a necessary incident of the right to exclude or deport such alien. But we now have on the statute books more than enough laws authorizing such reasonable detention; and we have a steady stream of judicial decisions upholding such reasonable detention. This bill, however, as the minority report shows, as the report of the Department of Justice shows, and as a little reflection will make obvious, is intended to authorize a most unreasonable, unconstitutional, and un-American detention. Apropos the detention of aliens, the Supreme Court, in the celebrated Wong Wing case, said:

No limits can be put by the courts upon the power of Congress to protect, by summary methods, the country from the advent of aliens whose race or habits render them undesirable as citizens, or to expel such if they have already found their way into our land and unlawfully remain therein. But to declare unlawful residence within the country to be an infamous crime, punishable by deprivation of liberty and property, would be to pass out of the sphere of constitutional legislation, unless provision were made that the fact of guilt should first be established by a judicial trial. It is not consistent with the theory of our Government that the Legislature should, after having defined an offense as an infamous crime, find the fact of guilt and adjudge the punishment by one of its own agents.

What good cause will the enactment of this bill serve? We now have laws to exclude aliens. We have laws to deport undesirable aliens. We have laws to provide for the reasonable detention of deportable aliens. All of our laws apply to aliens as well as to citizens. If an alien commits a crime, he can be punished under our laws. If he murders, he can be made to pay the death penalty. If he incites to riot, or conspires to incite to riot, he can be imprisoned and fined. If he acts to destroy the Government, he can be imprisoned and fined. Every possible unfriendly or criminal act of an alien is properly punishable, either in a Federal or in a State jurisdiction. Then why this law? If we keep in mind the adequacy of our existing laws and the excellence of their administration, especially by Federal agencies, which alone come within the jurisdiction of Congress, this bill can only be regarded as an attempt at persecution. It is not enough, its sponsors say in effect, that we can exclude aliens, that we can deport aliens, that we can detain aliens subject to deportation, that we can punish aliens for criminal acts, we must yet express our venom in this act of bigotry. By this bill, if enacted, we will transplant to the free soil of America the vilest weed of fascism. We shall establish concentration camps, we shall herd together like cattle tiny groups of helpless people, surround them with prison walls or barbed-wire entanglements, torture the sick, the stranded, the homeless, hound and harass the hapless men without a country. Mr. Chairman, surely this is not Americanism. Surely this is not the march of progress, but the goose step of reaction.

Let us not, Mr. Chairman, talk so loud about the Constitution that we cannot hear what it says. Let us not, Mr. Chairman, flaunt our Americanism by forgetting to act like Americans. Let us not, Mr. Chairman, attempt to protect our institutions against foreigners by tearing them down ourselves. I hold no brief for deportable aliens. I will go as far as anyone to rid our country of criminal foreigners who seek to undermine our system. But men do not cease to be men because they are not native-born Americans. Indeed, in our Declaration of Independence we solemnly affirmed that all men are equal and entitled to the blessings of equal justice. Let us not now attack un-American activities with un-American activities. Unconstitutional acts are bad and unworthy defenders of the Constitution. I have undying faith that America is safe against foreign foes so long as we Americans shall ourselves be loyal to American traditions.

I know there are some Congressmen who tremble at the thought of the bogey communism or the phantom fascism. Surely a little thought will reveal to them that the best way for us to protect America against undemocratic conspiracies is to make democracy work. Let us spend our time trying to help the 130,000,000 Americans whose welfare is our chief responsibility. We have no time to waste in unlawfully and unconstitutionally persecuting a handful of helpless and hopeless foreigners. And in these days when we pay constant lip-service to economy we should give heed to the fact that the enforcement of this bill would entail huge expenditures and a vast increase in the personnel of the Immigration Service. Surely Congress will not decline one day to provide adequate funds for the relief of human misery, and the next authorize wasteful expenditures for persecution.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from California [Mr. GEYER] such time as he may desire.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Chairman, I am sure none of us are in sympathy with the class of criminals with which this piece of legislation deals. I wish it distinctly understood that I am not coming to their defense in what I say here. No one has less use for those who commit such offenses against our country and society than myself.

What I am defending today is the institution of democracy. And we all know, if there was ever a time that defense is needed, it is right now. Some of my colleagues claim that in supporting this bill they are defending democracy. Now, this cannot be the case in both instances. If I am defending it, these colleagues are trying to destroy it. If those on the other side are defending it, then I am trying to destroy it. Let us see who is right.

In the first place, it is axiomatic that one cannot defend by destroying. The passage of this bill, in the admission of several of those who champion it, takes from some, at least, of the victims, if not all of them, rights guaranteed under the Constitution or established by court decisions.

One need not be a clever attorney to see wherein this bill violates the right of trial by jury, that instrument of democracy bought by our ancestors at such a price. This piece of legislation takes the man who has served his sentence, paid his debt to society, if you please, and without due process of law confines him, maybe for life, in an un-American institution, the concentration camp. Is the violation of this sacred right upholding and defending democracy?

This law would take the victim, who again has paid his debt to society, and place him into confinement where the sacred right of the writ of habeas corpus can never be applied. Is this upholding democracy as written in our fundamental document?

What about the inflicting of excessive punishment for a crime, another sacred safeguard to democracy? Under the terms of this act a man who has served his sentence and thereby paid his debt to society may be placed in confinement if it so happens that his country has been erased from the map or he, for some reason beyond his control, is unable to obtain a visa. Are my colleagues who are trying to do this upholding and defending democracy?

What about this type of punishment for offenses? As the victim has served his sentence for the crime he has committed, his new crime would only be failure to return to his native land. This is a civil offense and not a criminal one. Do we under our form of government punish by imprisonment for a civil crime? Gentlemen, I believe if we are to carefully think this thing through we must conclude that those who are supporting this measure are destroying democracy in the name of defending it. I for one will continue to live up to my oath of office as I see it and continue to defend democracy by opposing this measure that belongs along with the edicts issued by a Hitler. [Applause.]

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN].

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, judging by the discussion that has been going on, this bill, which the Committee on the Judiciary has seen fit to consider, certainly is a 100-percent immigration bill. I wish they would take from our committee some bills which are a little tougher than the one now under consideration, because, in my opinion, it is absolutely a disgrace to bring the pending bill onto the floor of the House.

As I said a few days ago, I am not defending the criminal. I will go as far as any man on this floor in ridding this country of criminals, but the gentleman from Kentucky made a passionate speech on what a great bill this is in its treatment of those who are trying to overthrow our Government. Are the prostitutes trying to overthrow the Government? Are the dope peddlers trying to overthrow the Government?

This is not the real issue of this bill at all. The whole bill simmers down to one proposition. We have in this country a number of criminal aliens whom I wish we could get rid of. We cannot get passports for them because, under the Versailles Treaty, the whole world was changed and the lands whence some of these criminals came and where they were born are no longer in existence. The Department of Labor has done everything in its power to secure passports for them. Unfortunately, in many cases it was impossible to obtain the necessary passports. The only way we can dispose of that question, therefore, is by a resolution of this Congress calling on the State Department to ask the governments of the countries to which these criminals should be deported to grant the necessary documents.

Are we going to take these men and women who have been here for, say, 20 or more years away from their families? When they came here they were not criminals. They were made criminals right in this country because of bad environment or wrong education. They are now married to American women and have American families. Are we going to pass a law which is retroactive, which will take a man away from his wife and children and put him into a concentration camp because he committed a crime 20 years ago and the country where he was born will not take him back? I say that is wrong. If you want to dispose of this criminal and get rid of him, find another method by which we can check on him, by which we can find out if he continues to commit crimes. I venture to say that none of the 415 persons referred to by the gentleman from Michigan has committed a crime for many years. Those persons are on probation.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I do not have time to yield.

I do not give them any credit for what they have done. The fact is, however, there is no way at the present time of getting rid of them by sending them back to countries which will not give them passports, or countries which no longer exist.

This bill refers to radicals. We have a law to deal with radicals. The bill refers to criminal aliens, and I say we already have laws to deal with them. The bill refers to certain types of immoral persons, and we have laws to deal with them. The present bill is inconsistent with at least a dozen different sections of the immigration law. Three of the sections of this bill are absolutely in contradiction of laws the Congress has placed on the statute books of this country. The committee has overlooked that. Why? Because, I believe, the committee is not familiar with the present status of the immigration law that has been in effect since 1917.

I submit that if we want to be constructive and help our country to get rid of these criminals we should do it in another way. Let us do it in an orderly way. I have a resolution before the Rules Committee today, the so-called Schulte resolution, that would give this committee the right to study this whole problem. This problem has not been touched in 31 years. The Committee on Immigration and Naturalization has been struggling almost constantly to solve all these various problems that we should solve, but without notice to the Committee on Immigration the bill is taken into the Committee on the Judiciary. Why?

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW] such time as he may desire to use.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I love democracy and I hate everything that strikes it down. I am against this bill because I am afraid of its ultimate implications. I fear that it would imperil the individual freedom which is so zealously sought and guarded in the Bill of Rights. I believe that it sets up an instrumentality which might be used to destroy personal liberty in America. So great are the potentialities for evil in this bill I shudder to see it go on the statute books.

I have the highest esteem for the author of this bill. I know that every fiber of his being is patriotic. He is a man of superlative ability and of the highest character. No one who knows him will challenge the integrity of his thought and purpose. I am not finding fault with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] when I disagree with his bill. I am proud of his friendship, but I cannot see eye to eye with him in regard to this measure.

Here we have a bill which, in my opinion, violates the Constitution in half a dozen ways, and especially the fifth amendment of the immortal Bill of Rights, which reads as follows:

> No person shall be held to answer for a capital or other infamous crime unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the militia, when in actual service in time of war or public danger, nor shall any person be subject for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb, nor shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation.

What becomes of due process of law, I ask you, in such a procedure as is provided in this bill, where an administrative officer can send persons to concentration camps without trial by jury? In this case the persons are aliens, but if we establish this precedent may we not reasonably expect that sometime in the future other persons against whom administrative officials may choose to direct their hostility may be sent to concentration camps without trial by jury? Suppose some Secretary of Labor of some future administration should be violently antagonistic to labor. Might there not be a temptation to extend the law so as to send recalcitrant laborites to concentration camps? And would there not be a likelihood that in times of war or great international stress these concentration camps would come in handy for the confinement of any persons who in the opinion of administrative officials ought to be deprived of their liberty? The plain truth is that this bill gives to administrative officials the adjudication of rights to liberty, which is something that administrative officials should never have in the American system. This bill sets the Secretary of Labor above the courts of the country.

Let us consider for a moment how it will operate in the case of the nationals of defunct countries, Czechoslovakia, for instance. There are Czechoslovakian aliens in the United States who cannot get passports back to Czechoslovakia because there is no Czechoslovakia any more. Unless Hitler is willing to receive these black sheep—and it is a thousand to one guess he will not be—the Secretary of Labor under this bill can send them to a concentration camp for life without trial by jury. Is that not a fearful precedent to set in free America? I know it is denied that there are to be concentration camps, but the bill provides for places of detention, and I do not think anyone will be so simple as not to know that this means concentration camps under another name.

When I think of concentration camps I think of stockades and barbed wire and Hitler and Mussolini and the totalitarian states where Christianity has been murdered and individual liberty has been stifled forever. Do we want to start that sort of thing in America? I hold no brief for alien crooks, and if I had my way every alien who remains in our country a year without filing a declaration of intention to become an American citizen would be deported automatically. But I fear that in striking at a few alien pimps and prostitutes and narcotic addicts we are imperiling our priceless franchise of freedom, and that is what is worrying me.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, let me remind you that only a few weeks ago President Roosevelt stood at the desk in front of you and said with justifiable emotional pride that America is one country where there are no concentration camps. Let us make the word of our President good and keep this hateful totalitarian institution out of America.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I must repeat what I stated in discussing the rule on this bill, that I hold no brief for any crooks or pimps or procurers or dope peddlers. I loathe them just as much as any man in this House, but this bill goes much further than seeking to apprehend those despicable characters, and if you would but take the time to go carefully into the implications of subdivision (b) and subdivision (c) on page 4 of the bill you would find upon close examination that many other classes of aliens are covered; that the Secretary of Labor could reach back through the years and apprehend those who have long since expiated their crimes, who have brought up families, who have been in the country for 40 or 50 years. The bill is retroactive by its terms, and many innocent individuals might have only been malefactors under the act who simply violated the prohibition laws of the various States under the eighteenth amendment. In many States those violations were deemed to have been crimes involving moral turpitude, regardless of sentence. Remember the Jones 5-and-10 law, which sentenced to at least 5 years and not more than 10 years Federal Volstead violators? Many of those would be embraced under the bill.

I oppose this bill because of its unconstitutionality, because it sets up an entirely new procedure, a procedure which, in a sense, anomalous as it sounds, is very old because it was involved in the old 1798 alien and sedition laws, and it is interesting—it would be vastly interesting for you to read in the RECORD tomorrow the provisions of the alien and sedition laws, which I shall insert in the RECORD, and it might interest you to note these brief passages from that act. I cannot read all of them because of lack of time, and if you would substitute the word "Secretary of Labor" for the word "President," as the same appears in the alien and sedition laws, you would have the present so-called Hobbs bill:

> It shall be lawful for the President of the United States at any time during a continuation of this act to order all such aliens as he shall judge dangerous to the peace and safety of the United States to depart out of the territory of the United States, and in case any alien so ordered to depart shall be found at large within the United States and not having obtained a license from the President to reside therein, or having obtained such license shall not have conformed thereto, every such alien shall be imprisoned for a term not exceeding 3 years.

I herewith insert the Alien Act:

THE ALIEN ACT

* * * It shall be lawful for the President of the United States at any time during the continuance of this act to order all such aliens as he shall judge dangerous to the peace and safety of the United States, or shall have reasonable grounds to suspect are concerned in any treasonable or secret machinations against the Government thereof, to depart out of the territory of the United States, within such time as shall be expressed in such order, which order shall be served on such alien by delivering him a copy thereof, or leaving the same at his usual abode, and returned to the office of the Secretary of State, by the marshal or other person to whom the same shall be directed. And in case any alien, so ordered to depart, shall be found at large within the United States after the time limited in such order for his departure, and not having obtained a license from the President to reside therein, or having obtained such license shall not have conformed thereto, every such alien shall, on conviction thereof, be imprisoned for a term not exceeding 3 years, and shall never after be admitted to become a citizen of the United States.

* * * * * * * *

* * * It shall be lawful for the President of the United States, whenever he may deem it necessary for the public safety, to order to be removed out of the territory thereof, any alien who may or shall be in prison in pursuance of this act; and to cause to be arrested and sent out of the United States such of those aliens as shall have been ordered to depart therefrom and shall not have obtained a license as aforesaid, in all cases where, in the opinion of the President, the public safety requires a speedy removal. And if any alien so removed or sent out of the United States by the President shall voluntarily return thereto, unless by permission of the President of the United States, such alien on conviction thereof shall be imprisoned so long as, in the opinion of the President, the public safety may require (1 Stat. 570, 571, act of June 25, 1798).

Is that the Hobbs bill? Beyond peradventure of a doubt it is the Hobbs bill, a new alien and sedition law, and I call the attention of the gentlemen south of the Mason and Dixon's line particularly to the fact that the Federalist Party was ruined by the alien and sedition laws. I call attention to the Kentucky resolution written by Thomas Jefferson and passed by the State of Kentucky on the Alien and Sedition Act:

KENTUCKY RESOLUTIONS DRAFTED BY THOMAS JEFFERSON WHILE VICE PRESIDENT, PASSED BY KENTUCKY LEGISLATURE IN 1798

6. Resolved, That the imprisonment of a person under the protection of the laws of this Commonwealth, on his failure to obey the simple order of the President to depart out of the United States, as is undertaken by said act entitled "An act concerning aliens," is contrary to the Constitution, one amendment to which has provided that "no person shall be deprived of liberty without due process of law;" and that another having provided that "in all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right to public trial by an impartial jury, to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation, to be confronted with the witnesses against him, to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor, and to have the assistance of counsel for his defense," the same act, undertaking to authorize the President to remove a person out of the United States who is under the protection of the law, on his own suspicion, without accusation, without jury, without public trial, without confrontation of the witnesses against him, without hearing witnesses in his favor, without defense, without counsel, is contrary to the provision also of the Constitution, is therefore not law, but utterly void and of no force; that transferring the power of judging any person who is under the protection of the laws from the courts to the President of the United States, as is undertaken by the same act concerning aliens, is against the article of the Constitution which provides that "the judicial power of the United States shall be vested in courts, the judges of which shall hold their offices during good behavior"; and that the said act is void for that reason also. And it is further to be noted that this transfer of judiciary power is to that magistrate of the general Government, who already posseses all the Executive, and a negative on all legislative powers. (Writings of Thomas Jefferson, vol. XVII, pp. 383–385, Memorial Edition.)

I call the attention of the same gentlemen to the Virginia resolution adopted December 24, 1798, as written by Madison, which is as follows:

VIRGINIA RESOLUTIONS OF 1798, DRAFTED BY JAMES MADISON AND APPROVED BY THE VIRGINIA HOUSE OF DELEGATES, DECEMBER 24, 1798

That the general assembly doth particularly protest against the palpable and alarming infractions of the Constitution in the two late cases of the Alien and Sedition Acts, passed at the last session of Congress; the first of which exercises a power nowhere delegated to the Federal Government, and which, by uniting legislative and judicial powers to those of (the) Executive, subvert the general principles of free government, as well as the particular organization and positive provisions of the Federal Constitution. * * * (Madison, Letters and Writings, vol. 4, p. 506.)

I give a portion of an address by Madison:

ADDRESS OF JAMES MADISON, OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY, TO THE PEOPLE OF THE COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA, DATED JANUARY 23, 1799, CONCERNING THE ALIEN BILL

But this bill contains other features still more alarming and dangerous. It dispenses with the trial by jury; it violates the judicial system; it confounds legislative, executive, and judicial powers; it punishes without trial; and it bestows upon the President despotic power over a numerous class of men. Are such measures consistent with our constitutional principles? And will an accumulation of power so extensive in the hands of the Executive, over aliens, secure to natives the blessings of republican liberty? (Madison, Letters and Writings, vol. 4, p. 512).

The alien bill * * * is a most detestable thing. (Letter, Thomas Jefferson to James Madison, May 1798, Ford ed., vol. VII, 260.)

If there is any doubt now as to whether or not this Hobbs bill is or is not constitutional, I refer you to the writings on the alien and sedition laws, to the words of Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, and even Hamilton and Marshall.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. In the report from the Department of Labor, does not the present Secretary of Labor take the position that she is very doubtful about the constitutionality of this bill?

Mr. CELLER. There is no doubt about that.

REPORT IN OPPOSITION BY SECRETARY PERKINS

APRIL 19, 1939.

Hon. HATTON W. SUMNERS,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I have your letter of April 12, 1939, requesting my comment on H. R. 5643, a bill "to invest the circuit courts of appeals of the United States with original and exclusive jurisdiction to review the order of detention of any alien ordered deported from the United States whose deportation or departure from the United States otherwise is not effectuated within 90 days after the date the warrant of deportation shall have become final; to authorize such detention orders in certain cases; to provide places for such detention; and for other purposes."

Summarized, this bill provides (1) that certain specified classes of aliens ordered deported, either before or after the passage of the act, whose deportation has not been effected within 90 days after the entry of the warrant of deportation, shall be taken into custody and confined, though not at hard labor, until deportation becomes possible, or until the Secretary of Labor, upon evidence of good cause, orders the release of the alien on such bond as may be required; (2) that in determining whether or not good cause for release has been shown, the Secretary of Labor may take into consideration the age and health of the alien, the likelihood of the alien resuming the course of conduct which made him deportable, the efforts made to expedite departure from the United States by the alien, and the reason for inability to obtain a travel document by the Service; (3) that the authority to apprehend and confine by the Secretary of Labor may only be questioned by petition filed with the circuit court of appeals in which the place of confinement is located, and that the decision of the court shall be final; (4) that the class of aliens subject to the terms of the bill are those ordered deported as members of the anarchistic and similar classes, as violators of Federal narcotic laws, as persons connected with the business of prostitution, and as criminals convicted of crimes involving moral turpitude but not including the offense committed in connection with an alien's entry or naturalization.

Under section 20 of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917 (39 Stat. 890; U. S. C., title 8, sec. 156), it is provided that:

"Pending the final disposal of the case of any alien so taken into custody (in deportation proceedings), he may be released under a bond in the penalty of not less than $500 with security approved by the Secretary of Labor, conditioned that such alien shall be produced when required for a hearing or hearings in regard to the charge upon which he has been taken into custody, and for deportation if he shall be found to be unlawfully within the United States."

The provision quoted has been construed judicially as mandatorily requiring the Secretary of Labor to release an alien under bond pending final disposition of the alien's case (Prentis v. Manoogian, 16 F. (2d) 422), and a proceeding for the deportation of an alien is "pending" within the purview of this section until the alien is actually deported (Becharias v. United States, 208 F. 143). The right to keep the alien in custody is conditioned on the prospect of his deportation within a reasonable period of time (United States v. Wallis, 279 F. 401). In the latter case the Court said:

"This and every other deportation order requires the proper official to return the alien to 'the country whence he came,' and for that purpose 'to purchase transportation for the alien.' Under familiar law this necessarily means that the transportation is to be obtained and the deportation effected within a reasonable time. What is a reasonable time varies with circumstances; during the World War it was a matter of even judicial cognizance that opportunities for deportation were rare and long delayed. We now take cognizance of the fact that peace has been declared, and regular communication with the British Isles reestablished, and we therefore express our opinion that unless this relator, or any other person similarly situated, be actually deported within 4 months after such alien has exhausted his legal remedies, any further or other detention under pretense of awaiting opportunity for deportation would amount, and will amount, to an unlawful imprisonment, from which relief may be afforded by a new habeas corpus."

The purpose of the bill, it appears, is to nullify the provisions of section 20 of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917, supra, and the controlling decisions thereunder insofar as certain classes of criminal aliens or those involved in subversive activities are concerned, and to make possible the continued confinement of such aliens if deportation cannot be effected within a certain period.

Since existing law permits the temporary custody of aliens under deportation proceedings it would probably be more accurate to state that the purpose of the measure is to permit the confinement of undesirable nondeportable aliens. The proposed legislation consequently represents an attempt to implement the immigration laws by imprisoning certain classes of aliens against whom deportation orders are outstanding if these orders cannot be executed within 90 days. It thus attempts to solve a problem of administration which recurs from time to time in cases where the Immigration and Naturalization Service is unable to execute a deportation warrant because no country will recognize the alien concerned as a national and issue passports or other travel documents to him.

The objective of the bill, therefore, is to remedy a defect inherent in the present deportation laws. Whether the approach to this problem represented by this bill is valid under the Constitution, however, presents a serious question.

As indicated by the language of the "whereas" clauses of the bill, the Congress has an absolute and inherent right to deport aliens for any reason which the Congress may decree, and, as an incident to that right may order the arrest and confinement of an alien pending determination of his deportability. But, lacking the ability for any cause to execute an order of deportation, is it within the power of the Congress to confine any alien for an indefinite period, or, so long as an administrative official shall deem proper? If the analogous case of Wong Wing v. United States (163 U. S. 228) is controlling, the answer must be in the negative.

In that case the Supreme Court was considering the fourth section of the act of May 5, 1892 (27 Stat. 25), which provided that any "Chinese person, or person of Chinese descent, convicted and adjudged to be not lawfully entitled to be or remain in the United States, shall be imprisoned at hard labor for a period not exceeding 1 year, and thereafter removed from the United States." The Court concluded that a Chinese alien held in custody under the provision was entitled to his release on the ground—

"We regard it as settled by our previous decisions that the United States can, as a matter of public policy, by congressional enactment forbid aliens or classes of aliens from coming within their borders and expel aliens or classes of aliens from their territory; and can, in order to make effectual such decree of exclusion or expulsion, devolve the power and duty of identifying and arresting the persons included in such decree and causing their deportation upon executive or subordinate officials.

"But when Congress sees fit to further promote such a policy by subjecting the persons of such aliens to infamous punishment at hard labor, or by confiscating their property, we think such legislation, to be valid, must provide for a judicial trial to establish the guilt of the accused."

The Court further stated:

"No limits can be put by the courts upon the power of Congress to protect, by summary methods, the country from the advent of aliens whose race or habits render them undesirable as citizens, or to expel such if they have already found their way into our land and unlawfully remain therein. But to declare unlawful residence within the country to be an infamous crime, punishable by deprivation of liberty and property, would be to pass out of the sphere of constitutional legislation, unless provision were made that the fact of guilt should first be established by a judicial trial. It is not consistent with the theory of our Government that the Legislature should, after having defined an offense as an infamous crime, find the fact of guilt and adjudge the punishment by one of its own agents."

It is true that in the bill under consideration the Congress has specifically provided that the alien who is to be confined shall not be imprisoned at hard labor. The fact remains, however, that the imprisonment may be for an indefinite period of time upon a finding of an administrative officer without judicial trial. Such imprisonment is not a temporary confinement, a part of the means necessary to give effect to the exclusion or deportation of aliens. The basis for imprisonment is not, except remotely, the result of the alien's actions; deportation may not take place within 90 days after a finding of deportability has been made because of the acts of others or causes beyond the alien's control. The failure or refusal of the country of the deportee's alleged nationality to issue a passport or other travel authorization for deportation is not the act of the alien. The illness of the alien, which may make his deportation impracticable within the period stipulated by the statute, is not his responsibility. The bill explicitly provides that 90 days after the entry of an order of deportation an alien must be taken into custody and confined unless released upon order of the Secretary of Labor.

It is also true that an alien detained under the terms of the act may, upon petition filed with the circuit court of appeals for the circuit in which the place of confinement of the particular alien is located, test the legality of the Secretary's order of detention under the act. But this is not a judicial commitment after trial. The power of the circuit court of appeals, although the court is vested with original and exclusive jurisdiction to hear such petitions, is to consider the "legality of the detention." Under the language of the act, that power necessarily is limited to a consideration of the legality of the finding of the Secretary of Labor as to the alien's deportability and the inability of the Government to execute the order of deportation within 90 days of its entry. The judicial scope of review is narrow and similar to that now exercised in habeas corpus proceedings in all immigration cases. The court may discharge an alien from custody if as a matter of law the finding of the Secretary of Labor cannot be supported—the court may not on a question of fact substitute its own judgment as to what disposition should be made of the case. Therefore, it does not follow that the provisions for judicial review remove the instant bill from the implications of the doctrine of the Wong Wing case, supra.

Apart from the question of the constitutionality, however, it is believed that the bill as drawn has certain other features which might well be reexamined. The present draft of section 1 requires not only the confinement of aliens whose deportation is known cannot be effected but necessitates the apprehension and confinement of an alien who may be too ill to travel under a deportation order even though it is known that a passport or travel authorization will issue shortly after 90 days by the government of his nationality. This would apply even in instances where immediate steamship sailings are not available and, literally read, in instances where an alien may be serving a sentence in a State prison or penitentiary.

It is true that the section also provides for the release from confinement of an alien after he is taken into custody when the Secretary of Labor finds certain conditions to exist. Nevertheless, the prospective deportee must first be taken into custody even though it is clear that conditions prescribed by the law justifying his release already exist. The procedure outlined seems to be unnecessarily cumbersome and rigid.

It would be preferable if confinement should be authorized only when deportation has not taken place within 90 days of the order of deportation and the Secretary of Labor has found that the conditions warranting freedom (those set forth in the proposed bill as justifying release) do not exist. Thus an alien serving a sentence of imprisonment, an alien too ill to travel, or an alien whose deportation is temporarily delayed pending negotiations for a travel document could properly be permitted to remain in prison, or at large under bond, or on their own recognizance until such time as it is definitely known whether deportation can or cannot be effected. If there is validity for the action now proposed by the bill, there should be validity for the procedure suggested.

Attention is drawn to lines 4 to 7, on page 3 of the bill. The clause in question seems to serve no useful purpose under existing law. Aliens encompassed within the terms of the bill may not reenter the United States if they should depart therefrom without first securing the consent of the Secretary of Labor to reapply for admission. It would appear to be certain that aliens of the type defined would not be granted such permission to return, and therefore could not reenter lawfully.

Another phase of the subject which cannot be overlooked is the question of whether the problem at which this bill is directed will be remedied by the proposed legislation. Since 1930 the Service has recorded the number of cases in which deportation orders could not be executed because of the refusal of foreign governments to issue travel authorizations for their return. In the last 9 years a total of 118,561 aliens were deported. Only 2,379 deportation warrants issued during this period failed to be carried out because of the inability of the Department to obtain travel documents. Out of this total a large percentage will not be affected by the bill because not of the classes specified as within its purview. In virtually all these cases, the reason given by the foreign consular officer for refusal to issue the travel document was that under the nationality laws of his country the alien could no longer be deemed a national. It is very unlikely that the enactment of this bill would cause foreign governments to change their nationality laws. While there are undoubtedly a few cases where deportation is thwarted by the failure of the alien to cooperate with the United States Government in pressing his own government for a passport, the Department has no evidence that these cases are numerous, and it would seem that a possible result of the bill might be the isolation of a comparatively small number of aliens who, because of conflicts between the nationality laws of this country and the nationality laws of their native land, face a condition of statelessness for an indefinite period.

Attention is also drawn to the fact that the bill is retroactive, and for that reason, if enacted into law, an administrative task of considerable magnitude would be created. The bill would make it necessary for the Immigration and Naturalization Service to review the files of all the deportation cases since the establishment of the Department in order to ascertain those cases in which a final deportation order issued but which for various reasons was not effected.

It is indicated that since 1930 approximately 2,379 aliens are within the group who come within the purview of the bill. The number of such cases that exists which were closed out officially prior to 1930 is unknown. To discover those cases it will be necessary to obtain additional personnel in order to review the hundreds of thousands of files now considered closed cases. The Service does not index the cases of deportable aliens under the grounds for deportation appearing in the warrants of deportation. To ascertain which cases are comprehended within the terms of the bill it will be necessary to examine each and every file which contains a deportation order. The cases of those found to be within the terms of the bill will have to be investigated for the purpose of discovering their whereabouts and for the further purpose of apprehending them as required by the act. It would, therefore, seem that unless Congress contemplates a vast enlargement of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, some period of limitation should be inserted in the bill if it is to become law.

Sincerely,

FRANCES PERKINS, Secretary.

Let us see what the Judiciary Committee has done. Unfortunately I was ill at home in my bed when the committee considered this bill, but I make this statement, and I challenge contradiction. The committee did not consider the opinions of the Secretary of Labor. The committee had no factual information before it as was given to them subsequently by the Secretary of Labor, who opposes most vehemently this bill.

Furthermore, the committee did not ask for factual information from the Department of State. Certainly that Department should have been consulted; and I may tell you this: If you now ask the Department its opinion, it will, beyond peradventure of doubt, coincide with the opposition of the Secretary of Labor.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. BROOKS. I have great respect for the gentleman's ability, and I heard him in the cloakroom a few minutes ago express his grave concern over this problem. How would the gentleman solve the problem in a way other than suggested?

Mr. CELLER. I would like to get rid of these despicable characters. It can only be done in pursuance of the Constitution, by according them a jury trial before an impartial judge upon factual evidence. That can be done. Secondly, if, however, that fails, as I said a few days ago, the Department of State is now working on this very matter in an endeavor to get these foreign countries to issue passports for the deportation of these wretched deportees.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. Not now. I will yield later.

Now, aside from the Wallis case, which points out the unconstitutionality of an act similar to the instant bill, as adverted to by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO], let me read to you briefly from the petition of Brooks, cited in Fifth Federal, second edition, page 238, a decision of the circuit court in the New England section. Pay attention to this, gentlemen, because it clearly indicates the unconstitutionality of this act:

In the original return—

Says the court—

the immigration authorities admit their utter inability to deport one Bonder to Russia, but venture the suggestion that the United States will shortly resume diplomatic relations with Russia, and that, therefore, this alien should be kept in imprisonment pending recognition of the Soviet Government.

The court goes on to say this:

It is too plain for argument that the court cannot entertain any such proposition. There is no power in this court or in any other tribunal in this country to hold indefinitely any sane citizen or alien in imprisonment, except as a punishment for a crime.

In other words, the holding of the alien is not a mere incident—it is not a mere step in the deportation proceedings if you seek to imprison or deprive the alien of his liberty for an indefinite period. The Wallis case said you could hold an alien a reasonable time, and that 4 months was a reasonable time, but you could not go beyond the 4-months' period in any circumstances. The Brooks case holds that you cannot hold "indefinitely." The instant bill permits detention indefinitely—"for life" is possible under it.

Let me read to you briefly from the decision of the United States Supreme Court in Wong Wing v. United States (163 U. S. 228), decided in 1895. That tested the constitutionality of a State statute which sought to hold a Chinaman in jail for 1 year, an alien:

So, too—

Mark ye this—

So, too, we think it would be plainly competent for Congress to declare the act of an alien in remaining unlawfully within the United States to be an offense punishable by fine or imprisonment if such offense were to be established by a judicial trial.

A judicial trial is essential. The bill before us sets up no judicial trial.

You can do all you are doing in the Hobbs bill, but you must do it in pursuance of the Constitution by judicial trial. Otherwise you have no power. You must have a trial before an impartial judge and jury.

Further, the same decision reads:

But to declare unlawful residence within the country to be an infamous offense punishable by deprivation of liberty and property would be to pass out of the sphere of constitutional legislation, unless provision were made that the fact of guilt should first be established by a judicial trial.

In other words, it is outside our power to do what the Hobbs bill says, because the deportee, the intended deportee, is not given a trial as to whether he is guilty of any offense. He is clamped into jail or a concentration camp just because his country of origin refuses to receive him.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. Not now; no.

It is said there is no provision for a concentration camp in this bill. It is not worded as such, but let me read to you first two previous bills introduced by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. WALTER. Will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. CELLER. I refuse now to yield. In just a moment I will yield.

H. R. 4768, introduced on March 4, provides on page 3:

That the Secretary of Labor is hereby authorized and directed to arrange for appropriate places of detention and to establish such appropriate places of detention, including such acreage for farming.

Now, if it is not possible to provide a concentration camp with such "acreage," I do not know what a concentration camp is.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I refuse to yield at this juncture.

The same language was used in a bill offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] on April 4, 1939 (H. R. 5526). If you will read the so-called Smith bill, H. R. 5138, which is now before the Judiciary Committee, you will find similar language, showing that there runs through all of these bills a certain type of philosophy whereby there is possible the apprehension of certain aliens and their incarceration into detention camps. The second step will be to get noncriminal aliens. The Lord knows what the final step might be.

The bill H. R. 5138 provides in section 27, page 16:

The Secretary of Labor is hereby authorized and directed to arrange for appropriate places of detention and to this end may select established institutions or may establish such appropriate places of detention as may be necessary, including such acreage for farming as may be desirable.

I maintain this, that an alien, under this bill, under the previous Hobbs bill, under the Smith bill, can be incarcerated at San Quentin Prison, at Lewisburg, at Ellis Island, in any stockade or concentration camp that the Secretary of Labor may wish to set up. She is given carte blanche in this regard.

I yield now to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALTER. The gentleman has just said when this bill was discussed by the Committee on the Judiciary he was not in the city of Washington.

For that reason I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the proposals he has just discussed with respect to concentration camps were considered and taken from the bill, and are not the subject matter of this bill.

Mr. CELLER. There is every possibility and every likelihood that the broad language of the present wording of the bill now under consideration would permit the establishment of any kind of stockade or a concentration camp anywhere in this land. I suggest that the gentleman reread the salient provisions of the bill.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Did not the gentleman cite the former bill of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] for the purpose of showing the philosophy underlying this type of legislation?

Mr. CELLER. I did.

It is sought to take this bill out of the realm of unconstitutionality by saying that the incarceration shall not be at hard labor.

"THOUGH NOT AT HARD LABOR"

This phrase does not save the bill from the charge of unconstitutionality. You cannot circumvent the Constitution that way. Hard labor is not the test. The test is deprivation of liberty and confinement or detention. Furthermore, the imprisonment is indefinite. It can be for life. There is undoubtedly deprivation of liberty without due process.

INDEFINITE DETENTION OF A DEPORTABLE ALIEN MAY INVOLVE CRUEL AND UNUSUAL PUNISHMENT

The alien who could be deported because of factors beyond his control would virtually be imprisoned for life in violation of the eighth amendment to the United States Constitution:

Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted (U. S. Constitution, amendment VIII).

DOUBLE JEOPARDY—INDEFINITE DETENTION OF DEPORTABLE ALIENS MAY INVOLVE DOUBLE PUNISHMENT FOR THE SAME CRIME

Aliens convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude, of a violation of the narcotics law, of engaging in the business of prostitution, or of preaching anarchy would serve their terms and then be subject to deportation. If later incarcerated for the original offense, they would be placed twice in jeopardy of life and limb contra to the provisions of the fifth amendment to the United States Constitution.

Nor shall any person be subject for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy of life and limb (United States Constitution, amendment V).

USE OF THE WORDS "GOOD CAUSE" DOES NOT RENDER THE BILL CONSTITUTIONAL

The bill contains no definition whatsoever of the phrase "good cause," as same is used on page 2, lines 15 and 16, and on page 3, line 6. What is "good cause" to one Secretary may be "bad cause" to another. There is no standard in the bill to govern the validity of the Secretary's action. She is a law unto herself. The provision, therefore, for review to the circuit court of appeals is meaningless. Since the Secretary's word would be final, despite the wording of section 4, all that the circuit court of appeals can do is to examine into the legality of the procedure taken by the Secretary. The review is like the review in the Habeas Corpus case.

I quote from the letter of the Secretary of Labor:

It is also true that an alien detained under the terms of the act may, upon petition filed with the circuit court of appeals for the circuit in which the place of confinement of the particular alien is located, test the legality of the Secretary's order of detention under the act. But this is not a judicial commitment after trial. The power of the circuit court of appeals, although the court is vested with original and exclusive jurisdiction to hear such petitions, is to consider the legality of the detention. Under the language of the act that power necessarily is limited to a consideration of the legality of the finding of the Secretary of Labor as to the alien's deportability and the inability of the Government to execute the order of deportation within 90 days of its entry. The judicial scope of review is narrow and similar to that now exercised in habeas corpus proceedings in all immigration cases. The court may discharge an alien from custody if as a matter of law the finding of the Secretary of Labor cannot be supported—the court may not on a question of fact substitute its own judgment as to what disposition should be made of the case. Therefore, it does not follow that the provisions for judicial review remove the instant bill from the implications of the doctrine of the Wong Wing case (supra).

INDEFINITE DETENTION OF ALIENS IN DEPORTATION PROCEEDINGS IS UNCONSTITUTIONAL

There is no power in this court or in any other tribunal in this country to hold indefinitely any sane citizen or alien in imprisonment, except as a punishment for crime. Slavery was abolished by the thirteenth amendment. It is elementary that deportation or exclusion proceedings are not punishment for crime (Bilokumsky v. Tod, 263 U. S. 149, 154, 44 S. Ct. 54, 68, L. Ed. 221; Fond Yue Ting v. U. S., 149 U. S. 698, 730, 13 S. Ct. 1016, 37 L. Ed. 905; Bugajewitz v. Adams, 228 U. S. 585, 591, 33 S. Ct. 607, 57 L. Ed. 978; petition of Brooks, 5 F. (2d) 238).

Ordinarily deportation is a civil proceeding but when accompanied by indefinite imprisonment it becomes a criminal proceeding.

The courts have repeatedly held that deportation proceedings are civil and not criminal in their nature (Zakonaite v. Wolf, 226 U. S. 272; United States v. Williams, 194 U. S. 289). That is the reason why Congress has been permitted to provide for deportation through administrative proceedings without a jury trial and without the ordinary safeguards of the rules of evidence. If Congress provides for imprisonment, however, for deportable persons it would seem to follow that such persons are entitled to a jury trial, the assistance of counsel, compulsory process, and other rights secured to persons accused of crime by the fifth and sixth amendments to the Constitution, since the courts have held that these amendments apply to the prosecution of aliens as well as citizens.

Congress cannot confine any alien for an indefinite period or so long as an administrative official shall deem proper (Wong Wing v. U. S., 163 U. S. 228).

THE PROBLEMS AT WHICH THIS BILL AIMS WILL NOT BE SOLVED

I again quote from the Secretary of Labor's letter, as follows:

In virtually all these cases the reason given by the foreign consular officer for refusal to issue the travel document was that under the nationality laws of his country the alien could no longer be deemed a national. It is very unlikely that the enactment of this bill would cause foreign governments to change their nationality laws. While there are undoubtedly a few cases where deportation is thwarted by the failure of the alien to cooperate with the United States Government in pressing his own government for a passport, the Department has no evidence that these cases are numerous, and it would seem that a possible result of the bill might be the isolation of a comparatively small number of aliens who, because of conflicts between the nationality laws of this country and the nationality laws of their native land, face a condition of statelessness for an indefinite period.

IMPRISONMENT IS NOT THE RESULT OF THE ALIEN'S ACTION

I quote from pages 4 and 5 of the Secretary of Labor's letter:

Such imprisonment is not a temporary confinement, a part of the means necessary to give effect to the exclusion or deportation of aliens. The basis for imprisonment is not, except remotely, the result of the alien's actions; deportation may not take place within 90 days after a finding of deportability has been made because of the acts of others or causes beyond the alien's control. The failure or refusal of the country of the deportee's alleged nationality to issue a passport or other travel authorization for deportation is not the act of the alien. The illness of the alien, which may make his deportation impracticable within the period stipulated by the statute, is not his responsibility. * * *

The present draft of section 1 requires not only the confinement of aliens whose deportation is known cannot be effected but necessitates the apprehension and confinement of an alien who may be too ill to travel under a deportation order even though it is known that a passport or travel authorization will issue shortly after 90 days by the government of his nationality. This would apply even in instances where immediate steamship sailings are not available and, literally read, in instances where an alien may be serving a sentence in a State prison or penitentiary.

THERE IS NO INHERENT DANGER

I quote from my report:

During the last 9 years 205,094 aliens have been ordered deported from the United States. (See p. 191, hearings before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations on the Department of Labor appropriation bill for 1940.) During this same period there have been 3,376 aliens subject to warrants of deportation whose deportation has been impossible because of the inability of the Immigration and Naturalization Service to secure passports for them. In other words, the passport problem has detracted less than 2 percent from the effectiveness of the immigration laws. Even this figure is much too large to describe the problem with which this bill deals, since it relates only to aliens who fall into the following categories:

1. Criminals.
2. Violators of the narcotic laws.
3. Anarchists and kindred classes.
4. Immoral classes.

It is estimated that of the aliens deported from the United States only about 25 percent fall into any one of these categories. (See table 6, p. 101, Annual Report of the Secretary of Labor for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1938.) Consequently, it may be inferred that had this legislation been in effect for the past 9 years only about 850 aliens would have been subject to its provisions.

The committee has received no evidence that any of these 850 aliens are a menace to the United States or the peace and safety of our citizens. All of them are subject to the operation of the Criminal Code of the Federal Government and the laws and police regulations of the several States, and if they commit further offenses can be dealt with in the ordinary method of such laws.

What is the offense for which this bill proposes to subject them to indefinite imprisonment? Simply "because of the failure or refusal of the consular or diplomatic or other officers of the country of the alien's nationality * * * to issue a passport or other authorization permitting his return to the country of such nationality." In other words, an alien becomes subject to this bill even though he makes the most sincere efforts himself to obtain a passport to leave the country. There is nothing in the bill which limits it to recalcitrant aliens who refuse to apply for passports or to aliens who conspire to produce a situation causing a foreign consular officer to refuse a travel document.

THE BILL IS RETROACTIVE

I quote from page 6 of the Secretary of Labor's letter:

Attention is also drawn to the fact that the bill is retroactive, and for that reason, if enacted into law, an administrative task of considerable magnitude would be created. The bill would make it necessary for the Immigration and Naturalization Service to review the files of all the deportation cases since the establishment of the Department in order to ascertain those cases in which a final deportation order issued but which for various reasons was not effected.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. LEMKE].

Mr. LEMKE. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this bill because I am against concentration camps. I do not care whether they are constitutional or unconstitutional, they are un-American. I believe that this is the beginning of the system that some European nations have adopted, a system of barbarism and brutality. I believe this bill will be followed and enlarged upon, if it is held constitutional, and that this system will continue to grow, so that if we are again asked to pull the chestnuts of some foreign nation out of the fire as in 1917, that then about one-half of our people will find themselves in concentration camps.

We do not intend to again send our sons on foreign battlefields for Great Britain or any other nation. We will defend our own country but not other countries, and our sons are not going to go into concentration camps for refusing to do so.

I believe that this is not a question of 460 criminals. These 460 criminals are answerable to the laws of this Nation. Under our Constitution we can hang them if they commit a capital offense. Under our Constitution we can keep them imprisoned for life if they commit a capital offense; and under our Constitution and laws they will have to answer the same as other criminals. We have at least 3,500 native criminals for every one of these aliens.

Let us consider this bill a little further. My friend from Michigan let the cat out of the bag when he said that really what it was aimed to do was to get rid of 50 propagandists; and again I am with him. On election day, you know, I would like to send to concentration camps all of my political enemies for a day or so [applause], and then I would let them out. I would not want them subjected to the cruel and inhuman punishment of being kept in a concentration camp for life just because no foreign nation would want them. It might be for the reason that they considered them too conservative.

We have now under consideration in this Congress a bill to prohibit Mr. Bergdoll from coming back, and I am not so sure but what that is proper; but then, how can we object if other nations follow our example and refuse to allow their criminals to return when we refuse to have our draft dodgers come back to us?

Let us be American citizens and remember that this is not a question of criminals, it is a question of policy, of our beginning to ape some European nations.

I may be prejudiced against concentration camps, but I came by it naturally. When we declared war on Spain I was one of 87 students of the University of North Dakota who offered to enlist, not because of the sinking of the Maine but because of the cruelty and the brutality that was practiced in the concentration camps in Cuba. Again I read a few years ago of the cruelty and brutality practiced by Russia in Siberia on the poor devils who were condemned and sent to the concentration camps because of their political beliefs.

That system seems to me to be un-American; and, as far as the constitutionality of this act is concerned, I believe we all must admit that the Constitution means a different thing to each of us as we view it from our individual viewpoint. To me, if I read the Declaration of Independence in connection with the Constitution, I need no Supreme Court to tell me that this act infringes upon the constitutional rights of aliens within our borders, because it provides for cruel and inhuman punishment. It is just another step to endanger our liberties, because it will not be long before whenever a person differs from us we will want to send him to the concentration camp.

We are told there are 460 affected by this legislation at present; that is 1 out of every 300,000 in the United States. Let us now turn to our own citizens. They are not all angels. We have 1 criminal in every 37 of our population. The bill under consideration affects only 1 person out of 300,000. Our own Nation in taking care of our criminals spends $15,000,000,000 a year. One million four hundred and fifteen thousand major criminal offenses are committed each year. I refer you to the 1939 World Almanac, page 78, for this information.

It seems to me that under these conditions our responsibility begins at home with our own citizens. Why in a world of madness should we lose our head and ape the European nations? Our responsibility begins at home with the cause that brings about these criminal acts. Do you know that we have been driving hundreds and thousands, and millions of men, women, and children out of their homes? We talk about communism, yet we prepare the seedbed in which communism thrives. Rags, hunger, filth, and poverty—that is where the Communists originate, that is where they grow. Let us remedy the cause and quit fighting the effect, and there will be no more communism. Then we will not need concentration camps. [Applause.]

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the Chair advise me how the time stands?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York has 13½ minutes remaining, the gentleman from Kansas has 4 minutes remaining.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS].

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for 17½ minutes.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, we are perfectly willing to concede the authority of the World Almanac quoted by the distinguished gentleman from North Dakota, but we lack a whole lot of being ready to go along with the legal opinion of the distinguished Secretary of Labor, who is a most estimable lady; but she does not even claim to be a lawyer, and so stated before our committee.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I would, sir, be glad to yield to you as soon as I would to anybody in the world, but I must decline to yield to anyone until I have finished my statement. Then I shall be happy to yield to the gentleman first of all.

Bishop Warren A. Candler, distinguished senior bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was holding a conference in my home town upon one occasion and he preached upon the text involving Ananias and Sapphira. He said, when he had finished his dissertation: "Ananias and Sapphira were not stricken dead by God for lying. God does not strike people dead for lying. If he did, where would I be?"

There was a titter went through that vast audience that this distinguished prelate should thus involve himself. He said, "I will tell you where I would be. I would be standing up here preaching to a bunch of corpses."

I, too, am glad that God does not strike people dead for lying, for if he did, some of the arguments advanced in the latest edition of this Communist organ would relieve us of some of the responsibility which we are trying to subserve in this bill. I hold in my hand a telegram, which is one of thousands sent out from Washington, D. C., although signed as though it were from Louisville, Ky., and elsewhere, advising you how to vote on this bill.

So these preposterous misrepresentations flood us.

I want to read to you an amusing post card which came to my desk with thousands of others in the last few days. It is directed to Congressman Heil Hitler HOBBS:

As to your Fascist bill, H. R. 5643, America is going to remember you very well, Mr. Snobs, Wobs, or Chobs. The name "HOBBS" has the stench of an English pigpen about it, and so certainly is appropriate, Mr. Knobs. Go back to Hitler, you dirty skunk.

If this were a cussing match, I would be outclassed. But I do not hold any grudge against this communistic organ, nor against the equally communistic force behind those thousands of telegrams. I hold no resentment against this gentleman, because he does not know any better. Of course, every one who can read the English language knows that there is no concentration camp provided for in this bill. There is no detention camp provided in this bill, and there is no provision even remotely suggesting either.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER], the distinguished ranking member of our committee in the absence of the chairman, complains that the Judiciary Committee did not take into consideration a letter written by the Secretary of Labor. If he will take the trouble to look at that letter he will see that it was written after the bill was reported to the House. But had that letter been there, I reiterate, a committee of 25 lawyers would not be very apt to follow the advice of the Secretary of Labor upon the question of the constitutionality of this bill, unless they agreed—which they do not.

It is said that the present law is sufficient. Sufficient for what? Sufficient to promote continuation of the pollution and poisoning of the blood stream of the body politic of this Nation. That is all for which it is sufficient. The honorable gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN], chairman of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, complains that he now has in the Rules Committee a bill, which is being held up there, that would do what? Permit him and his committee to study the problem. In God's name, what have you been doing all these years? Why can you not study it now? You do not need a rule. What you need is an inclination to act. [Applause.]

While you are "cussing" the Rules Committee for not giving you authority to make a study, we are doing business for God and for this country in the pending bill. [Applause.]

I shall quote now from the minority report made by the gentleman from New York, Mr. EMANUEL CELLER, in which it is said that only 850 would be taken care of by this bill. Well, 12 men that we read of in Holy Writ turned the world upside down in less than a generation and did so by preaching a gospel, to which we have become sadly hardened in modern times.

Mr. Chairman, I am glad this bill comes up for final passage in child-health week, because our children all over the country are being debauched by peddlers going up and down this broad land of ours selling school children marijuana cigarettes, selling narcotics, and making dope fiends of the flower of our youth.

A distinguished gentleman from a neighboring State told me just yesterday that he knew of one woman who had sent into the pollution of the baudy house and that life over 100 girls from his State. We allow those people to walk around as free as any one of us. That is what you are pleading for, whether you know it or not, or whether you admit it, if you do know.

May I call attention to a letter from the distinguished general counsel of the C. I. O., Mr. Lee Pressman. This went to every one of you. I will not take the time to read it, because all of you received it, and I have no doubt you read it, as I did. He states that these people, through no fault of their own, are unable to secure a passport.

That is not what the men of the Immigration and Naturalization Bureau tell me.

They tell me that 90 percent of the people covered by my bill are here as the result of slipping a bribe to a local consular agent or by collusion with their home governments. In other words, when they are so good at spreading communistic and anarchistic propaganda as to be valuable to Russia, Russia will not receive them back but wants to keep them on the job. Then the small fry go down and slip a hundred-dollar bill to a local consular agent of their foreign government and say, "Now remember, big boy, I have been trying ever since Christmas to think of something nice to buy you, but I haven't been able to decide. Here is something I want you to take and use just as you see fit. There is just one thing I want you to remember, and that is, I don't want to go back to Italy." That is why many of them are here, so the experts tell me.

I want to answer Mr. Lee Pressman's question with another question. Granting that there may be some of them who are denied permission to go back home through no fault of their own, I ask him how in God's world is Uncle Sam to blame for that?

Then he states:

This procedure is a violation of the fundamental principles of justice and in contravention of our constitutional guaranties.

That is just on a par with the statements of these gentlemen who have been prating about the fourteenth amendment and the fifth and sixth amendments, which are stressed in the minority report, and all this bunk about due process, all of which the Supreme Court of the United States says has nothing in God's world to do with the issue here presented.

Many of the authorities which the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] has quoted in his two arguments here deal exclusively with criminal cases, and then in his own minority report he stresses the fact that this is a civil proceeding, which, of course, it is. Therefore, the fourteenth amendment and the fifth and sixth amendments, the due-process clauses, have nothing to do with the subject matter of this bill; but I will come to that when I begin to discuss the constitutionality.

Mr. Pressman states that this bill is unconstitutional and is null and void, yet he says it is going to work a great hardship on somebody. He says this bill is used to intimidate and threaten workers who are exercising their ordinary rights, and so forth and so on. Yes; it is used to intimidate workers and it is intimidating them and all their buddies. But who are these busy bees, the workers this bill intimidates? They are the white-slave procurer, the pimp, the man who shares the wage of shame, the peddlers of dope, and those who have committed crimes involving moral turpitude.

Those men and the anarchists and the Communists and their ilk are the "workers" this bill not only seeks to intimidate but does intimidate [applause]; and they and their ilk and their sponsors are the very ones I am shooting at and talking about.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] made a statement today hedging a little bit on the statement he made in his former debate on the rule. Today he said the State Department would, beyond the peradventure of a doubt, agree with the Secretary of Labor, but the other day he said:

I have been in touch with the State Department. They have indicated they would much prefer to deal with the question in the way indicated by the gentleman from California—namely, by treaty arrangement—and for some time past they have been endeavoring to work out a situation satisfactory to all parties. They feel that this method of attacking the problem is an erroneous method.

I did not know anyone to appeal to in the State Department except the head of it—the Secretary of State, the Honorable Cordell Hull. He read me the only letter the Department had written on this subject. It had never been signed and had never been dispatched; yet the gentleman from New York says they have written a strong letter opposing my bill.

Mr. Hull read the letter to me. The letter did not say so, and it had not gone out when the gentleman from New York made that statement. Now, I do not know to whom the gentleman has been talking in the State Department, but I give you my authority.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] and several others would have you believe that the violation of the prohibition law, when the old Volstead Act was in effect, could possibly come under this bill. On the question of moral turpitude, I have here the definition of that phrase given in Webster's New International Dictionary:

The quality of a crime involving grave infringement of the moral sentiment of the community as distinguished from statutory mala prohibita.

Moral turpitude is defined in Forty-sixth Federal Reports, second edition, page 755, as "An act of baseness, vileness, or depravity," and in Thirty-fourth Federal Reports, second edition, page 920, as "shamefully immoral." That is moral turpitude.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. Yes; I will be glad to yield to the gentleman, because I am using his name, and I would love to have the gentleman answer.

Mr. CELLER. Does not the gentleman know that in many States during the prohibition period a violation of the Prohibition Act was deemed a crime involving moral turpitude?

Mr. HOBBS. That is quite true, but the gentleman does not go on. The gentleman does not dare dispute this statement—that there has never been in the history of this Government a single alien deported on that ground.

Mr. CELLER. Is it possible to do so under the bill?

Mr. HOBBS. Certainly, it is not; of course not, and nobody knows it, in my judgment, better than the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CELLER. I may say to the gentleman that is not so, because it is perfectly possible under the act.

Mr. HOBBS. That is the gentleman's opinion, and, thank God, it is not mine, because I am going to read you what the Supreme Court of the United States has to say on the subject. My bill provides only for those convicted of crime, and "crime" means "felony." A violation of the prohibition law is a misdemeanor, and never has been anything else.

There was a case—and that was what I expected to get out of the gentleman from New York when he rose—of Rousseau against Weedin, reported in Two Hundred and Eighty-fourth Federal Reports, 565, where a man who ran a house of ill fame in which he sold liquor illegally, as a business, was convicted under a Washington State statute of being a "jointist," that is, a man who ran a "joint." The court said that because the "joint" he ran was of ill repute and running for the open sale of liquor in violation of the Washington State statute he could be deported. [Applause.] That is the only case in our Nation's history, and it was not a mere case of possessing liquor, such as they hypothesize.

Therefore, there is no case in the past to be resurrected; if there were it would be only a misdemeanor case and not a "crime" as this bill reads. So their alleged fears on this score are absolutely groundless.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any alien in any of the classes indicated in section 2 of this act who has been or may hereafter be ordered deported by the Secretary of Labor, but whose deportation or departure from the United States otherwise is not effectuated within 90 days after the date the warrant of deportation shall have become final, shall be taken into custody and transported to such place of detention as may be designated by the Secretary of Labor, and there, or in such other place or places as may be thereafter designated by the Secretary of Labor, confined, though not at hard labor, until such time as deportation shall have become feasible, or departure from the United States otherwise shall have been arranged, or until the Secretary of Labor, upon sufficient evidence of good cause, shall order the release of such alien, temporarily or permanently, on such bond as may be required, with or without rescinding the warrant of deportation.

Any alien detained hereunder may secure his release from detention upon a showing which shall satisfy the Secretary of Labor that he has obtained a travel document or made other approved arrangements to leave the United States and giving departure bond conditioned as prescribed by the Secretary of Labor, with good and sufficient sureties approved by the Secretary of Labor.

Should any such alien return to the United States after having departed he shall be excluded, or, if that be not legally possible, he shall be taken into custody and confined in accordance with the provisions of this act.

In determining whether good cause has been shown to justify the release of an alien, on bond or otherwise, the Secretary of Labor shall take into account such factors as (1) the age and health of the alien, (2) the likelihood of the alien's resuming the course of conduct which made him deportable, (3) the character of the efforts made by such alien himself and by representatives of the country to which his deportation is directed to expedite the alien's departure from the United States, (4) the reason for the inability of the Immigration and Naturalization Service to secure passports or other travel documents from the country to which the alien has been ordered deported.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I may say to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] I had several conversations with a very distinguished official of the State Department, and he indicated to me exactly what I stated on the floor this afternoon. I have a very high regard for the ability of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS], but I fear in regard to his bill he is enthusiastically misguided.

Now, it is sought to take this bill out of the realm of unconstitutionality by saying that the imprisonment shall not be at hard labor, but there shall nevertheless be imprisonment. This phrase does not save the bill from the charge of unconstitutionality. You cannot circumvent the Constitution in that way. Hard labor is not the test. I repeat, the test is deprivation of liberty and confinement or detention; and incidentally, Mr. Chairman, this bill may involve detention for life. It may involve a period of 4 years for the present Secretary of Labor and 4 years for the succeeding Secretary of Labor, and all those who follow 4 years each. There is no provision in this bill that the deportee can raise the question and say, "You shall not continue me in confinement for one day longer." This is deprivation, to my mind, without due process, and therefore it is violative of the Constitution.

I asked the Labor Department to advise me what countries were refusing to grant these passports, and it might interest you to know that almost every country on the face of the globe—and I shall put the names of the countries in the RECORD—have refused to grant passports in certain of these cases. So you are trying to pass a bill here today which will give offense, serious offense, to almost every nation on the face of the globe—and why do I say that? Because I fear this: How many Americans do you think are living abroad? Three hundred and sixty thousand Americans are living abroad, and their lives and their property are jeopardized by the passage of a bill of this character which gives offense, and serious offense in the opinion of the State Department, to these nations.

Do you believe these countries are going to take this kind of punishment without retaliation? Will they take it sitting down? You can rest assured that they are going to retaliate and they are going to retaliate in no uncertain terms, and that is why the State Department, as I have been informed, says it would be far better to treat with these nations and endeavor to get mutual arrangements whereby we would issue passports and they would issue passports to those sought to be covered by this bill.

I have put in the RECORD a very long memorandum sent by the Department of Labor to the chairman of the Judiciary Committee on April 19. It may have been after the report was written by the gentleman from Alabama. It was before my report was written, and why did not the gentleman from Alabama confer with the Secretary of Labor and get these facts before he attempted to legislate on a matter as important as the bill before us today? Why did he not go to the State Department before he drew his report and get the factual information? There are seven closely typewritten pages of very important factual information contained in the letter sent to the chairman of our committee by the Secretary of Labor.

Furthermore, I could go on and give you citations from over 100 cases, and I have spent much time on the subject, clearly indicating that this bill violates the fifth, the sixth, the fourteenth, and the eighth amendments.

Mr. O'TOOLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. O'TOOLE. Does the gentleman think that anyone who is detained as a result of this bill would have an action in tort for such detention?

Mr. CELLER. He might have; I do not know. I have not examined that.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Is there any provision in this bill which protects a person who is innocent; in other words, if the Secretary of Labor says that Mr. So-and-So is an alien who has been convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude and is going to detain him, if that person is not an alien and has not been convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude, what provision is there in this bill that protects that person?

Mr. CELLER. None.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I assure the House this is not going to keep up, but I did not finish one or two important matters.

I will answer the question of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO]. Any person is arrested under an initial warrant of arrest in deportation proceedings and at any minute from then on, clear through, he has a right to do what Joe Strecker did in his case, petition for the writ of habeas corpus. Joe Strecker tried it in Arkansas and lost out, so he took another bite at the cherry and went down to New Orleans and tried it again. Both decisions were against him, so he took an appeal to the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, and that decision was in his favor.

Then the United States certioraried the case to the Supreme Court of the United States, which, in effect, affirmed the decision of the circuit court and turned him loose. That is how the practice works, and that way is open to every single one of these cases, and all this bill touches are those who, in the four worst classes, have been ordered deported finally after all these legal hurdles have been cleared.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a reply?

Mr. HOBBS. No; I would be glad to if I had the time, but there are one or two matters I must touch on.

I want to read you this from the United States decisions:

> This [deportation] statute is valid though it provides an administrative instead of a judicial hearing, an alien remaining unlawfully in this country having no right to a hearing unless it be accorded him by Congress (7th C. C. Ap., 25 Fed. 2d, 714).

I do not have time to read any more citations. I want to tell you about Caesare Valenti, of Philadelphia. He is one of those birds that these gentlemen are arguing for today, the man who has just confessed being part of a poison ring up there which has poisoned 21, according to his own knowledge, and possibly more than 100 others. There are one or two others that I would love to call attention to. I have a letter from Mr. Houghteling giving me the facts about Valenti. He says it appears he was in constant conflict with the police authorities in Italy from 1890 until he came here in 1909. He plead guilty to murder in the second degree since he came here, and was sentenced to 15 years of imprisonment. He is under deportation proceedings now, and is one of a poison ring. Go to it. Keep them here, if you want to, but I do not. [Applause.]

Now, I promised to say something in answer to Mr. GAVAGAN's fear about the ex post facto laws. The ex post facto guaranty has nothing in God's world to do with this problem. That means if I commit an act, by no law passed thereafter by any legislative body can that act be made an offense which was not an offense at the time I did the act. That is all it means. The Supreme Court has so held many times.

Now I want to talk about the Wallis case. I think they have misconceived its meaning. The Wallis case says that the "alibi" of the immigration authorities was that they could not get transportation back to England. The report said, and very properly, "the war is over. This transportation problem is no longer a problem."

You can buy a ticket to England any week. If you let 4 months go by without doing so, then you cannot detain this alien longer under the pretense that you cannot get transportation. But no such case is here presented. Transportation is easy to get. It is landing permits which we lack. Foreign governments are denying landing permits, and by thus thumbing their noses at Uncle Sam are thwarting our Nation's sovereign right to deport those who have been adjudged by our constituted authorities unfit to live here. We cannot run other countries, but we can run our own, so if we cannot send them back home we will at least keep them out of circulation till they arrange to leave.

I want to say just this word more. What is this proposal, essentially? You would think we were trying to punish somebody for a crime. Not at all. The word "deportation" comes from the Latin and means to carry away. "Deportare" De—from; portare—to carry or transport. It means banishment. As long as the sovereignty of the United States of America is subject to veto by any foreign government in any respect, its sovereignty, to that extent, is a joke. Every free and independent nation has the right of deportation, indisputably. In 460 cases last year other nations prevented us from exercising that sovereign right. What are we going to do about it? This bill is an honest attempt to answer that question. Let us pass it. [Applause.]

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HANCOCK: On page 2, line 4, after the word "who", strike out "has been or."

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is obvious. It eliminates from the bill the retroactive feature. Whether my amendment is accepted or not, I intend to vote for this bill. I feel it is the duty of Congress to protect our Government against alien enemies within our borders who would destroy it, and to protect society against the most vicious and dangerous classes of crooks that we have among us, just as far as we can. Legislation to this end ought to be passed.

However, there are certain constitutional questions here which, I think, should be discussed while we are considering the bill. I feel they are sufficiently serious to jeopardize the ultimate fate of the bill. However, I do not intend to set myself up as a court of last resort. I am willing that these questions shall be submitted to the courts, and we will, of course, have to abide by their decision.

I am unable to persuade myself that the right to detain an alien indefinitely is a mere incident to the right to deport an alien. It seems clear to me that to keep a nondeportable alien in custody, possibly for life, goes far beyond any reasonable construction that might be placed upon the right to deport, and must be classified as punishment. Such punishment, despite the eloquence of my good friend from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS], is ex post facto, if I understand the meaning of that term. It imposes punishment upon a man who has been convicted of a crime and who has paid the law's penalty. To impose a new punishment for the same offense, in addition to the punishment that has already been inflicted upon him, is an ex post facto provision and is contrary to section IX, article I, of the Constitution itself.

There is another amendment that should be offered to this section if this bill is going to stand up in court, in my judgment. There ought to be some limitation placed upon the period within which the Secretary of Labor is allowed to detain an alien. It should be a period long enough to permit the Secretary of Labor to devise means of ridding this country of these undesirable aliens, or long enough to permit the Secretary of State to negotiate with foreign nations and agree upon treaties which would take care of the problem.

Under present law the Secretary of Labor in the case of the alien ordered to be deported must take that alien into custody and deport him. There is no limit fixed by law upon the time within which the alien must be deported, but the courts have fixed it for us as a "reasonable period." I think we have the right to determine what constitutes a reasonable period; it is a legislative rather than a judicial function. It cannot be without limit, and it should not rest entirely on the judgment or the caprice of a single executive officer, the Secretary of Labor. I think 5 years is the longest that any court would sustain as being a reasonable period, and I propose to offer such an amendment if the pending amendment is agreed to. One further point in connection with this amendment I wish to call to your attention and that is this: Should this bill be passed as written, it will impose an almost impossible administrative task upon the Secretary of Labor.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK. I yield.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. The gentleman states that it would impose an impossible task on the Secretary of Labor, yet the gentleman said he would vote for the bill whether his amendment was adopted or not.

Mr. HANCOCK. As I said before, I am not setting myself up as the court of last resort or as an authority on constitutional questions. I am giving the membership the benefit of such wisdom as I possess and for what it is worth.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. The gentleman said that the bill is retroactive.

Mr. HANCOCK. I claim that it is ex post facto.

Mr. CELLER. Would that mean that even though an alien has been here 40 years but that way back in the early days of his sojourn in this country he committed two offenses, that he could be apprehended because of that and deported?

Mr. HANCOCK. Yes; he could under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. CELLER. Under the provisions appearing on page 2, subsections (b) and (c)?

Mr. HANCOCK. Yes; under subsection (c), no matter when the crimes were committed.

Mr. CELLER. And no matter how long he has been in this country?

Mr. HANCOCK. It is my belief that if a man has been convicted and has served his sentence, he cannot now under a new enactment be taken into custody and confined indefinitely for the same crime. This is an ex post facto provision and is unconstitutional. I submit the question for your consideration. I do not claim to be a great student of the Constitution, but I think I have raised a question which ought to be given your best thought. Let us not be carried away either by prejudice or emotion. Let us soberly and calmly consider this bill and endeavor to perfect it so it will pass the test of the courts.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, there is no man in this House for whose opinion I have a higher regard than the distinguished gentleman who has just resumed his seat after making his honest criticism, which I welcome.

I read from the case of Wong Wing v. United States (163 U. S. 228) this statement:

Detention is a usual feature of every case of arrest on a criminal charge, even when an innocent person is wrongfully accused. But it is not imprisonment in a legal sense.

I would agree with the gentleman fully if we could accomplish the purpose, deportation. As a matter of fact, his fears and all the fears that have been expressed are groundless, because not one of these aliens is going to stay in detention 10 minutes before sending a whisper to the consular agent of his home government, "Big boy, I no longer have my fingers crossed; let me out," and out he will come; or he can send word to his home folk to intervene with their government back home.

They talk about the stateless people. Let me answer just a word as to that. The bill reads "or other travel documents." In other words, not only is it possible to go out under a passport but they can go out under a visitor's visa, or under a sailor's contract, and stay at home 30 days in any port by reason of working on a boat, and then, if they overstay the 30-day limit in the foreign port, they would not be doing a thing more than what they did here, and that is staying illegally; or they can go over under what is known as a travel document. In one of those four ways they can go, and they will begin trying to do it within 20 minutes after they are put in detention. But whether they are able to get out in one of these ways or not, whether I am right or wrong, I did not take any chances of doing injustice. I left it to the discretion of the Secretary of Labor for good cause shown, by evidence, which the Secretary is required by this bill to make a synopsis of and put in the files, to turn them loose. This, sir, is an honest answer to your honest query.

Now, as far as 5 years are concerned, I may say that not until deportation—which is synonymous, say the dictionaries, with banishment—not until deportation has been accomplished is any deportee entitled to become a free man. He has had his day in court, he has had a hearing, he has had the right of appeal, he has had the right of habeas corpus, he has had, in effect, every right known to an American citizen. After all of the proceedings and solemn adjudication of your Government made, in obedience to congressional mandate, by administrative authority has said to such a person, "You are not fit to live here, go home," that command can never become an accomplished fact until the person leaves. I say, therefore, that "ex post facto" has nothing in God's world to do with the problem here sought to be solved.

The question asked by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER], he knows as well as I do, is answered by the statement that that is existing law.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I yield.

Mr. HANCOCK. I have great sympathy with the gentleman's objectives and want to help him accomplish them.

Mr. HOBBS. I realize that, sir, and appreciate it.

Mr. HANCOCK. But, in my opinion, the constitutional question raised is serious. I cannot persuade myself to the belief that detaining an alien, keeping him in custody for life, is not punishment.

Mr. HOBBS. I refer the gentleman to the authority I read from the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. HANCOCK. That is where our minds do not go along together.

Hr. HOBBS. Not until deportation—taking and carrying away, separation from our soil—has become a completed fact does detention become unreasonable.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, some of the proponents of this bill are trying to give the impression to the members of the Committee that it only refers to those aliens who have been guilty of the most loathsome, hideous crimes. In this connection, may I say that within the past 2 months I had up with the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization a matter in connection with deportation proceedings and I think I can present my idea of this subject by reading a letter which I received from the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization, dated March 7, 1939, as follows:

Hon. HERMAN P. EBERHARTER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN EBERHARTER: Supplementing letter addressed to you by this office on February 23, 1939, relative to the case of Vincenzo Giuseppe Pieroni, I have to advise that after considering the evidence adduced at the hearing accorded this alien it was found necessary to issue a warrant, dated March 6, 1939, for his deportation to Italy on the ground that he has been sentenced, subsequent to May 1, 1917, to imprisonment more than once for a term of 1 year or more for the commission subsequent to entry of a crime involving moral turpitude, to-wit; defrauding the United States of tax; defrauding the United States of tax; defrauding the United States of tax.

In view of the alien's criminal record his deportation is mandatory and must be effected in due course.

Cordially yours,

BY DIRECTION OF THE COMMISSIONERS,
W. W. BROWN, Assistant.

In another letter, Mr. Brown, assistant to the Commissioner, refers to a case decided on August 20, 1938, by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, Fifth Circuit, in re Salvadore Guarneri against E. Kessler, that it is considered to be moral turpitude if you defraud the United States of a tax.

This means the pending bill refers to every alien convicted of defrauding the United States of a tax. It further means if an alien has in his possession liquor upon which the tax has not been paid, and he is convicted and sentenced, he comes within the purview of this bill.

Mr. Chairman, you are including in this drastic provision aliens who have defrauded the United States of a tax or who violate the revenue laws of this country. I think the bill is intemperate. I think it shows intolerance. I think it is un-American in every respect, and I submit it should be defeated.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise merely to give my interpretation of the language sought to be stricken by the pending amendment in its alleged ex post facto features.

As I see it, the language incorporated in the bill as it stands does not involve the question of ex post facto. If an alien commits a crime and the court assesses a punishment for that crime, then that is a punishment for the offense which the alien has committed; but by committing the crime he makes himself subject to deportation, and the action sought here does not attach to his original crime as a penalty but attaches merely to the deportation as a protection of this Government by reason of the fact that he is subject to deportation on account of having committed the crime.

In my judgment, any punishment that may be imposed by this measure arises by reason of the fact that the alien is subject to deportation and is not inflicted as a penalty for the crime which he committed and which rendered him subject to deportation.

Mr. ROUTZOHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. ROUTZOHN. With reference to the point the gentleman is making, is that not analogous to depriving a man of voting who has committed a crime and has been convicted of same? Is it not the same thing?

Mr. LANHAM. The gentleman has cited a clear analogy, and I thank him for his contribution.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, this thing that has so unexpectedly shown its head is the most lovely and beautiful creature met since we came together at the beginning of the present session. We can now see a rainbow spanning the horizon, wherein for many months dark clouds have been hanging low. I perceive as I look about the body and see the activity today that those who have been a little bit reluctant to put any responsibility in the hands of the Secretary of Labor have today decided that they can gladly bestow upon her a responsibility with which even some of her most ardent friends are afraid to clothe her on this occasion. Who can, in my position, refuse? So I may say I have decided to go along and join them. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HANCOCK].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. This act shall apply only to those aliens of one or more of the following-described classes: (a) Those aliens ordered deported under the act of October 16, 1918, entitled "An act to exclude and expel from the United States aliens who are members of the anarchistic and similar classes," as amended by the act of June 5, 1920 (40 Stat. 1012; 41 Stat. 1008, U. S. C., title 8, sec. 137); (b) those aliens who have beeen sentenced to imprisonment for a term of 1 year or more because of conviction in this country of a crime involving moral turpitude, not connected with their own entry or naturalization, committed within 5 years after the entry of the alien to the United States; (c) those aliens who have been sentenced more than once to a term of 1 year or more of imprisonment because of conviction in this country of a crime or crimes involving moral turpitude; (d) those aliens who have received, shared in, or derived benefit from any part of the earnings of any prostitute or have in any way assisted any prostitute or protected or promised to protect from arrest any prostitute or have imported or attempted to import any person for the purpose of prostitution; (e) those aliens ordered deported under the act of May 26, 1922, entitled "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act to prohibit the importation and use of opium for other than medicinal purposes,' approved February 9, 1909, as amended" (42 Stat. 596; U. S. C., title 21, sec. 175); or the act of February 18, 1931, entitled "An act to provide for the deportation of aliens convicted and sentenced for violation of any law regulating traffic in narcotics" (46 Stat. 1171; U. S. C., title 8, sec. 156 (a)).

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SCHULTE: Page 4, line 24, strike out the comma, insert a colon, and add: "Provided further, That this act shall not apply to those aliens heretofore convicted of any violation of any law enacted under and by virtue of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution."

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Chairman, I want to start this little speech of mine by saying I am not a lawyer. I was mighty happy to sit on the side lines here and hear the controversy and disagreement among the lawyers of the House as to whether this bill is constitutional or not; and, certainly, if they cannot agree among themselves, how do they expect us to know. Perhaps it is just as well that my father did not allow me to become a lawyer. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Chairman, there is no question in my mind but what we are all agreed on the principles that are outlined in this bill. We oppose prostitution. I do not know of a character that is more despised in the United States than a man or woman, whether it be an American or an alien, who sells women.

I would like to go a little further than the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] would go with those fellows. I would like to take them out of circulation and place them on an island for life. That would cure that situation. Where we should get really drastic is with the sellers of dope, and I am in entire accord with the gentleman on that, in view of the sufferings the dope peddler causes humanity and the fact that many dope addicts never will be cured. Certainly the dope seller should be placed in that category. But are we not going just a bit too far in some instances in this bill? In January 1919 there was placed on the statute books of this country an act called the prohibition law. During this period a great many people made their own beer and wine and sometimes sold a little of it. Of course they were violating the law, and we helped them by buying it. A violator of this law, because he was rendering a public service during the time that law was in effect, up until 1933, we now seek to place in that same category. Because of the fact that some "snooper" would find his way into that man's little domicile or place where he was selling a glass of beer, an act which in a great many States was considered to involve moral turpitude, that man was taken into court and sentenced and fined for selling that one glass of beer; and you are placing that fellow in this same category with those who were selling women and peddling dope. That is why I have offered my amendment so that the punishment will not be as drastic on the man who sold beer.

In the State of Michigan it was life for a pint. They went a little farther than did other States. My State was also excessively drastic in its punishment for such offenses. I do not believe it is the wish of any Member of this body that we go that far. Certainly a violator of that law is not to be placed in the same category as a man who has been selling women, and certainly he is not as vicious a character or as despicable as the man who has been selling dope. I doubt if any Member here wants to place him in that category, in view of the fact that a great many of such violators were sentenced and served their sentences of a year because he had sold a glass of beer. And a great many of us are just as guilty as he in view of the fact that we bought from him. I believe we all agree that it was one of the most unpopular laws that was ever enacted in view of the terrific pressure that was brought to bear to repeal it and thank heavens in 1933 it was repealed.

My good friend referred to the investigating committee that is being proposed by the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. That bill is pending before the Rules Committee. Had that bill been enacted there is no question in my mind that cases of this kind would not be on the floor of the House of Representatives. What we are attempting to do is what other investigating committees are trying to do, to obtain facts and first-hand information from those who are employed on the borders of the United States and also along the Atlantic and Pacific ports of entry. I think it is an accepted fact that they are being smuggled in by the hundreds each and every month, and we are not going to get that information unless we can get to the source. We have been told any number of times there is an alien smuggling ring in this country, and I am very anxious to know who the leaders are who are engaged in this alien smuggling. Just recently there was an article in one of the newspapers stating that an individual confessed that he had smuggled 200 aliens across the Canadian border and had received from $50 to $200 per head. According to the testimony of the Immigration Commissioner, there are 29,000 people in Habana, Cuba, who are very desirous of coming into the United States. A great many persons are being smuggled across the Mexican border, and the men in the border patrol down there tell us it is impossible to cope with this problem.

All my resolution does is try to get the House to give our committee the authority to go down there and investigate the situation and come back to this Congress at the next session and get legislation enacted that will block those leaks. That is what my good friend the gentleman from Alabama was referring to; but how can we do it unless we get the authority? Now, getting back to my amendment, I do hope you will exempt the man who sold a glass of beer or a glass of wine from being deported. I do hope my amendment will be adopted. [Applause.]

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I simply wish to say that the prohibition law has long since been repealed, and there has never been in the history of the country a conviction under it which resulted in deportation. If I thought there was the slightest danger of that, I would have no objection to the amendment; but as it is I am sincerely convinced that there is no possible reason for putting that amendment in this bill.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I presume the gentleman heard me read the letter from the Assistant Commissioner of Immigration stating that a warrant of deportation had issued in the case of an alien who had defrauded the United States Government of taxes, and that deportation was mandatory?

Mr. HOBBS. Yes.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Does not the gentleman conclude from that that this bill includes violators of the tax laws of the country?

Mr. HOBBS. Of course.

Mr. EBERHARTER. It includes violators of the Prohibition Act.

Mr. HOBBS. No, sir; not at all. Of course, it includes violators of the tax laws who have crooked the Government out of taxes. In other words, if the gentleman defrauds anybody he is guilty of an offense involving moral turpitude, and if he is sentenced to more than a year so as to indicate that it is a felony then he ought to be deported; but the gentleman would never do that.

Mr. EBERHARTER. The gentleman believes that if anybody has violated the revenue laws by having in his possession intoxicating liquor, which is a violation of the Revenue Act, and thus has defrauded the Government of taxes, he should be included in the class of criminals referred to in this bill whose crimes involve moral turpitude?

Mr. HOBBS. I wish we could put out of this country everybody who would steal or defraud.

Mr. EBERHARTER. The gentleman just made the statement that if he thought there was the slightest danger that this bill would include violators of the Prohibition Act he would be willing to concede an amendment should be drawn to exclude them.

Mr. HOBBS. That is right.

Mr. EBERHARTER. The gentleman concedes that the bill does include that class of violators?

Mr. HOBBS. The gentleman is not talking about violating the prohibition law, which is no more; but when it was the law, a violation of that law was simply a misdemeanor. The gentleman is talking about defrauding the Government of taxes, which is an entirely different proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SCHULTE].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SCHULTE) there were—ayes 39, noes 73.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MARTIN of Colorado: In line 1, on page 4, after the figure "137" and the semicolon, insert the following:

"(b) Those aliens who advise, advocate or teach, or who are members of or affiliated with any organization, association, society, or group that believes in, advises, advocates, or teaches communism, nazi-ism, or fascism."

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, there are five categories or groups of aliens who may be imprisoned under this bill in the event their deportation cannot be effected.

The first of these categories is composed of those aliens who are members of anarchistic or similar classes. In my judgment that classification is practically obsolete in this country. I do not know whether there are any anarchists left. I have not read of any anarchists in a long time, but I looked up the definition of anarchy and it is as follows:

Anarchy, a state of society where there is no law or supreme power. Anarchy implies the total absence or suspension of government.

There are, however, some other classes and they represent government and lots of it, and they are enumerated in the amendment which I have offered to this bill and I cannot understand why this bill did not include them when it was drafted. My amendment does not disturb the language of the bill. It leaves it stand as to anarchists just as it is, and adds the other undesirable groups mentioned in my amendment.

Let me just read you a recent news item about one of these classes enumerated in my amendment. It relates to a rally of the German-American Bund over in the State of New Jersey. On the 30th day of April they held a rally over at the bund's camp at Nordland in New Jersey. The spokesman over there was a gentleman by the name of Kunze. I read from an Associated Press dispatch of April 30:

Kunze spoke to the accompaniment of Nazi salutes from the crowd as they sang the "Horst Wessel"—

Whatever the Horst Wessel is—I do not know the meaning of the words, but the paper stated that it is the German Nazi Party anthem, while a fife and drum corps played.

Further quoting the Associated Press dispatch:

Kunze predicted that Congress soon would enact legislation to make the United States "a white man's Christian country again."

That is one thing that Mr. Kunze said that I agree with and I would like to begin by deporting all the Kunzes in this country back to the country whence they came and where they belong. [Applause.]

Now, just listen to this if you are hunting for candidates for deportation and concentration camps. I quote from the dispatch:

Calling the German Fuehrer "the prophet of labor," Kunze said "Hitler's spirit has inspired laboring men of America to make this country free for dignified, respectable, and courageous labor."

Well, if Herr Hitler does this, he will do something for labor in America that he has not done for labor in Germany, and there are not wanting reports that labor in Germany is not so happy. I commend to the workingmen of America the proposition that the Nazi dictator is going to make this country "free for dignified, respectable, and courageous labor" by a "putsch."

Mr. Kunze, referring to Hitler's answer to President Roosevelt's peace message, said:

It was sent to the greatest talker and thinker that Europe has ever produced (Hitler).

I wonder how his pal and best friend Il Duce would relish Mr. Kunze's estimate of Herr Hitler. Il Duce is supposed to be the reincarnation of Caesar, and while, unlike the Berlin end of the axis, he does not trace his blood directly back to the veins of God, nevertheless he is known to entertain a pretty fair opinion of himself and has a record to show for it.

If Mr. Kunze would only go to Italy and make this break, we would have him checked off the list of American liabilities.

This is the same Mr. Kunze who figured so prominently in the Nazi rally in Madison Square Garden, New York, on February 20, "celebrating" Washington's Birthday, and who addressed his fellow Nazis as "My fellow Christian Americans" when he was neither a fellow, a Christian, nor an American, no matter where he was born.

Quoting still further from the A. P. dispatch:

The program was in honor of "national labor," as opposed to Monday's May Day demonstrations of "international labor."

Mr. Chairman, it might not be entirely clear to all readers of the news account of the meeting just what "national labor" is as used by the speaker. It is labor in Germany, where labor was nationalized by the destruction of labor unions. Organized labor in Germany was destroyed. Organized labor in Germany is a crime against the state. It is no more permitted in Germany than it is in Russia or Italy. "International labor" as used by the speaker means, of course, labor in Russia. Well, may God help labor in both countries, for nobody else will. If I had to choose between "national labor" in Germany or Italy and "international labor" in Russia, I would prefer relief in the United States. In fact, I would rather be on relief in the United States than to have a good job in any country in Europe.

They had another of these meetings at the same time out in California. Says the same A. P. dispatch:

The German-American Bund held a meeting at Hindenburg Park. The meeting was headed by Fritz Kuhn, chief of the national bund, and Hermann Schwinn, Los Angeles bund leader.

This bund also celebrated Washington's Birthday, where Hitler was compared to Washington. Well, Mr. Chairman, when the time comes for the Nazi Washington to make this a free Christian country I want to beat it across the boundary line. "When nazi-ism saves America," as I have seen stated in newspaper articles of their rallies, I want to be lost.

Fifty uniformed bund members were present, but there was no disorder. The speakers denounced the policies of President Roosevelt and verbally trampled on the Jewish race.

I think we might find some deportable material in those outfits. [Laughter.]

Here is another item I want a minute or two to read. Very recently a gentleman came to my home city, who lives in Milwaukee. His name is Carl Taylor. He was invited out there by the Knife and Fork Club, a very popular business organization, to make a patriotic speech, and this is what he said:

In recent months I have stood before my office window facing out on Wisconsin Avenue in Milwaukee and have seen as many as 35,000 people marching from curb to curb, 6 feet separating their lines, people who think this is no longer a good country.

One of our office secretaries stood there one afternoon for two and a half hours marking down the Soviet Russian emblems carried in one parade; 223 "red" banners carrying the sickle and hammer of Soviet Russia in one parade. In that same parade were dozens of emblems of Nazi Germany, Fascist Italy, and other indications that these people do not think America is a good country; and not one American flag.

This was my first knowledge that the "reds" had shoved the Nazis into second place in Milwaukee.

Mr. Taylor, whose speech was published in full in my home city newspaper, the Pueblo Star-Journal and Chieftain, Sunday, April 30, 1939, asked a pertinent question. As he put it:

A simple question which must appeal in its logic to any fair man: "Why do not these persons who think Russia, Germany, or Italy is a better country than our own go there?"

[Applause.]

Their answer would be, of course, that they want to stay in this benighted, un-Christian, and enslaved country to make it a grand country like their own.

Mr. Chairman, I have a mental reservation and serious doubt about legislation of this type, particularly if it is half baked, for fear we may fly to evils we know not of. We may get out of it a remedy worse than the disease, just like we did with respect of the alien and sedition laws; but if we are going to start at all, let us go the whole route and deport all of such elements from this country, and not simply single out one particular class. [Applause.]

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I am in hearty accord with the gentleman's purpose, just as I was with the last amendment offered, but this would be the situation that would follow. This bill seeks to deport all those who have been ordered deported and we refer to the immigration acts that have been in effect from 1917 down to date.

This is not part of any of this body of deportation law and therefore you cannot make such a change in this bill and expect to get results, particularly with the retroactive effect, which is one of the things I am most interested in in this act.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. This amendment would not provide for the deportation of Fritz Kuhn because Fritz Kuhn is a native American-born citizen.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, it is time this Congress gave adequate consideration to the alien problem in the United States. I rise to support H. R. 5643, in the earnest hope that it will pass by an overwhelming majority.

The undesirable aliens covered by the provisions of this bill are the enemies of our country. I say this advisedly as a veteran of the World War. The aliens covered by this bill are the enemies of our country because they belong to classes which have declared war upon society. It is a preposterous fact that alien anarchists, Communists, and other foreigners engaged in predatory crime or the promotion of vice in the United States should be allowed at large, because, for one reason or another, obstacles are put in the way of their prompt deportation from the United States. The question, to my mind, is not arguable. The reasons for the passage of this bill are unanswerable.

It is a regrettable fact that any part of letting loose undesirable aliens in the United States is directly chargeable to the present Secretary of Labor. It is my understanding that some 6,000 aliens mandatorily deportable under existing laws have been let loose in the community to roam at large under a suspension of the deportation warrants which had to be issued in accordance with the terms of our immigration laws.

The report of this bill to the House says that 460 aliens are still living in America who during 1938 were adjudged unfit to remain here, and against whom, after due and proper procedure, solemn warrants of deportation were issued. That situation mocks the sovereignty of our Government. It is situations such as that which leaves it in the power of detestable dictators to jeer at democracies for their inability to defend themselves.

Mr. Chairman, I yield to no man in this House in my detestation of dictatorship; but the time has come when our democracy must demonstrate that it is capable of dealing with an intolerable situation, and deal with it effectively. This bill is a case in point. It should be passed.

There should be in this country no distinction between criminals and the penalties which they suffer. Do not try to make me believe that the man who buys a forged passport to enter the United States does not know what he is doing. Restriction upon immigration into the United States is not a new story to the foreigner, and, believe me, the foreigner is not so dumb that he does not know what he is doing when he pays a heavy sum for a forged passport to enter the United States.

I say to the opponents of this bill that they should not expect this House of Representatives to be so credulous as to suppose that the man who swears falsely—commits perjury, to put it plainly—or bribes an officer of the United States to let him in, in violation of the law, does not know what he is doing.

Mr. Chairman, let us be honest about this matter. The organized foreign blocs who are determined to defend the right of any alien, whether he is a criminal or not, to stay within the borders of the United States, and the sob sisters of our own Nation who help them in this cause, are making American law enforcement an object of universal contempt throughout the world; and, Mr. Chairman, I ask you to bear in mind that this bill puts a check upon any arbitrary action by conferring jurisdiction to review cases of detention within the scope of the circuit courts of appeals of the United States. As a matter of fact, in so doing we are showing more than courtesy and more than justice to the alien criminal. The alien is here as a matter of grace, not of right.

Just read over to yourself section 2, which defines the aliens liable to detention under the provisions of this bill—aliens who have been sentenced to imprisonment for a term of 1 year or more because of conviction in this country of a crime involving moral turpitude committed within 5 years after the entry of the alien to the United States, aliens who have been sentenced more than once to a term of 1 year or more of imprisonment because of conviction in this country of a crime or crimes involving moral turpitude, and those who have shared in or derived benefit from any part of the earnings of any prostitute.

Mr. Chairman, I challenge any man to get up on the floor of this House and say that this country is in any way benefited by allowing such people to remain at large in the United States. On the contrary, aliens who fall under the provisions of this bill are enemies of all society, and this country is no place for them to be at large.

When I enumerate these classes of undesirable aliens I do not mean to omit the aliens who have been allowed freedom to circulate in the United States, although mandatorily deportable and not deported. The Congress is elected to govern this country in the interests of the American people, and no other people. We, the Members of this body, have taken an oath to defend our country against all enemies, foreign or domestic. The aliens covered by this bill are foreign enemies on our soil. If they cannot be expelled they certainly should be under guard.

Mr. Chairman, I am only sorry that this debate here today is not being carried Nation-wide by the broadcasting companies, because to me this debate constitutes one of the greatest classes on Americanization ever conducted in the United States. To me it represents the first effort of the Seventy-sixth Congress to deal with a group of people who have been boring from within to destroy the democracy that Americans are fighting to preserve today. I am only sorry this bill, with all due respect to the gentleman who drew the bill, is not termed as "the Americanization bill of the Seventy-sixth Congress," because it deals with that group which has been spreading un-American propaganda and hiding behind the cloak of technicalities. Let us think of the group to which this bill applies. The men and women in this group are ineligible to become citizens. They cannot join the military forces of our country; they cannot vote; but they cannot be deported on account of a mere technicality. When I speak of a technicality I think of the man who raised his right hand and agreed to lay down his life in defense of our country and the Star-Spangled Banner. When he marched into battle, did a mere technicality preserve his life? It did not. But today the country for which that man laid down his life, the country for which that man was willing to sacrifice his life, is being honeycombed by alien anarchists, Communists, and other foreigners, who have no conception of Americanism and the things for which the American flag is a symbol.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The gentleman was former national commander of the Veterans of Foreign Wars. I rise to ask him if it is not a fact that nearly every one of the men that followed that red, white, and blue flag are in favor of this bill?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. I cannot speak for the organized veterans, but I have a wide acquaintance among the veterans throughout this country, and I know if they had an opportunity to march down this aisle today, 4,000,000 strong, they would raise their right hands and say to the Congress of the United States, "Pass this legislation and drive from our shores these alien radicals who are unfit to live under the protection of the Stars and Stripes." [Applause.]

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I expected that from the Republican side. I always get it because I have always stood for principle. [Laughter and applause.]

Go on; keep on.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, may we have order?

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, without questioning the good intentions of the proponents of the Hobbs bill, I wish to raise my voice against it and point out the dangers that the passage of this bill will inevitably lead to and the primary infringements on the rights of our people.

Upon the basic truths and principes of the Constitution of the United States are reared the institutions which characterize the furthest advance of civilization known to man. Imagine if you can the Constitution stripped of the provisions which protect the individual in his rights to freedom of person, freedom of speech, and freedom of religion. The people of this Nation would grope in darkness. We would have a people that would be afraid and without hope.

Today as we look toward Europe we witness the dictatorial powers in some of the countries assaulting those rights by attacking minorities. When I speak of minorities I speak of them in a broad sense. The gathering storm of hysteria blackens the horizon. Many of the minority groups have been terrified and driven from their homes with no place to go. They are scourged with the whip of ostracism and seared with the hot iron of hate because they refuse to surrender the rights that have become theirs through long periods of hardship and development. As we from the distance look in sadness upon this tragic situation, let all America lift its heart in thanksgiving that the sky above us is still clear, and let us pray that the stars of freedom continue to shine undimmed over our land of freedom. I think we should contrast the conditions at home and abroad and in so doing let there not be too much of the spirit of smug contentment. Rather let the threat of the eclipse of freedom and democracy in any form stir our souls with righteous indignation.

Let us always be on guard against anything that would tend toward the development of any form of government that will in any way spread out and allow its tentacles to snatch away any of our basic rights. This bill would allow the imprisonment of certain aliens for indeterminate and indefinite terms without any law authorizing it. This bill places authority greater than our courts in the hands of the Secretary of Labor. Should the Secretary of Labor decide that an alien ought to be deported because of violation of some law, that alien can be incarcerated for an indefinite length of time.

Let me ask you this: Where do Americans come from? This Nation in the broad sense has been developed through the pioneering spirit of the alien because the only native of this land is the American Indian. Therefore, let not some of those who trace their ancestry back to the days of the Mayflower be so narrow and vicious in dealing with the alien problem. Our Nation is made up of every nationality and every tongue known on the face of the globe. For over a hundred years we have developed because of the many different thoughts and ideas. This land has been the haven of the oppressed.

I fully realize that some of those coming from foreign lands have violated the laws of this Nation and have become undesirable criminal aliens. However, this is not real penal legislation. "Foreigner" has always been a good catchword to turn issues from their real consequence to glittering generalities of patriotism. I happen to be one of those men who walked into the United States Army and wore the American uniform. [Applause.] I happen to be one of those who was spoken of patriotically here today, but I want to say there have been more sins committed by those who would hide behind the cloak of patriotism than any other one thing in this Nation.

I also happen to be an attorney—one of those who was referred to here today. I think I know something about the basic laws of this Nation. During my lifelong practice of the profession I have given some study to the rights guaranteed to the individual under the Constitution of the United States of America. When that Constitution was framed in the first instance it provided that the writ of habeas corpus would not be suspended except in time of invasion or revolution, and then only in the interest of public safety. In my opinion this bill suspends the right to a writ of habeas corpus. We are thus weakening the foundation of democracy by violating one of the main principles guaranteed the individual under that Constitution.

The ordinary alien in this country came here looking for liberty and a better place in which to live and to rear his family. They have become citizens of this land and love it beyond their ability to express in words. The alien awaiting his citizenship in this country who has lived up to the laws and is a respected resident hates the criminal alien just as well as those of you who may possibly trace your ancestry back to the Mayflower. There is no doubt that the criminal alien as mentioned in this bill should be segregated from society. I know the self-respecting alien awaiting his naturalization would appreciate that as well as you and I, but the approach that we are taking in this bill is not the proper way to handle this problem. We are using the methods that resulted in the iron hand of dictatorship in Europe. God forbid that we should start concentration camps in this Nation. If one class of people can be detained indefinitely, then who is to say that other classes will not be included? The logical conclusion of this legislation would inevitably lead to the detention of people depending on the whim and fancy of the Secretary of Labor. I can well imagine the outcome if

Mr. Tom Girdler were ever to hold the office of Secretary of Labor.

Some of the sponsors of this bill maintain that it is a purely penal measure affecting about 50 persons each year. It is interesting, since the criminal treatment in this bill is its backbone, that only 3 weeks ago here in Washington there was a conference, the National Parole Conference, at which the greatest men in this field gathered together to discuss crime in America. Studying the proceeding of this conference I find nothing relating to the question we are now considering. These men whose education, training, and lives have been spent in the field of penology would surely have had something to say about this bill if its passage was as important as some Members would leave us believe. Those men, leaders in all fields of law enforcement and public welfare, were assembled from all over the Nation to discuss the real crime problems and to point out the defects in our penal system. I feel certain this group would not have ignored the criminal-alien bill had they felt there was merit to it. In addressing this conference, the Honorable Frank Murphy in speaking of preserving the benefits of our democracy said:

> We won't do it by making speeches, passing resolutions, or holding conventions about democracy. No matter how intensely 130,000,000 people believe in democracy, it won't be kept working unless we have the common sense and the courage to roll up our sleeves and put the machinery of democracy in working order.

The Honorable Robert M. Hutchins, president of the University of Chicago, addressing the National Parole Conference, said:

> A just society is one which regards no man as subhuman. A society which regards a man as subhuman because he is an alien is unjust. A society that so regards him because of his race, religion, or previous condition of servitude, is unjust. So is a society which regards as less than human a man who has been guilty of criminal conduct, for no group of men can deprive another of his humanity. This is merely another way of phrasing the Scriptural warning, "Vengeance is mine, saith the Lord." A just society must respect the humanity even of those who have violated its laws.

Others maintain naively that the bill will bring about the deportation of all Communist and Nazi agitators. I am afraid these Congressmen have themselves been victimized by the very thing they are fighting against. Communism and nazi-ism is not spread today by the so-called criminal alien. Their means are far more subtle. The real and dangerous agitator now uses Jefferson as a proponent of Communism. He quotes Lincoln whenever it serves his purpose. In order to disseminate this insidious propaganda they, of course, make a very showy pretense of upholding our laws. The real forces spreading this propaganda will in no way be hindered by the 50 aliens this law affects. These criminals are known lawbreakers and have been apprehended. The real danger to our institution lies in those who will never run afoul the law yet while parading the picture of George Washington attack the very foundation of our country. This bill does not restrain Fritz Kuhn and his gang of hoodlums nor does it hamper those Communists who, under the guise of good citizenship, join unions and try their best to dominate them. Professional agitators avoid anything relating to a crime involving moral turpitude. They simply could not carry on their vicious work unless they lived shadily within the law. The most simple mind knows that 50 criminals are not going to have much force in molding public opinion.

Those who came from alien stock in this Nation, which includes practically everyone of you on the floor of this House, have richly contributed to law, to morals, and to humanity. Our ancestors struggled for national existence and conquered all obstacles, thereby setting up the greatest form of government on the face of this earth. This land, more than all others, is indebted to the genius, the loyalty, and the energy of those who came from foreign lands. We have now builded a nation that can safely defy the rest of mankind to show such undying adherence to democracy and such faith that we who love it will sacrifice for it. We should now show our noble spirit and should see to it that justice and protection are afforded all minorities.

I have heard many Members on the floor of this House express their thought privately that this is one of the most vicious pieces of legislation that has ever been offered to be placed upon the statute books of this Nation, but inasmuch as it purports to deal with criminal aliens they are afraid to vote against it because of a possible loss of a few votes of some of their constituents who do not understand the principles that are being violated by this bill.

I love democracy; love this Nation that has been so benevolent to me. I love all that it stands for, and I hope that I will never get to the point that I will have to vote for a piece of legislation that violates those principles in order to garner a few votes. As long as I am a Member of this House I shall do everything within my power to retain the principles upon which this democracy is founded. I shall vote for principle and not for expediency in the matter of votes. [Applause.]

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, this bill, to my mind, is of such transcendent importance at this particular time in the affairs of this country and of the world as to justify every member of the Committee on the Judiciary expressing himself on it one way or the other. I made my argument in the time allotted to me. I feel very keenly the probable consequences of the passage of this unfortunate piece of proposed legislation. You can say what you please about it, but there is only one way known in America by which you can take a man's liberty away from him, and that is by presentment, as I stated a while ago, of an information, or by indictment by a grand jury, letting the court pass upon it.

What are you asked to do under this bill? You are asked to turn over to a department of this Government, a limited department, the Department of Labor, power to be used by the Secretary setting herself up above the courts of this country, power to imprison men for almost—well as long as they live, if conditions bring about that effect. This bill means simply that you are departing from established principles in a way that is dangerous. You may not take me seriously, but I believe every lawyer in this House—and there are nearly 275 of us—recognize in his study the reading of opinions of Justice Brewer, formerly a Member of the Supreme Court of the United States. Nobody questions his ability or integrity. Let us see what he says about it. I take this excerpt from the case of Turner v. Williams (194 U. S. 295). Listen to Judge Brewer. You are not listening to SAM MASSINGALE; this is Judge Brewer's language:

> I do not believe it within the power of Congress to give the ministerial officers final adjudication of the right to liberty or to oust the courts from the duty of inquiry respecting both law and facts.

What are you going to do when you come to consider this kind of law? Are you going to kick it aside and follow the mania that is sweeping America now and try to get on the popular side of this controversy? I know how the average Member feels about it. It is a popular thing now to get up here and vote for a bill of this kind which is absurd and dangerous. It is a bill which, in effect, takes away the right of habeas corpus; and if a poor devil can get it under this law, they shunt him around to some distant circuit court of appeals for any remedy he may have after he had been ordered deported.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASSINGALE. I yield.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. But as a matter of fact, and as a matter of procedure, the circuit court of appeals cannot disturb the findings of fact of an administrative officer where an alien is involved.

Mr. MASSINGALE. The gentleman is correct about that, the circuit court of appeals cannot inquire into the facts of the case. The Secretary of Labor is supreme, with greater power than a court was ever vested with, no right of appeal, nothing left but to obey her order.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HANCOCK: Page 4, line 11, strike out all of subdivision (d) and insert in lieu thereof:

"(d) Those aliens who directly or indirectly procure or attempt to procure or import prostitutes or persons for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose, or who are knowingly supported by or receive in whole or in part the proceeds of prostitution."

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. HANCOCK. Debate on this amendment instead of taking 20 minutes ought not to take 20 seconds. I offer the amendment merely for the purpose of clarification and for the purpose of strengthening this particular provision. The gentleman who drafted the bill took fragments from section 155, title VIII of the United States Code, but he did not use all of the language of that section that was necessary, I believe, to carry out his purpose. I believe the language which is contained in section 136, title VIII of the immigration law is much more precise and comprehensive than the wording of the bill and includes all of the dangerous and vicious class of aliens the gentleman is aiming at by this section.

Let me call attention to the language of the bill as written. It contains scattered phrases of section 155, title VIII, the section that deals with deportable offenses, and it mentions three classes of aliens: First, those who receive any benefit from or any part of the earnings of any prostitute. This might include some aged parent whose child went to the city, became a prostitute and occasionally sent some of her wages of sin back home. We are not concerned with those people. The second class is those who in any way protect or assist a prostitute. This might include a person who does a simple act of kindness or attempts to reclaim some fallen Magdalene. The third class mentioned in this section includes only those who have imported any person for the purpose of prostitution and it entirely omits the scoundrel who deals in domestic white slaves.

We do not intend to give any alien the privilege of going into the business of selling American white slaves, while penalizing him for dealing in imported prostitutes. If you will let me again read my amendment, which is taken bodily from section 136 of the immigration law, I think you will see it embraces the class we want to hit by this bill.

Those aliens who directly or indirectly procure or attempt to procure or import prostitutes or persons for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose or knowingly supported by or receive in whole or in part the proceeds of prostitution.

I think it will strengthen, improve, and clarify the bill if you accept the amendment.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I will be glad to accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HANCOCK].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania: Page 4, line 10, after the word "turpitude", change the semicolon to a comma and insert "not connected with their own entry or naturalization."

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I will be glad to accept the amendment.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, after the statement just made by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS], that he is willing to accept the amendment, I do not think much time will be necessary in explaining it.

The amendment merely includes in section (c) the same language which already exists in section (b) on page 4, "not connected with their own entry or naturalization," and it extends the provisions of that section to section (c).

I am sure the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] thinks it does not change the purposes of the bill, but merely affords necessary protection to those who are not really criminals, therefore I hope the Committee will agree to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRADLEY].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MARTIN of Colorado: In line 15, page 4, after the word "prostitution", strike out the semicolon, insert a comma, and add the following: "and who have been convicted and sentenced for such offense in a court of record."

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I understood the gentleman from Alabama a few moments ago, in objecting to my prior admendment, to say that this act affected only aliens who had been ordered transported. There is a question in my mind about that with reference to subsection (d), which reads as follows:

Those aliens who have received, shared in, or derived benefit from any part of the earnings of any prostitute, or have in any way assisted any prostitute or protected or promised to protect from arrest any prostitute or have imported or attempted to import any person for the purpose of prostitution.

There is no requirement in the paragraph, the section, or the bill that that person shall be under a deportation order or shall be under sentence from any court. As I said a few moments ago, there are five categories of delinquents dealt with in this bill. In the case of the other four there must be in effect at the time the delinquent is apprehended for imprisonment an order of deportation or the sentence of a court.

Mr. Chairman, I am pointing out that this category dealing with prostitution does not require that there shall be outstanding any order of deportation or any sentence of a court whatever. The only effect of my amendment is to add there the same safeguard, and I think it ought to be there, that in this category also the delinquent person shall have been convicted and sentenced for such offense in a court of record.

I make this contention, and if I am mistaken I want somebody to get up here and dispute it, that under the language of the bill if a prostitute should give a man a package of cigarettes, he could be taken up and ordered deported, and if he was not able to get a passport he could be locked up indefinitely without having been judicially adjudged of any offense. This is certainly a grant of administrative power and discretion with a vengeance.

Mr. GEARHART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. GEARHART. I believe the words "in a court of record" in the amendment which the gentleman has offered will defeat the objective he has in mind. Prostitution in nearly all States is a simple misdemeanor. Simple misdemeanors are not handled as a rule in courts of record, but in police courts.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I get the gentleman's point. Does the gentleman mean to say he would be willing to have a man subjected to the drastic penalties of this bill providing for imprisonment on a $5 fine in some municipal or kangaroo court?

Mr. GEARHART. I rise for the purpose of pointing out to the gentleman that the phrase "in a court of record" will defeat that which the gentleman has in mind, because cases of that kind are not handled, as a rule, in courts of record.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I want to answer the gentleman. I think any offense of sufficient magnitude to entail the penalties of this bill ought to be of sufficient magnitude to be handled and disposed of in a court of record. I do not believe we ought to pass legislation here predicated on judgments of police courts.

Mr. Chairman, I realize the temper of the House regarding this bill at this late hour and with adjournment for the week end coming on, but I am serious about this matter. I wonder if Congress has ever before passed legislation authorizing an administrative officer of the Government to indefinitely imprison a man without trial in a court of law. That is precisely what subparagraph (d) does.

I have no fear that any persons will be so imprisoned. I feel confident that this legislation in another body will be given careful and competent scrutiny and be operated on to its great improvement. I feel confident that no such loose provision can stand the scrutiny of the courts. I simply want the House to do a little carpenter work of its own on this bill and not leave it to some other legislative or judicial branch to show it what a blind man ought to be able to see.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MARTIN of Colorado) there were—ayes 32, noes 76.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. The Secretary of Labor is hereby authorized and directed to arrange for appropriate places of detention in established institutions for those aliens required by this act to be taken into custody and confined.

Any Federal institution designated by the Secretary of Labor in a detention order hereunder shall receive the alien subject to such order, any provision of law to the contrary notwithstanding; and shall deem any appropriate order of the Secretary of Labor sufficient warrant for discharging any such alien.

The appropriation of such sums of money as may be necessary from time to time for the maintenance and care of detained aliens in such places of detention, including the cost of the removal of such aliens thereto, is hereby authorized.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. May I remind the House that we are considering here this afternoon a matter concerning only 460 people in all—really not such a large number, is it? And let no one think he can save America by measures like this. That will take much more work on our part than putting a few aliens out of the way.

I believe I understand what the gentlemen who are sponsoring this bill want to accomplish. I believe it is a worthy and proper objective. I do not want to have aliens who are dangerous to the body politic in America continue to be here, but I believe there are other matters connected with this legislation that must be considered. I should like to vote for it because it would be nice to go home and make speeches and say that I voted against prostitution and against enemy aliens and so on and so on. I am against them; and I believe every proper effort should be made to hasten their deportation. But after all, the issue here is not an issue as to whether or not you want these people to stay in the United States, it is not an issue as to whether or not you want them to be punished, and it has nothing to do with the length of the term they are supposed to serve in jail in punishment for offenses; it has to do simply with whether or not America is going to adopt a method of putting these people into what will amount to concentration camps in order to try to solve the problem.

I would be perfectly willing to vote for a bill that stated that America would not accept a single immigrant from a nation that refused to take back these people who are under order of deportation. I would also be willing to vote for a measure—and, as I understand, one is coming here for consideration soon—which would make more severe the penalty against espionage in this country. I believe those measures are reasonable, and I understand the necessity for them, but I believe it is very dangerous when the House gets into a spirit such as I believe it is in this afternoon when we have to be swept along with the tide, without considering carefully the implications involved in the pending measure.

I am not against the bill because of what it is going to do to these alien people primarily. I am against it because I am afraid of what it is going to do to the United States. After all, we have to have enough faith, it seems to me—and I do have enough faith—to know that even though we must go through a period of difficulty America can solve her problems and can shake her fist in the face of the man who tries to destroy her institutions and tell him, "You can talk if you want to, but this Nation is founded in the hearts of its own people upon a rock too solid for you to shake."

I hope I have made myself clear. I have only a few minutes. I should like to repeat again at the end that I am in sympathy with the aims and desires of the people who believe these persons ought not to be continued in the United States. Neither do I. I hope some way can be found to prevent it, but I do recognize, as several Members have pointed out on this floor this afternoon that this particular method is subject to such great possible abuse and smacks so much of a system of government unlike that of our own that I have dire fear concerning it.

I believe we can find a better answer to this problem. I hope we can, and I am in favor of doing it, but I do not think this is it.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. MOTT. I am rather sympathetic with some of the statements the gentleman has made. If this bill had to do with citizens of this country, I believe the gentleman would be entirely right, but since it has to do with deportable aliens, and more than that, with aliens who were ordered to be deported for having committed deportable offenses, where does the argument apply, and where does the gentleman's fear come in?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. My fear comes in with regard to using the method of detention camps against any group of people. I quote from a letter I received from the president of the National Farmers' Union today on this subject, which expresses my views exactly. He states:

Though allegedly aimed at aliens, measures such as the Hobbs bill threaten to undermine our democratic institutions and to destroy our liberty.

The pending bill does not do this directly, I know, but does it through the frame of mind it puts us in.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. The gentleman expresses great fear of detention camps. We have a detention camp in Louisiana for lepers; we have detention camps scattered all over the country under the Bureau of Prisons, and we have Leavenworth, Kans.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I understand, but that is where persons are serving sentences for committing crimes of which they were convicted. There is no question here as to whether or not people should pay the lawful penalty for crimes. Of course they should do so. If we think the penalty should be more severe, then that should be considered. But in this bill I think we have a virtual suspension of law under consideration.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. But these are Americans.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. True enough, and I wish we had no one in this country but law-abiding, loyal citizens. But we do have others. And the freedom we prize so much may be destroyed if we are not careful in our dealings with those whom it is easiest to punish. If we give way to a vindictive spirit with regard to one group of people, remember it will be easier next time with regard to another group, and next time it may not be aliens.

Mr. Chairman, I recognize the problem here with these deportable aliens; but I beg of the House to deal with it more in accordance with the basic human rights—rights extending even to those who do wrong—upon which our national life is based.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

I would not deem it necessary to say a word on this matter, were it not for the arguments that have been repeatedly adduced, as evidenced by the remarks just now made by the distinguished gentleman from California. One would gather from the arguments advanced by the numerous liberals of this House that if this bill is passed we are embarking upon an absolutely new thing in government in America; that we are going to establish something that has never been heard of or known before in the government of America. Let us see if that is true.

The gentleman who just spoke mentioned the chagrin and embarrassment to which he would be subjected if he drove along the road in his car with his little son and had to point out a building where certain people were confined. My God, for over 100 years people have driven over the highways of America and have looked at places of detention where we have confined citizens of America whose only crime has been that they were paupers and indigents. In State after State of this Nation we take people who have never been convicted of a crime into a minor court and upon an adjudication of pauperism and indigency send them to a poorhouse where, at least under the laws of Wisconsin, they are detained and confined for life or until they can absolve themselves of the charges of indigency; yet they never committed a crime. It is possible in State after State of this Nation to take persons who are afflicted with venereal disease and without a trial and upon the mere certificate of the examining physician go before a court and get an order of detention and take them and detain them and confine them until they have been absolved of the necessity for being taken from society.

It is possible in this State and possible in almost every State in the Union on the application of two citizens to have any person taken before a surrogate or probate judge on a petition involving alleged lunacy, and that judge, without any hearing, can order the detention of the person named in the petition, and upon the report of two examining physicians that he is insane or feeble-minded, he may be committed to a house for the detention of such people and kept there perhaps for life.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. We do that to citizens of America, and you are here worrying about sixty or a hundred or two hundred aliens who have committed crimes.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me? The gentleman has mentioned me.

Mr. KEEFE. Yes; I yield.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. The gentleman puts me in an entirely false light. I am not appealing for anybody to be excused from suffering punishment for any crime he commits. I think he should be punished, and I think these people should be deported.

Mr. KEEFE. Yes.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. The only thing I am objecting to is the particular method suggested in this bill.

Mr. KEEFE. You are objecting because we are going to put them in detention.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. That is right.

Mr. KEEFE. And I have indicated to you that this matter of detention is nothing new in our system of government, that we have detention homes throughout America today to take care of undesirable American citizens who cannot adjust themselves to our social conditions.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. The gentleman knows very well that is under an entirely different situation.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. Notwithstanding the provisions of section 20 of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917 (39 Stat. 889; U. S. C., title 8, sec. 156), the Secretary of Labor is authorized and directed to detain aliens of the classes described in this act, and his authority to do so shall not be questioned except upon petition filed with the circuit court of appeals for the circuit in which the place of detention of the particular alien is located, and for this purpose the circuit courts of appeals are hereby invested with original and exclusive jurisdiction to hear such petitions and determine the question of the legality of the detention under this act, and the decision of any such court in any such case shall be final.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I have three amendments to offer to this section, which are committee amendments, and I will offer them all at one time.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. HOBBS: On page 5, line 23, after the word "located" and the comma immediately thereafter, insert "or by a petition for a writ of habeas corpus filed with such circuit court or by a writ of habeas corpus issued by any district court of the United States made returnable in such circuit court."

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

This amendment was offered so that there may not be any difficulty in the mind of anyone as to whether or not there would be a writ of habeas corpus issued to any one of those detained, and to make assurance doubly sure this amendment will be inserted in the bill when you vote favorably upon the amendment.

I do want to rise just briefly to call this fact to your attention. Section 4 has a very unusual sting to it. I do not know of any provision in any statute which says there shall be no appeal to the United States Supreme Court.

Mr. GWYNNE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. CELLER. In this bill we provide that the circuit court of appeals shall be invested with original and exclusive jurisdiction to hear the petition. I take it that this means that you must, in the first instance, if you feel aggrieved, go to the circuit court of appeals and there your remedy ends.

This is very unusual. Why did the authors of the bill fear to allow an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States? Why is the jurisdiction of the circuit court of appeals made exclusive? Certainly, there should be a right of appeal by anybody aggrieved to go to the Supreme Court of the United States.

I am told that an amendment may be offered in this regard. If it is, I think it would be very praiseworthy, but there certainly should be an appeal to the highest court of the land.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. With regard to the habeas corpus proceeding, I think it should be pointed out to the membership that in habeas corpus proceedings the relator cannot obtain a review of facts where there is some evidence to sustain the findings of the Secretary; in other words, the court in a habeas corpus proceeding will not review the weight of evidence on questions of fact.

Mr. CELLER. That is correct and I shall read an opinion from the Secretary of Labor and, incidentally, the opinion is by Gerard D. Reilly, who is Solicitor of the Department of Labor, a very gifted and a very erudite student of the law and one whose word can be uttermostly relied upon.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. Let me first read what he says.

Mr. MICHENER. I want to know when he said it. He said it after the bill had been reported out?

Mr. CELLER. The date is April 19, and I shall read from it very briefly with respect to the question the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO] propounded to me:

The judicial scope of review is narrow and similar to that now exercised in habeas corpus proceedings in all immigration cases. The court may discharge an alien from custody if as a matter of law the finding of the Secretary of Labor cannot be supported—the court may not on a question of fact substitute its own judgment as to what disposition should be made of the case. Therefore, it does not follow that the provisions for judicial review remove the instant bill from the implications of the doctrine of the Wong Wing case, supra——

Which declared similar proceedings of the law unconstitutional.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. So, therefore, on the question of fact, court or no court, the findings of the Secretary of Labor are final; is that not correct?

Mr. CELLER. That is correct.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. HOBBS: On page 5, line 25, after the word "petitions", insert "and to try the issue presented by such writs."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. HOBBS: On page 6, line 3, after the period insert:

"The terms 'Circuit Court of Appeals' and 'Circuit Courts of Appeals' as herein used include the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GWYNNE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GWYNNE: On page 5, line 24, after the word "with", strike out the remainder of the sentence and insert "exclusive original jurisdiction to hear such petitions and determine the question of the legality of the detention under this act."

Mr. GWYNNE. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is simply to give the right of appeal to the Supreme Court in the ordinary manner that appeals are now handled in that Court. I would like to yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS], to see what he thinks about this amendment.

Mr. HOBBS. I was perfectly willing to have you insert a period, giving appeal to the Supreme Court if you wish. I did not understand the rest of your amendment, nor do I now.

Mr. GWYNNE. I think, after hearing the amendment offered by the committee, that my amendment perhaps should be rewritten. I confess that.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment again reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GWYNNE: On page 5, line 24, after the word "with", strike out the remainder of the sentence and insert "exclusive original jurisdiction to hear such petitions and determine the question of the legality of the detention under this act."

Mr. HOBBS. My only objection to that is that that would cut out the second committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. We now have the situation which I indicated before, that you have no appeal whatsoever to the United States Supreme Court.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. Before the Secretary of Labor may order the release of any alien detained hereunder or rescind the warrant of deportation for such alien, he must prepare and file with all the other papers relating to such case a synopsis of the evidence upon which such order is to be made and the reasons for such order.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the preamble of the bill be stricken.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee will now rise.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. THOMASON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 5643, pursuant to House Resolution 175, he reported the same back to the House with sundry amendments adopted in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? if not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment adopted in Committee of the Whole striking out the preamble will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary for further study and consideration.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. CELLER. I am.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion of the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CELLER moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary for further study and consideration.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. As many as favor taking this vote by the yeas and nays will rise and remain standing until counted. [After counting.] Thirty-two Members have arisen on the request for the yeas and nays. The Chair has again counted, and there are 280 Members present. A sufficient number not having arisen, the yeas and nays are refused.

The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays on the final passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 289, nays 61, not voting 80, as follows:

ANNOUNCEMENT OF VOTE

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, on the vote today on the bill H. R. 5643, I was unavoidably absent. Had I been present, I would have voted "nay."

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. HEALEY, indefinitely, on account of illness in family.

To Mr. ROMJUE (at the request of Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri), for 10 days, on account of official business.

To Mr. SHANLEY, for 1 day, on account of official business.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute, to ask the majority leader a question.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the majority leader about the program next week?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, Monday will be District day. The Committee on the District of Columbia will not take more than 45 minutes. It is then intended to take up the naval appropriation bill and read that bill for amendment under the 5-minute rule, disposing of it Monday.

On Tuesday, the nonmilitary appropriation bill, carrying appropriations for rivers and harbors and flood control, as well as allied subjects, will be taken up and we hope to dispose of that bill on Tuesday, because it is usual to conclude consideration of that bill in 1 day.

On Calendar Wednesday the call rests with the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. I do not know what bill that committee will call up, but I presume it will be the river and harbor authorization bill. After that we have no program for the remainder of the week.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman does not expect the Florida ship canal bill to be taken up next week?

Mr. RAYBURN. The Florida ship canal bill is not included.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. The majority leader has stated that the program for Monday is what?

Mr. RAYBURN. The District of Columbia Committee will report a bill or two, which will take about 45 minutes. Then the House will resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole to consider the appropriation bill under the 5-minute rule. It is also planned that, if the President of Nicaragua pays us a visit, the Speaker of the House will declare a recess in order to receive this benevolent ruler.

Mr. KNUTSON. The distinguished majority leader intimates that we are going to recess to receive the President of Nicaragua. It is my understanding that the President of Nicaragua—or should I say the dictator who displaced his uncle and abolished elections?—will be here on Monday. It was very gratifying to me this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, to observe that great Democrat, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, and the dictator from Nicaragua riding down Constitution Avenue in a White House limousine conversing very amiably. It shows that we can make the lion and the lamb lie down together.

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, of all the unfortunate statements I have ever heard made in this House, I think the one just made by the gentleman from Minnesota is the most unfortunate.

It is true that rulers of countries across the sea are hardly in good enough humor with each other to ride in the same automobile or be received in one another's country; but I pray God the time will never come in the Western Hemisphere when the rulers of all the republics of the Western Hemisphere are not upon friendly terms as we are today. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Under a previous special order of the House, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] is recognized.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I used that time yesterday, and I relinquish it now.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD relative to roads and to include therein a speech I made in Dallas, Tex.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTWRIGHT]?

There was no objection.

SENATE

MONDAY, MAY 8, 1939

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal Father, infinite in power, who givest might to those who earnestly desire and wistfully pursue the higher, nobler things: Regard, we beseech Thee, our prayer and supplication as we lift up our voice unto Thee confessing our weakness and our sin and invoking Thy blessing upon us. We are conscious of a dull, craven fear among the nations of the world that poisons life at its very springs, causing it to crawl when it should soar; cast out this fear, dear Lord, by Thy perfect love, removing all cowardly motives that pollute life's sanctuary, and grant that sincerity and singleness of purpose may there abide. Help us to realize that what we do will always be determined by what we are; restore to us, therefore, the power of conscience and clarify our vision; enable us always to respond to those divine promptings and inspirations which aim at the renewal and ultimate transformation of our poor lives, that with clean hands and pure hearts we may ascend into the hill of the Lord and receive the blessing of the generation of them that seek Thy face. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, May 4, 1939, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States, submitting nominations, were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. MINTON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON], and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] are detained on important public business.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is absent on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

VISIT TO THE SENATE OF THE PRESIDENT OF NICARAGUA

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair desires to make a statement to the Senate. Some days ago the State Department, through Secretary Hull, advised the Vice President that the President of Nicaragua is in this country and would be glad to visit the Chamber of the Senate, and suggested that, if agreeable to the Senate, today might be an appropriate opportunity.

The Chair understands that arrangements have been made for the President of Nicaragua to visit the Chamber, if agreeable to the Senate, at 12:15 o'clock. The Chair makes that statement for the information of the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at the hour of 12:15 o'clock p. m. the Senate stand in recess, subject to the call of the Chair, and that the Chair appoint a committee of three Senators to wait upon and receive the President of Nicaragua and escort him into the Chamber.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none, and the Chair appoints the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] as the committee to receive and escort the President of Nicaragua into the Senate Chamber.

dred and fiftieth anniversary of the establishment of the United States Lighthouse Service.

RELIEF OF DISBURSING OFFICERS IN THE NAVY

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, reporting, pursuant to law, relative to the relief from responsibility of certain disbursing officers of the Navy on account of losses sustained, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

MINERAL LANDS, WAR OR NAVY DEPARTMENTS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to provide for the leasing, development, and production under the act of February 25, 1920 (41 Stat. 437), as amended, of deposits of coal, phosphate, sodium, potassium, oil, oil shale, or gas in lands owned by the United States under the jurisdiction of the War or Navy Departments, and for other purposes, which with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

REGULATION OF TRAFFIC IN FOOD, DRUGS, AND COSMETICS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5762) to provide for temporary postponement of the operations of certain provisions of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. BAILEY. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. CLARK of Missouri, Mr. PEPPER, and Mr. MCNARY conferees on the part of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution of the Senate of the State of New York, favoring the enactment of the so-called Wagner-Rogers bill, to permit entrance into this country in the next 2 years of 20,000 children from families in Germany, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

(See resolution printed in full when presented today by Mr. WAGNER.)

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of New York stating that the postage rates on books proclaimed by the President on October 31, 1938, are in the public interest and should be perpetuated, and also that Congress should immediately amend the postal laws so as to provide that henceforth the rates proclaimed shall apply to books in the same manner as the rates with reference to newspaper and magazines, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

(See resolution printed in full when presented today by Mr. WAGNER.)

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of New York, favoring the enactment of legislation to provide that certain States may avail themselves of their failure to take full advantage of the credit provisions of the Social Security Act for the years 1936 or 1937, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the petition of Acme Local, No. 1136, of Hettinger County, N. Dak., praying for the enactment of legislation appropriating $250,000,000 for parity benefit payments to farmers, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the president of the Sentinels of the Republic, Washington, D. C., transmitting a statement of the purposes and program of policies of the organization as recently approved by its executive committee, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, I should like to have noted in the RECORD that I have received 77 petitions signed by about 2,000 citizens favoring the adoption of a resolution now pending, having for its purpose the prevention of traffic in war materials for use against the Chinese people. I ask that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will be received and referred as requested by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. WALSH presented a resolution adopted by the Polish American Citizens Club, at a meeting held at Indian Orchard, Mass., favoring the policies pursued by the United States Government regarding European affairs, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution of the Grand Council of the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts, Order of Sons of Italy in America, Boston, Mass., favoring the adoption by Congress of a joint resolution expressing a spirit of friendship toward all nations and manifesting the desire of the United States to cooperate impartially toward a lasting world peace, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. TYDINGS presented a petition of sundry citizens of the State of Maryland, praying for the enactment of pending legislation to admit 10,000 refugee children into the United States per year during a 2-year period, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also (for himself and Mr. RADCLIFFE) presented a memorial of sundry citizens of the State of Maryland, remonstrating against the enactment of House bill 3325, relative to the perpetuation of the stabilization fund and empowering the President to further alter the gold content of the dollar, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also (for himself and Mr. RADCLIFFE) presented a petition of sundry citizens of the State of Maryland, praying for the enactment of neutrality legislation which will give the United States complete protection from any and all embroilment in war and protect lives and properties from the danger of war, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also (for himself and Mr. RADCLIFFE) presented a petition of sundry citizens of the State of Maryland, praying for the enactment of legislation to provide a merchant ensign to be used on all merchantmen, and also that merchantmen be forbidden by law to fly the naval ensign, Old Glory, which flag it is proposed to be used exclusively on naval vessels, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. WAGNER presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of New York, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads:

Whereas, in accordance with the power vested in him by law, the President of the United States on October 31, 1938, proclaimed that the postage rates on books as defined shall for the period commencing November 1, 1938, and ending June 30, 1939, be 1½ cents a pound or a fraction thereof irrespective of the zone of destination; and

Whereas the interests of the public in the promotion of the culture growth, education, and development of the American people required the change proclaimed; and

Whereas by the proclamation the discrimination in postage rates against books and in favor of magazines and newspapers which had theretofore existed was brought to an end and the same rates made applicable to books as to other reading matters; and

Whereas it is vital for this Nation to encourage the widest possible dissemination of the written word and the most free possible market in ideas; and

Whereas while the present postage rates applicable to newspapers and magazines have been permanently enacted into law by the Congress the same postage rates will not be applicable to books after June 30, 1939, unless similarly enacted into law, or unless the power to proclaim these rates is reconferred on the President of the United States and he chooses to exercise it; and

Whereas the matter is of sufficient vital import to warrant congressional action: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved (if the assembly concur), That it is the sense of the Legislature of the State of New York that the postage rates on books proclaimed by the President of the United States on October 31, 1938, are in the public interest and should be perpetuated; and be it further

Resolved (if the assembly concur), That Congress should at once amend the postal laws by legislative act to provide that henceforth the rates proclaimed shall apply to books in the same manner as it has legislated those rates with reference to newspapers and magazines; and be it further

Resolved (if the assembly concur), That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to the Secretary of the Senate, the Clerk of the House of Representatives, and to each Member of the Congress and each United States Senator from the State of New York.

Mr. WAGNER also presented the following resolution of the Senate of the State of New York, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration:

Whereas the Wagner-Rogers bill introduced in the Congress of the United States will allow 20,000 children from persecuted families in Germany to enter this country in the next 2 years; and

Whereas aid given to the helpless child victims of Germany's ruthless persecution will be in keeping with the generous impulses and democratic instincts of the American people; and

Whereas 20,000 children may thus be spared the appaling prospect of lives without hope; and

Whereas these children, whose maximum age will be 14 years, will in no way increase the unemployment burden in this country, and their support will be guaranteed by responsible families here; and

Whereas the bill is sponsored by United States Senator ROBERT F. WAGNER, of New York State, and has received the support of former President Herbert Hoover and many labor and industrial leaders: Now, therefore, be it:

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States be, and it hereby is, respectfully memorialized to enact into law with all convenient speed the Wagner-Rogers bill to allow for the entrance into this country in the next 2 years of 20,000 children from persecuted families in Germany; and be it further

Resolved, That the clerk of the senate is directed to transmit a copy of this resolution to the Secretary of the United States Senate, the Clerk of the House of Representatives, and to each Member of Congress from New York State.

Mr. WAGNER also presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of New York, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Whereas, under article 18 of the Labor Law of the State of New York, as enacted, there was created an unemployment insurance fund; and

Whereas under section 520 of said article 18 there is established an unemployment administration fund, to which fund all Federal moneys allotted or apportioned to the State by the Federal Social Security Board or other agency shall be paid; and

Whereas certain States, including the State of New York, have failed to take full advantage of the credit provisions of the Social Security Act of the Federal Government; and

Whereas there is a need on the part of the Congress for the passage of legislation to make available certain sums to the States, including the State of New York, which failed in 1936 or 1937 to take full advantage of the credit provisions of the Social Security Act: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved (if the senate concur), The Congress of the United States be and it respectfully is hereby memorialized to pass sufficient legislation whereby the States, including the State of New York, may avail themselves of their failure to take full advantage of the credit provisions of the Social Security Act for the years 1936 or 1937 and that said legislation provide that out of the sums appropriated therefor, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay such amount through the Division of Disbursements of the Treasury Department to each such State unemployment fund and particularly to the unemployment administration fund of the State of New York; and be it further

Resolved (if the senate concur), That a copy of this resolution immediately be transmitted to the Secretary of State of the United States, to the Clerk of the House of Representatives, and to the Secretary of the Senate of the United States, and to each Member of Congress and each United States Senator elected from the State of New York.

PAY-ROLL TAXES, SOCIAL SECURITY ACT—PETITIONS

Mr. VANDENBERG. I present petitions signed by 2,500 so-called small businessmen of Michigan for relief from social-security taxes—relief, by the way, which is belatedly in sight. I ask that the text of one of the petitions be printed in the RECORD, that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Finance, and that the covering letter be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the petitions were referred to the Committee on Finance and the text of one of the petitions and the covering letter were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Greetings to the Congress of the United States:

The undersigned small-business men, their employees and customers conjointly with the Michigan Division of the National Small Business Men's Association respectfully request that the Social Security Act be amended so as to maintain pay-roll deductions for old-age benefits at present level, experience having shown that the tremendously large reserves originally provided by the act are unnecessary.

NATIONAL SMALL BUSINESS MEN'S ASSOCIATION,
MICHIGAN DIVISION,
Detroit, May 3, 1939.

Hon. ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The Michigan Division of the National Small Business Men's Association recently conducted a survey to determine the effects of the Social Security Act on business. The results of that survey very clearly indicate that the total tax load has become a severe handicap to business and recovery—more than that, it seriously threatens the very existence of many Michigan concerns. Our survey (an analysis of which we will be pleased to place at your disposal) discloses the following:

(1) Added to other existing taxes, the social-security tax is detrimental to business, responsible for net losses thus preventing purchases for replacement equipment and causing tax payments to be paid out of reserves which means eventual if not immediate bankruptcy.

(2) Competitive conditions prevent organizations from raising prices sufficiently to cover the tax.

(3) The increases in gross sales necessary to offset this tax are far beyond reasonable expectancy. Sales increases required from firms reporting in percentage figures vary from 5 to 60 percent with the average slightly in excess of 24 percent. Firms reporting in dollars and cents vary from $10,000 to $300,000 annually with the majority in excess of $150,000 per year.

(4) Eighty-five percent of the organizations reporting showed losses for the year 1938. The social security tax represented an average of 24 percent of their losses.

(5) The social security tax reduces employment. Organizations turn down temporary business rather than permit their tax reserves to suffer by employing temporary help. Dwindling reserves and net losses prevent capital expenditure for business expansion or replacement thus reducing the possibility of employment in many industries.

In view of the fact that the social-security tax alone has such a demoralizing effect upon business and employment, the need for a general tax revision must be apparent to the Members of Congress.

We contend that a step in the right direction will be an amendment to the Social Security Act to retain pay-roll deductions at their present level. In support of that contention we recently circulated a limited number of petitions in a few Michigan cities. It was not our intention in so doing to obtain a great quantity of names but rather to secure a cross section of the attitude of Michigan citizens on the question. We enclose herewith 2,717 signatures of farmers, housewives, laborers, office workers, and executives signed to that petition, which reads:

"The undersigned small-business men, their employees, and customers conjointly with the Michigan division of the National Small-Business Men's Association, respectfully request that the Social Security Act be amended so as to maintain pay-roll deductions for old-age benefits at present level, experience having shown that the tremendously large reserves originally provided by the act are unnecessary."

We respectfully ask you to present these petitions for us to the Congress of the United States and to express to the Members of the Senate that it is the sincere and considered opinion of the members of this association that business confidence, essential to recovery, will come only after a trend toward economy is definitely apparent. Mere words or promises of future consideration are wholly inadequate. Only definite action in the form of constructive tax-relief measures will effectively meet today's needs. Further delay will jeopardize the very existence of business establishments in the State of Michigan and result in more widespread and increased unemployment.

Yours very truly,

FRANCIS C. SPENCE,
Executive Secretary.

NEUTRALITY—PETITION

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, among the many resolutions and petitions which have reached me concerning our neutrality situation is one from the Bridgeport, Conn., Council of Catholic Women, with a membership of more than 7,000. I ask that the text of the petition be printed in the RECORD and that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the text of the petition or resolution will be printed in the RECORD, and it will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Whereas we Americans love peace and abominate war, because we know that the heavy burden of war rests on the shoulders of our youth and that the rulers and the legislators whose votes plunge us into war, as well as the war mongers and unscrupulous profiteers, are not the ones who engage in battle and suffer bodily harm and even death itself;

Whereas in the recent war America fought to make the world safe for imperialistic democracy and gained nothing, but lost untold numbers of young men in the slaughter besides the two billions in material wealth;

Whereas those same so-called democracies that added to their empires and yet refused to pay their just debts to America, thus placing an insupportable burden upon the backs of American taxpayers, are once more working subtly through propaganda to embroil us in another and more terrible war;

Whereas one of the countries, namely Russia, that we are now asked to join with, is bolshevistic and atheistic and is just waiting to destroy our Constitution and all we hold dear;

Whereas, our entrance into such a war is wholly unnecessary, unjust, and anti-American and would cause the blood of our youth to be shed once more in profusion, and for what? Simply to preserve inviolate the imperialistic designs of so-called democracies: Be it

Resolved, That we, the Bridgeport Council of Catholic Women, with a membership of 7,000 in Bridgeport, Fairfield, Stratford, and Trumbull, in mass meeting assembled on this 17th day of April 1939 absolutely condemn war and its propaganda and are determined that Congress shall not relinquish its constitutional rights by placing in the hands of any one man the stupendous power of naming aggressors in any conflict not our own and thus embroiling this country in war; be it

Resolved, That as citizens of these United States we courageously come to the defense of American youth and in its behalf call upon all fellow citizens in city, State, and country to militantly protest against all entangling foreign alliances and to urge our Representatives in Congress, first, to vote for a Neutrality Act that is genuinely neutral and fair to all nations alike and, second, to punish propagandists and to warn responsible representatives of our Government to be temperate in speech and to shun all provocative and inflammatory language and acts; be it further

Resolved, That we urge our United States Senators and others to prove themselves true Americans worthy of the sacred trust given them by the people, to work for America and not for any foreign country, to vote to keep this country free from war and thus protect our homes and preserve the lifeblood of our youth.

MRS. JOHN L. KENNELLY,
Chairman of Council.
MABEL A. LAVEY,
Chairman of Legislation.

REPORT OF BOARD OF VISITORS TO THE COAST GUARD ACADEMY

Mr. BAILEY submitted the following report, which was ordered to be printed in the RECORD:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 28, 1939.

To the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

To the SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

GENTLEMEN: As provided in section 7 of the act approved April 16, 1937, authorizing the establishment of a permanent instruction staff at the United States Coast Guard Academy, the annual Board of Visitors to the Coast Guard Academy was appointed in January of this year consisting of the following:

Senators: Hon. JOSIAH W. BAILEY, of North Carolina, chairman, Committee on Commerce, United States Senate, ex officio member; Hon. FRANCIS T. MALONEY, of Connecticut; Hon. WALLACE H. WHITE, Jr., of Maine.

Members of the House of Representatives: Hon. SCHUYLER O. BLAND, of Virginia, chairman, Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, House of Representatives, ex officio member; Hon. LINDSAY C. WARREN, of North Carolina; Hon. EDWARD J. HART, of New Jersey; Hon. RICHARD J. WELCH, of California.

In further conformity to the above-mentioned act, the Secretary of the Treasury, under date of March 14, 1939, designated 9 a. m., Thursday, April 20, 1939, as the time for the meeting of the Board of Visitors at the Coast Guard Academy, New London, Conn. Senators JOSIAH W. BAILEY and WALLACE H. WHITE, accompanied by Representatives EDWARD J. HART and RICHARD J. WELCH, left Washington at 10 a. m., April 19, arriving at New London, Conn., at about 5 p. m., the same date, when they were met by the Superintendent of the academy and conducted to his quarters on the reservation. The departure of Representative S. O. BLAND was delayed until 1 p. m., on account of a meeting of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee and Senator MALONEY was unable to leave Washington before 5 p. m. Members of the Board arriving at 5 were entertained at dinner by the Superintendent and Mrs. Jones in their quarters. Later the party was joined by Representative BLAND, and motion pictures depicting various phases of Coast Guard life were shown the members of the Board.

The Board convened the following morning at 9 a. m., and was later joined by Senator MALONEY. The first business upon the assembling of the Board was the election of a chairman, and Representative S. O. BLAND, the nominee of Senator J. W. BAILEY, was so elected. The Board expressed the desire that Commander (E) E. Reed-Hill, United States Coast Guard, act as secretary, a position filled by this officer during the meeting of the preceding board in 1938.

Admiral R. R. Waesche, Commandant of the United States Coast Guard, and Capt. E. D. Jones, superintendent of the academy, were invited to appear before the Board and to bring to the attention of same any pertinent and necessary matters. There was a general discussion of various matters affecting the academy, with the exception of the curriculum, which the Board ascertained was satisfactorily taken care of by the advisory committee of the Coast Guard Academy, which, appointed by law, makes recommendations in such matters to the Secretary of the Treasury. The Board discussed and inquired into the following matters:

(1) Set-up of appropriations for the academy.

(2) The loss of the two schooners (Gloucester fishing type), one sunk and the other damaged beyond economic repair by the hurricane of September 1938.

(3) Use of facilities at the academy by the United States Maritime Service in the Coast Guard training of licensed and unlicensed personnel of the merchant marine.

(4) The geographical distribution of cadets accepted by the service.

(5) The number of enlisted men admitted for cadetship.

(6) The method of obtaining cadets by open competitive examinations held throughout the United States.

(7) The effect of special preparation for competitive examinations by so-called cram schools.

(8) The pay and allowances of cadets.

(9) The handling of cadet funds and cadet messes.

(10) Need for publicity in obtaining cadet material.

(11) The proper date for the meeting of the Board of Visitors, probably a few weeks later in the year.

(12) The enactment of legislation authorizing an appropriation for contingencies for the superintendent of the academy, which was recommended by the previous Board of Visitors and which was approved on this date.

The Board inspected the academy grounds and reviewed the battalion of cadets, after which the members had luncheon with the cadets.

The Board was most favorably impressed with the academy and the administration thereof, and finds it a thoroughly modern educational institution of high standards. The Board believes that comparatively few young men are familiar with the advantages of a cadetship in the Coast Guard, and the Board is of the opinion that every reasonable effort should be made to present to the qualified throughout the country the opportunity offered at the Coast Guard Academy for an education and a career.

The Board recommends an appropriation of not to exceed $200,000 for the construction of a suitable vessel for the training of cadets in the handling of sails—this vessel to be a replacement of the two schooners no longer available due to damage sustained by the hurricane—as the proper training of cadets is being seriously handicapped by the lack of a suitable sailing vessel; that additional funds be made available for replacements, supplies, and repairs to laboratory equipment; and that the act of April 16, 1937, be so amended that when a member appointed in January is unable to attend the annual meeting an additional member may be appointed in his stead.

The Board desires to make mention of the cordial reception and hospitable treatment furnished its members by Captain Jones, the other officers, and cadets at the academy.

Having completed its inspection, the Board departed New London at 2:19 and arrived in Washington at 9:20 that night.

Respectfully submitted.

SCHUYLER O. BLAND, Chairman.
JOSIAH W. BAILEY.
FRANCIS T. MALONEY.
WALLACE H. WHITE, Jr.
EDWARD J. HART.
RICHARD J. WELCH.

ELLIS REED-HILL,
Secretary to the Board.

REPORT OF THE APPROPRIATIONS COMMITTEE DURING ADJOURNMENT—APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT

Under authority of the order of the 4th instant,

On May 5, 1939, Mr. RUSSELL, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the bill (H. REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 860) authorizing the President to present a medal of honor to Harold R. Wood, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 387) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally with amendments, and submitted reports thereon:

S. 1116. A bill to amend section 1860 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (48 U. S. C. 1460), to permit retired officers and enlisted men of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps to hold civil office in any Territory of the United States (Rept. No. 388);

S. 1854. A bill to increase the number of midshipmen allowed at the United States Naval Academy from the District of Columbia (Rept. No. 389);

H. R. 2878. A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with the construction of certain public works, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 390); and

H. R. 5765. A bill to authorize commissioning aviation cadets in the Naval and Marine Corps Reserves upon completion of training, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 391).

Mr. WALSH also, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 1118) to provide for acceptance and cashing of Government pay checks of retired naval personnel and members of the Naval and Marine Corps Reserves by commissary stores and ship's stores ashore, located outside the continental limits of the United States, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 392) thereon.

Mr. AUSTIN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 3131) to authorize the Secretary of War to convey certain lands owned by the United States for other lands needed in connection with the expansion of West Point Military Reservation, N. Y., and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 393) thereon.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 839. A bill to amend the Retirement Act of April 23, 1904 (Rept. No. 394);

S. 871. A bill for the relief of James T. Moore (Rept. No. 395);

S. 912. A bill for the relief of Joseph Kenney (Rept. No. 396); and

S. 1181. A bill to provide for the status of warrant officers and of enlisted men of the Regular Army who serve as commissioned officers (Rept. No. 397).

Mr. SHEPPARD also, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 1820. A bill to provide for the transfer of certain land owned by the United States to the State of Texas; and certain other land to the county of Galveston, Tex. (Rept. No. 398); and

S. 1666. A bill to provide a right-of-way (Rept. No. 399).

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 4131) for the relief of Melvin Gerard Alvey, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 400) thereon.

Mr. GILLETTE (for himself and Mr. CAPPER), from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the bill (S. 446) to amend the Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 401) thereon.

SACRAMENTO GOLDEN EMPIRE CENTENNIAL

Mr. JOHNSON of California. From the Committee on Foreign Relations I report back favorably, without amendment, a joint resolution authorizing the President to invite other nations to participate in the Sacramento Golden Empire Centennial commemorating the one hundredth anniversary of the founding of Sacramento by Capt. John A. Sutter. It requests no money from the Government, and I ask for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 221) authorizing the President to invite other nations to participate in the Sacramento Golden Empire Centennial commemorating the one hundredth anniversary of the founding of Sacramento by Capt. John A. Sutter was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is authorized to invite by proclamation, or in such manner as he may deem proper, foreign nations to participate in the Sacramento Golden Empire Centennial to be held at Sacramento, Calif., from May 1, 1939, to September 10, 1939, inclusive, for the purpose of properly commemorating and observing the one hundredth anniversary of the arrival in California at the confluence of the American and Sacramento Rivers, of John Augustus Sutter, a Swiss adventurer, and the founding by him, through the establishment of Sutter's Fort, of what is today California's capital city of Sacramento, which establishment and the subsequent development of the region adjacent resulted in the discovery of gold at Coloma, Calif.

SEC. 2. The Government of the United States is not by this resolution obligated to any expense in connection with the holding of such exposition.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that the concurrent resolution be placed on the table calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE LATE SENATOR CUTTING—ADDRESS BY HON. SAM G. BRATTON

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, Saturday last, the 6th day of May, was the anniversary of the tragic and untimely death of former United States Senator Bronson M. Cutting. On that day on the capitol grounds in the city of Santa Fe, N. Mex., a statue, which had been provided by friends and admirers of the late Senator Cutting, was dedicated, and on that occasion an eloquent tribute was paid by another former Member of this body, the present United States circuit judge, Hon. Sam G. Bratton. I ask unanimous consent that the well-deserved tribute paid to former Senator Cutting by Judge Bratton on that occasion be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ADDRESS BY HON. SAM G. BRATTON AT THE DEDICATION OF THE STATUE OF THE LATE SENATOR BRONSON M. CUTTING

We are assembled in this ancient city on this beautiful afternoon in midspring with the opulence of nature's boundless resources on every hand to pay earnest tribute to a friend of yesteryear whose career was cut short with tragic suddenness at an early age. I participate in these proceedings with a spirit of humility and in gratitude for a great life. It is hoped that you will appreciate how wholly inadequate my mother tongue is in expressing my deep feelings on this occasion.

Bronson Murray Cutting was born June 23, 1888, at Oakdale, Long Island, N. Y., the son of William Bayard and Olivia Peyton (Murray) Cutting. He received his education at Groton and Harvard. He entered Groton in September 1901, was there 5 years, and was graduated in June 1906. He entered Harvard in the autumn of 1906, was forced on account of ill health to leave temporarily during his junior year, and finished with his B. A. degree in 1910. His record in scholarship at each institution was remarkable. At the early age of 10 he spoke French and German almost as easily as English, and he later mastered Spanish, Arabic, and other languages. In addition to being an accomplished linguist, he was an educated man in a real sense. Life itself was his education. It began almost at the cradle and continued throughout his life. It consisted of literature, music, art, experience, travel, people, and work. He came to New Mexico in 1910 in search of health. He was restored to good health and remained until his tragic death in an airplane crash in Missouri on May 6, 1935, 4 years ago today. Although 4 years have intervened, our affection for him is as fresh today as it was then.

It may be assumed with confidence that Bronson Cutting spent his period of convalescence in a careful study of political conditions then existing in the Territory of New Mexico, and that as the result of a painstaking survey of the situation he developed a virile interest in the problems which then confronted the people here. He took a lively interest in the first election after statehood and continued to devote himself as a private citizen to the solution of public questions as they arose from time to time until the entry of the United States into the World War. Despite a physical handicap which might have deterred one with less force and determination, he volunteered, was commissioned as a captain, and rendered service of high order both at home and abroad. At the conclusion of that service he returned to civil life of a quiet and unostentatious character, as was his wont. While he served in many capacities in the State, his first call to official service of national scope came in 1927. On December 29 of that year Gov. Richard C. Dillon appointed him United States Senator from New Mexico to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Andrieus A. Jones. He served under that recess appointment until December 1928. In November 1928 he was elected United States Senator for a full term of 6 years and he was reelected in 1934 for a second term.

When the background of Senator Cutting is rightfully understood and appraised, it is easily understood how coincident with the repair of his health and physique he developed a deep understanding of conditions here and an acute sympathy for those who needed assistance in their quest for better government and improved conditions in which to live and rear and educate their sons and daughters for useful citizenship. He came to maturity in an era of reform, and he was from the beginning thoroughly at home in that era. His birth coincided with the beginning of the Populist movement and that of socialism, his boyhood with that quest for social justice which is the distinguishing mark of the "nineties," his youth with Roosevelt-La Follette liberalism. No other period in our history has been so elaborately and self-consciously concerned with reform, and that reform reached into every nook and corner of our life. It inquired into the plight of the farmer and of the laborer; it illuminated conditions of life in the slums of the great cities; it agitated woman's rights and the welfare of children; it probed into the dark places of prisons and reformatories; it interested itself in the Negro and the Indian; it faced squarely the problems of drunkenness and vice; it addressed itself to corruption and maladministration in high places; it grappled with the great problems of public education; and it concerned itself with matters of religion. It was in truth a crusading era, an era in which men were conscious as never before to fulfill the promise of American life.

To all this Bronson Cutting could not be immune, nor did his wealth and social position embarrass him. Wealth was on the defensive; some thought it was a disgrace to die rich. The Cuttings needed no admonition on this score. There was no disposition on the part of that family to evade the responsibilities of wealth nor any reluctance to join in the quest for social justice, economic equalitarianism, and political democracy.

Bronson Cutting was born to wealth and social position, but not to conservatism. His family, on both sides, had a distinguished record for liberalism in politics and activity in socal reform. His grandfather, Bronson Murray, whose name he bore, was an abolitionist when abolitionism was looked upon much as is communism today, an eager advocate of woman's rights, and of religious liberalism. His father, Bayard Cutting, was throughout his life allied with the forces of social and political reform in New York City; he was long a leader of civil-service reform, a pioneer in slum clearance, generous alike with time and money in forwarding those educational, religious, and charitable causes which enlisted his broad sympathies. It was characteristic of Senator Cutting's father that he was one of the few New York businessmen who from the beginning enthusiastically supported Theodore Roosevelt in his efforts to control trusts, regulate railroads, and cleanse public life. It is equally characteristic that Bronson Cutting's first political memory was of his sympathy for William Jennings Bryan in the historic campaign of 1896. He was then just 8 years old, but the campaign made a lasting impression upon his keen and absorbing mind.

Senator Cutting's material inheritance was important, and it enabled him to do many things which otherwise would have been difficult, if not impossible, of performance. But more important was the intellectual inheritance; a profound sense of his obligation to society; and implicit assumption that wealth was not a personal possession but a trust and a social responsibility; a lively sensitiveness to the misfortunes and deprivations of the underprivileged; and a passionate, though never intemperate, desire to contribute to the creation of an economy which should provide opportunities for all, a society which should insure equality in access to those opportunities, and a government which should protect those who were unfitted for the struggle of competition.

Bronson Cutting's education did not wean him away from this inheritance. Groton and Harvard did not impair his sense of social obligation any more than they impaired the passion of Franklin Delano Roosevelt for social justice. Groton was a rich man's school, but it was not entirely isolated from the America of the nineteen hundreds. There were lectures on subjects of social and political interests, debates on such questions as public ownership of railroads or regulation of trusts; there was a summer camp maintained for the poor of Boston and New York in which Bronson Cutting served. And for all of its prestige and antiquity, Harvard has always been a stronghold of liberalism, has always encouraged independence of thought, individualism of expression, and social consciousness. It may be remarked in passing that Bronson Cutting was in the same class with Walter Lippman, Jack Reed, Heywood Broun, and a dozen others who later distinguished themselves by their independence.

Inheritance and education gave to Senator Cutting a disdain for material and social possessions. These things came too easy and were to be taken for granted. What he developed was an intense anxiety to justify himself and his life on other grounds, to contribute something of his own to the cultural and social welfare of the country. It is interesting that he did not need to make money, interesting but not significant; it is significant that he never cared to try. From the beginning he had other and more important business at hand. Before his break-down in health which brought him out here that business was primarily intellectual; he planned to devote himself to archeology; but after his arrival here that business was social and political reform. At no time was it merely material or merely personal. New Mexico contributed much to the education of Bronson Cutting, but his first awareness of the need for social reform and his inspiration to social consciousness were deeply implanted long prior to the time when he established citizenship among us. New Mexico furnished him an opportunity for the practical application of that which had been theoretical, an opportunity to make concrete and tangible that which had been vague and intangible, an opportunity to give sense of realism and immediacy to his social consciousness. It is safe to conjecture that Senator Cutting would never have been the sterling crusader that he was had it not been for his background and training; and it is equally safe to assert with confidence that he never would have brought into full exertion his potential possibilities had it not been for the rich opportunity which New Mexico supplied to educate him to human realities.

This early environment and training implemented by the rare opportunity which New Mexico generously extended for practical application of his concepts respecting social and economic questions lends ready answer to the often propounded query why he possessed such a crusading spirit for public welfare. By inheritance and by early training, he instinctively championed the cause of the helpless and the unfortunate, he unfailingly went to the rescue of the underprivileged, he was always on the side of the masses.

The rise of Bronson Cutting in the Senate of the United States was meteroic. He was a member of the Committees on Banking and Currency, Foreign Relations, Irrigation and Reclamation, Manufactures, Military Affairs, and Public Lands and Surveys. Membership on these important committees enabled him to render invaluable service of the highest order to his constituents in New Mexico and to the Nation as a whole. His achievements were many for the reason that he possessed in large measure the qualifications and the indefatigable industry to overcome difficulties and to accomplish hard legislative tasks. He devoted himself with unflagging industry to legislation affecting veterans of the World War, veterans of the Spanish War, veterans of other wars, and their dependents. He concerned himself with measures relating to agriculture, air mail, banking, civil service, interstate and foreign commerce, holding companies, home financing, labor, military affairs, national defense, public utilities, and relief. He mastered every question with which he concerned himself. He illuminated every question he discussed. He graced every cause he espoused. He ennobled every duty he performed. He weighed questions with great care. He reached conclusions with deliberation and caution; but once he formed a definite conviction upon a question affecting public welfare, he was unshakable in his support or opposition, as the case might be. He was brave, imperious, and incorruptible. It mattered not to him whether a cause was popular. His inquiry was whether it was right. If so, he supported it with all the vigor at his command. If wrong, he waged withering opposition with no thought of the political consequences to himself. He was valiant for truth. He loved justice and ordered liberty; he hated wrong and oppression; he stood firmly for truth and virtue; he was uncompromising against that which was false; he was insensible to the attack of the demagogue; he was deaf to the blandishments of the flatterer. He bore daily in mind the admonition:

"This above all; to thine own self be true
And it must follow, as the night the day,
Thou canst not then be false to any man."

It was his belief that there are no short-cuts to wisdom, influence, and service; and that after all the centuries of invention and progress the path of the soul often lies through the thorny wilderness which still must be trod, sometimes in solitude. He believed that the greatest need of the hour was clear and calm thinking, and for Americans to rise to the height of the opportunity for self-improvement and effective leadership. To him the problem was not one of sectional discord or internal differences. It was one of making certain that democratic impulses do not grow weaker under pressure or false doctrines or insidious propaganda; it was one of keeping a clear vision upon the substance of institutional arrangements designed to protect and preserve the attributes of personal freedom and the perpetuity of free institutions.

A real farmer prefers to fall among his growing crops; a real physician prefers to fall on a mission of mercy; a real soldier prefers to fall with drawn sworn in hand. Bronson Cutting, the eminent statesman and faithful public servant, fell as he would have preferred to fall, en route to his post of duty in the Senate, there to join with others in supporting to the utmost a program of legislation which would contribute to organized society and to liberal democracy. His death was an irreparable loss. Men and women throughout New Mexico and in all parts of the Nation mourn his departure. We miss him tremendously. His like will not soon pass this way again. Let us take courage in the words of Longfellow:

"There is no death,
What seems so is transition;
This life of mortal breath
Is but a suburb of the life Elysian,
Whose portal we call death."

THOMAS JEFFERSON MEMORIAL—SCULPTOR OF JEFFERSON'S STATUE

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, as a representative of the United States Senate on the Thomas Jefferson Memorial Commission it has been a duty to provide for the selection of a sculptor for the statue of Jefferson which will be placed in the memorial. In making preliminary surveys about the proper method to follow, our Commission listened to the recommendations of many persons in our Government who represent those departments which are responsible for buildings, monuments, and governmental art. I am sure that all members of the Commission were happy in learning of the remarkable talent available to the Government in the creation of symbols which reflect the ideals of American institutions. As an example of the spirit of many who are giving to the American people this inspiration, I am presenting for the RECORD a short address delivered as a report to the President of the United States by Edward Bruce, Chief of the Section of Fine Arts of the Procurement Division of the Treasury Department. As this speech is, I know, of interest to the American people, I ask, Mr. President, unanimous consent to have it inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. President, this, I suppose, is the first time in history that the head of a great state has asked his advisors to consider the work of a group of unknown but very talented artists. The reason why, as we all know, is the kindness of our President's heart. It makes me realize how times have changed from the days when I first came to Washington, when the then President was, may I say, Hoover-ing over the White House.

In the limited time at my disposal I want to make three points about the program of the Section of Fine Arts. When the Secretary of the Treasury organized the section, his only instruction to us was to carry out the work in such a way as will assist in the development of art in this country and reward what is regarded as the outstanding talent which develops. To carry out this program we have set up a system of national and local competitions which are conducted as fairly as we know how to conduct them. They are open to all and are absolutely anonymous. Our juries are constantly changed and in certain cases we have even allowed the artists themselves to elect their own jury. We are constantly considering ways of improving our program and insuring impartial judgment. The integrity of our program is a sacred thing to all of us. No artist, however great his name, has had a job from our section without earning it on a merit basis.

I think primarily of the Section of Fine Arts as an accomplishment in democracy. Prior to the organization of the section there was no thought of a merit system. Commissions were given to friends and competitions were never used. It seems to me a very fine thing that today when the Government has a commission to give an American artist the artist may, like St. Paul, announce his citizenship and as a matter of right claim an opportunity to have his talent tested on a merit system. It makes the nice phrases in the Declaration of Independence mean something in these days when the rights of man are pretty much in the scrap basket. The group of distinguished gentlemen who used to get all the business must now compete on a merit system.

I would like to call your attention to the map at the end of the room. This is really my favorite picture. It shows how widely we are distributing our art over the country. There is a mural or piece of sculpture either completed or planned for every button on the map. I have before me the prices which the Government paid for works of painting or sculpture in six of the large Federal buildings in Washington. These figures show that in the case of two buildings, the Supreme Court and the Archives Building, the Government spent for painting and sculpture $630,400. This figure of $630,400 is exactly $42,638.61 more than the Section of Fine Arts has paid for the decoration of 420 Federal buildings. It really is nearly $50,000 more than the Government paid for all the completed work which is shown on that map. The reason, I think, that there has been such universal approval of the work of our program is the fact that it has been so modest. The amount we receive to carry on our work is limited to 1 percent of the cost of each Federal building. In fact, we are developing a slogan, "One percent for art in every building."

Mr. Mellon paid $15,868,515 for 59 of the pictures which he has presented to his National Gallery in his magnificent gift. The average cost of these pictures was $31,622 per square foot. The average cost of all the murals that have been executed by the Section of Fine Arts has been $14 per square foot. I do not say that our pictures are now worth Mr. Mellon's prices, but I do say, with absolute belief, that in the due process of time the Government will find it has made a very good bargain and that these pictures will be valued at one hundredfold the prices which the Government has paid for them. At all events I think it is safe to estimate that the artists who painted these pictures originally received less for them than the prices which the Government is paying.

For my last point I would like to spend a few minutes talking about the pictures around this room. They are not prize pictures. They are just the run of the mine. Every one of them was sent in a little competition which we have just held for a mural decoration for the post office in Wausau, Wis. The competition was limited to artists residing in Wisconsin and Illinois. There are no famous names among them. I doubt if any one of you has ever heard of one of them. They are, however, all works of art of distinction.

I hope you will all look at these pictures. I think if you do that you will realize that any one of them would make a country post office a pleasanter place to come to. They make me feel very comfortable about America. I do not believe that one of these artists who painted these pictures likes either Hitler or Mussolini. I have a feeling that they all know and like the Twenty-third Psalm.

These pictures are typical of the thousands of pictures that have been sent in to our office under competitions. There has been no sign of defeat or social unrest among any of them. They have spread out before us a panorama of America, triumphant, clear-eyed, and unafraid, and I like to think that as time goes on we will continue to develop through our post offices little cultural centers where we are raising the taste of our country and helping to develop our native art. The Secretary of Commerce has done a superb job in developing his community art centers throughout the country. I know that in this way we are in a very real sense raising the standard of living of our people by bringing to their lives something of beauty they have never had before, and making them realize how much richer a life is when they have around them something of beauty and of good taste.

I recommend it as the best panacea I know of against all the rotten unrest that is tormenting the world today. I tried to make our artists feel, and I think they do feel, that any one of them who receives a commission from us to do a mural in a post office has received a high honor which calls for the best they have to give. I tell them of a little village I know in Italy nestling in the Appennine Hills which is called Borgo San Sepolcro. In that village there is a little town hall no bigger than the average country post office. Also, in that village lived a great artist. His name was Piero Della Francesca, and he painted there the greatest picture in the world, The Resurrection of Christ. Whenever I am in Italy I make a pilgrimage to Borgo to see that picture, and I find my soul refreshed from seeing it, as do the thousands of pilgrims who visit it each year. I hope the day may come when we, too, may develop a Piero Della Francesca.

Thank you very much, Mr. President.

CALL OF CALENDAR DISPENSED WITH

The VICE PRESIDENT. Routine morning business having been concluded, the consideration of bills on the calendar under rule VIII is in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the calling of the calendar be dispensed with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. RUSSELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 5269, the annual supply bill for the Department of Agriculture.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Georgia.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5269) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture and for the Farm Credit Administration for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. RUSSELL. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that it be read for amendment, the amendments of the committee to be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Georgia? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I understand the Senate is about to take a brief recess to receive a distinguished guest. I will ask that the consideration of the appropriation bill be resumed immediately following the recess.

RECEPTION OF THE PRESIDENT OF NICARAGUA

The VICE PRESIDENT (at 12 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.). The hour has arrived for the Senate to take a recess under its previous order.

The Senate thereupon took a recess, subject to the call of the Chair.

The Senate being in recess,

His Excellency General Anastasio Somoza, President of the Republic of Nicaragua, escorted by the committee appointed by the Vice President, consisting of Mr. BARKLEY, Mr. PITTMAN, and Mr. MCNARY, entered the Senate Chamber, accompanied by Dr. Manuel Cordero Reyes, Minister of Foreign Affairs of Nicaragua; First Lt. Octavio Sacasa, aide; Second Lt. Pedro Nolasco Romero, aide; Col. Charles B. Elliott, American military aide to President Somoza; Capt. Ernest L. Gunther, American naval aide to President Somoza; the Honorable George T. Summerlin, the Chief of Protocol, Department of State; and the Honorable León De Bayle, Minister of Nicaragua at Washington.

The President of Nicaragua having been seated to the left of the Vice President, and the distinguished visitors accompanying him having been escorted to places assigned them on the Senate floor on the left side of the Chamber,

The VICE PRESIDENT said: Senators, it is my privilege to present to you the President of Nicaragua, General Anastasio Somoza. [Prolonged applause, Senators rising.]

ADDRESS BY THE PRESIDENT OF NICARAGUA

PRESIDENT SOMOZA. Mr. President and Members of the Senate of the United States, it is a source of very deep satisfaction to me to have the privilege of being received by this distinguished legislative body.

I appreciate most particularly the kind words of welcome of your honorable President, Mr. GARNER, and I feel I should not decline his courteous invitation—which I consider an honor—to address you on this occasion.

I take pleasure in extending to each and every one of the Members of the Senate a most cordial personal greeting; and I wish to convey, through you, to the American people, the warmest expressions of friendship and understanding on the part of the Government and the people of Nicaragua.

Recently, in a memorable ceremony, the highest representatives of the various branches of your Government gathered under the dome of this same Capitol to commemorate the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the First Congress of the United States under the Constitution.

The American people on that occasion paid a just tribute of admiration and gratitude to the founders of this great Nation, whose wisdom and patriotism, in the midst of the misfortunes and uncertainties of the period, established the fundamental principles of American democracy as set forth in your great Constitution and its Bill of Rights.

We, your neighbors to the south, felt that the commemoration of this anniversary was not foreign to the history of the development of our life as independent nations. It is well known that our founders, in establishing our republics, adopted in substance your democratic representative form of government as being the most adequate to insure the well-being and prosperity of free peoples.

From their inception this fortunate circumstance has established between the young Latin-American republics and the United States a similarity of governmental institutions based on a common devotion to the democratic ideals which we have been able to preserve in spite of the vicissitudes of time and the characteristics peculiar to each people.

The American nations have recently reaffirmed their stanch determination to preserve this heritage of our ancestors.

With a full realization of the difference in our relative capacity, I wish to state that we, the nations smallest in size, are ready, to the limit of our ability, to share with you, the greatest and most powerful, all the efforts and sacrifices involved in the collective task of keeping our American institutions free from any interference foreign to our continent and to our ideology. [Applause.]

As a result of conscious efforts carried out over a long period of years by our statesmen and peoples, in spite of mistakes and temporary friction, a sentiment of collective solidarity, mutual respect, and reciprocal cooperation has been created which happily now prevails in inter-American relations.

If the advances of pan-Americanism were slow in the past, all the greater should be our satisfaction in observing the rapid progress achieved in recent years.

It is a fact—and I do not need to emphasize it—the prudent, wise, and sagacious "good-neighbor policy," inaugurated and maintained with such success by your illustrious President, Franklin D. Roosevelt, has given a vigorous impulse to the movement for pan-American rapprochement. [Applause.]

This policy has been a powerful factor in uniting the minds of the whole continent in one sole spiritual and moral entity. The Latin-American republics are now approaching the United States cordially, with greater confidence, in an attitude of spontaneous cooperation, and with the same sentiments of friendship that they feel toward their other sister republics.

My presence in this country and the generous hospitality that your Government has offered me are a living testimonial to the truth of this assertion.

Under these happy auspices, pan-Americanism is no longer a romantic formula of international policy. It now represents a doctrine of constructive action which takes into consideration the political as well as the economic and cultural aspects of harmonious relationships.

The new spirit which governs the affairs of the Western Hemisphere was given concrete form at the conferences at Montevideo, Buenos Aires, and Lima. These conferences established well-defined bases for the inter-American order, setting forth as fundamental principles of our continental organization the juridical equality of treatment and of opportunity in international trade and the determination to defend the integrity of our territory and of our institutions against any foreign action or interference whatsoever.

This is the gospel of peace and freedom which the Americas, with the powerful assistance of the United States, present to a troubled world. Small though their contribution may be, the Nicaraguan people are, nevertheless, as proud as any other, of their cooperation in these fundamental achievements.

Because of her geographic position, and the fortunate configuration of her territory, Nicaragua, in spite of her size, will be called upon to be a complementary factor, indispensable to any plan or combination of forces for the security and defense of this continent. Her territory offers a convenient route for the construction of an interoceanic canal.

The Nicaraguan people consider this fact as their most valuable source of potential prosperity. We earnestly desire that this gift of nature may not be left hidden indefinitely in our native forests, when, by the act of man, it could bring incalculable benefits to ourselves, to you, to the Americans as a whole, and to the commerce of the world. [Applause.]

By a treaty which we are willing to carry through in terms which conform to the interests of both parties, on permanent bases of equity and justice, the United States has long been associated with Nicaragua in the possible realization of this mighty undertaking. We have thus joined our international destiny to yours, confident that this association will always be maintained in an atmosphere of reciprocal amity, of mutual benefits, and of a real comprehension of the needs and character of both nations. Those who are now engaged, as I am, wholeheartedly in the consolidation of this association of our destinies, firmly believe that when history records its judgment on future events, posterity will not betray our present hopes and convictions. [Prolonged applause.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is a desire on the part of Senators to meet our distinguished guest, and the Chair will ask the President pro tempore the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] to present Members of the Senate to the President of Nicaragua.

The President of Nicaragua advanced to the area in front of the Vice President's desk, accompanied by Mr. PITTMAN and by the Secretary of the Senate, and greeted the Members of the Senate as they were introduced to him.

The President of Nicaragua and the distinguished visitors accompanying him were then escorted from the Chamber.

The VICE PRESIDENT (at 12 o'clock and 32 minutes p. m.) called the Senate to order, and legislative session was resumed.

ADDRESS OF THE PRESIDENT OF NICARAGUA (S. DOC. NO. 73)

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a public document the very gracious address delivered today by the President of Nicaragua to the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5269) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture and for the Farm Credit Administration for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will proceed to state the amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Title I—Department of Agriculture—Office of the Secretary—Salaries", on page 2, line 6, after the word "elsewhere", to strike out "$581,920" and insert "$620,720", so as to read:

For the Secretary of Agriculture, Under Secretary of Agriculture, Assistant Secretary, and for other personal services in the District of Columbia, and elsewhere, $620,720.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it is the purpose of the Senator from Georgia to explain the bill and its various provisions?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I shall be glad to explain the bill. It is, of course, a very comprehensive measure, referred to as the agricultural appropriation bill. While it provides funds for more different activities of government than does any other appropriation bill, it does not appropriate the largest amount of money. Around 2,000 various activities of the Government of the United States are carried on and maintained with funds which are provided for by this measure. Unless some Senator requests specific information as to an item, I shall confine my remarks at this time to the major Senate amendments to the House bill.

While the total sum appropriated in the bill as reported to the Senate is $1,216,000,000, less than $100,000,000 of that amount goes to carry on the ordinary activities of the Department of Agriculture. There are a great many other items in the bill.

In view of the reorganization proposals submitted by the President this year for the last time the bill carries funds to carry on the activities of the Bureau of Public Roads and for other highway building activities, aggregating more than $215,000,000. Appropriations are also contained in the bill for the Weather Bureau, for furnishing weather reports to the air lines and aviation interests of the Nation.

The largest sums, of course, are the funds that are appropriated to carry out the purposes of the Soil Conservation Act, making payments to farmers for diverting their lands from soil-depleting crops to soil-conserving crops, and for carrying on the soil-conservation practices, and conservation practices generally.

As the report of the committee will show, the bill as reported to the Senate from the Committee carries $381,000,000 more than the bill which passed the House. That increase is almost wholly found in three items; one an item of $225,000,000 for the purpose of making parity payments under section 303 of the Agricultural Act of 1938; $113,000,000 for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of section 32 providing for the removal of agricultural surpluses; and $25,000,000, which is a reimbursable item, for the purpose of making loans to tenant farmers to enable them to become home owners and landowners.

I should like to direct the attention of the Senate to the fact that the farmers of this Nation, in cooperating in carrying out the plan suggested by the Congress of the United States to benefit the condition of agriculture, have been expecting and looking to the time when they would receive parity prices for the five basic commodities which are dealt with in the Agricultural Act of 1938. Last year the Congress appropriated $212,000,000 for the purpose of making price-adjustment or parity payments to farmers. The bill as it came to the Senate from the House did not contain a single dollar for that purpose. Therefore the Senate amendment represents only an increase of $13,000,000 over the amount that was available for that purpose during the current fiscal year. Without this appropriation the income of the farmer that is represented by benefit payments from the Government will be reduced more than 30 percent in 1940 below the amount that is available during the current year. Any such reduction will have a disastrous effect not only to the income of the farmer but in securing cooperation in the long-range program that looks to the distribution and removal of the huge surpluses which were accumulated during the time when there was no control program in effect in that period following the invalidation by the Supreme Court of the original Agricultural Adjustment Act.

The next item, Mr. President, is the appropriation of $113,000,000 for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of section 32. This appropriation has a twofold purpose. A large part of it is used for the purchase of surpluses, such as butter, potatoes, and all forms of fruits and vegetables, and those edibles are distributed to persons on relief and to those who have been certified for relief but who have not been able to get on the relief rolls. From that standpoint it is in the nature of a relief appropriation. From the other standpoint it maintains the price level that the farmer receives for his product.

The testimony before the committee disclosed that the outlook for some of these commodities for next year is very gloomy. That is particularly true in regard to the dairy industry, in which there is a considerable surplus of butter, and I understand that the prices for other dairy products are very largely controlled by the price of butter. The amount provided in the bill does not represent an increase of $113,000,000 over the appropriations for the current year, as might be apparent at first blush, because last year $144,000,000 was available for that purpose under the allocation of 30 percent of the customs duties, which is provided in section 32. This year that amount has decreased to $90,000,000 due to the shrinkage in customs receipts, so if the Congress does not afford additional funds for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of section 32 there will be a reduction of $54,000,000 in the funds which would be available for that item, when according to all the testimony adduced before the committee there is a greater need this year than was the case last year.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. KING. I am interested in the observation just made by the Senator from Georgia with respect to the customs duties. Are the customs duties which are made available for the agricultural activities of the Government included in the appropriation carried in the pending bill, or are they in addition to this enormous appropriation of more than a billion dollars?

Mr. RUSSELL. They are in addition, because they represent a permanent allocation. The Senator is familiar, of course, with the provisions of section 32, which set up as a permanent appropriation an amount equal to one-third of the customs receipts. The $113,000,000 is in addition to the $90,000,000, but when the $113,000,000 and the $90,000,000, added together, are considered and compared with the sum which is available this year, it will be found that there is an increase of only $69,000,000 over the current year, whereas all the testimony before the committee disclosed that there is a greater need for funds this year than there had ever been before. As a matter of fact, it was strongly insisted before the committee that without an appropriation of $150,000,000 the Department would be unable to maintain the prices of the commodities which are dealt with under section 32, even at their present very low level.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the explanation of the Senator indicates that automatically one-third of all the customs receipts go to the Department of Agriculture for utilization as the Secretary sees fit, and there is no accounting, so far as the appropriation bills are concerned, of this very large fund, which may increase if our exports and imports also increase. It seems to me it is a very unwise system of bookkeeping, to take a large fund, perhaps $100,000,000—and as our imports increase perhaps the fund may be two or three hundred million dollars—and allocate that money without any consideration of it being taken in the appropriation bill. It seems to me it is a very unwise policy, as it does not permit proper bookkeeping. It gives to the agricultural activities $100,000,000, or whatever one-third of the customs receipts may be, in addition to the large appropriations carried in the appropriation bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. The observation of the Senator as to the wisdom or folly of the provisions of section 32 are interesting, but they are not pertinent at this time, because we cannot change the existing law in this appropriation bill. Legislation permanently allocating 30 percent of the customs duties has already been enacted by the Congress, and any change in that provision made in this bill would be legislation, and would be subject to a point of order, as required by the rules.

I may state that the Committee on Finance would doubtless be the proper committee to consider any permanent change in the provisions of section 32.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. This customs duties fund, as I understand, is allocated to the Department of Agriculture for specific purposes, not for general purposes.

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes. The provisions of section 32 set out very specifically and definitely the purposes for which the money can be expended, and reports are filed with the Congress as to the use of these funds.

The hearings before the Senate Appropriations Committee will show exactly for what purposes these funds have been expended. I do not think there has been any reckless expenditure of the funds. In the past the Department has not spent any considerable portion of them unless a very great need existed. I should like to point out to the Senator from Utah that in 1937 one-third of the customs receipts amounted to $109,000,000. The Department had it all in its hands and could have expended it all if it had desired, but spent only $16,000,000 of that money. The rest reverted to the Treasury. If there had been a reappropriation, as is the case with respect to other items, it would not have been necessary to increase by one dime the money to be expended for carrying out the provisions of section 32 in this bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. It is true, is it not, that the money available to the Department from the collections of customs duties is available under the provisions of section 32, a permanent provision of law, so that the bookkeeping, as far as concerns the items in connection with carrying out the provisions of section 32, has nothing to do with the present appropriation bill. Is it not just the same as though that money had been appropriated for the uses set out in section 32? The effect is just the same, is it not?

Mr. RUSSELL. The money has been appropriated, and it would require——

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; it has been appropriated by that permanent law, and it is just the same as though we were appropriating the same amount of money in the pending bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator from Nebraska is undoubtedly correct, because that is a permanent appropriation continuing from year to year, and unless there is some change in the substantive law, found in section 32, that appropriation will continue from year to year.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. KING. Obviously what the Senator has stated is true. Nevertheless, the agricultural appropriation bill itself would not indicate the amount and the purposes for which it is to be expended. Of course, we can go to the general law and learn the amount of the authorization.

Mr. RUSSELL. The permanent appropriation is not carried in the annual appropriation bill.

Mr. President, the other item of consequence which goes to make up the increase suggested by the Senate committee over the House provisions is an increase to $50,000,000 in the sum available for loans to tenant farmers and sharecroppers to enable them to become farm owners and home owners. This program has just gotten under way. The first appropriation for this purpose was $15,000,000. The authorization last year was $25,000,000, and the full amount was appropriated. This year the authorization is $50,000,000; and on the basis of testimony that was submitted to us, the Senate committee felt that the problem was very important and far-reaching, and that we should appropriate the full amount.

Bear in mind, this is not an outright expenditure or a grant. It is a loan on good security, farm lands, at 3½ percent interest, to be repaid by the tenant farmer and by the sharecropper we are seeking to help. In view of the fact that the Congress has authorized an increase to $4,000,000,000 in the amount of mortgages insured by the Federal Housing Administration for urban buildings, has appropriated $800,000,000 for slum clearance and has before it legislation looking to the appropriation of $800,000,000 additional for slum clearance, the committee felt that we could not say to the three and a half million tenant farmers and sharecroppers of the Nation, who are living in slums that are as bad or worse than those found in any city of the land, that we propose to cut the authorization and allow only $25,000,000.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. Has the Senator any information as to the expenditure of the $25,000,000 which was appropriated last year? Has it all been expended? Just what progress has been made under the Farm Tenancy Act up to the present time?

Mr. RUSSELL. The entire amount has been obligated, but all of it has not yet been expended. As I recall the figures, in round numbers approximately 11,000 tenant farmers have been reached in the beginning of the program.

Of course, the Senator is familiar with the basis of distribution of the fund. There is a formula in the basic act which provides that the funds shall be distributed on the basis of farm population and the number of farm tenants within the several States. Of course, the money loaned will be repaid to the Government. If it is not repaid in full, the Government holds the title to the farm lands which are purchased for the tenant.

Speaking for myself, I regret that the authorization for this purpose is not larger, so that the credit of the Government might be extended in a sum of at least $100,000,000 a year, in an effort to combat the rising tide of farm tenancy, and to give some hope for the future to those in our Nation who are at the very bottom of our economic heap, and who have the lowest standards of living of any people in the country.

Mr. LOGAN. Is it not true that apparently the tenant farmer and the sharecropper are in greater need of help from the Government than many who live in slums, and who have been otherwise helped by the Government? Is not $50,000,000 for this year entirely too small an amount to carry out the program?

Mr. RUSSELL. In my opinion, the sum is wholly inadequate, but I will say to the Senator from Kentucky that it is much better than the $25,000,000 provided in the bill as it came from the House, and is as much as the committee could appropriate.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. HILL. Is it not also true that the problem is not sectional or local? The problem of farm tenancy touches practically all the great agricultural States in the Nation. The truth is that the greatest advance in farm tenancy in recent years has been noted in some of the great Middle Western farm States, such as the great State of Iowa and other States. Is that no true?

Mr. RUSSELL. I am not familiar with the exact location of the increase in farm tenancy, and I have not sought to break it down by States. However, it is a fact that due to the economic straits to which the agricultural population of the Nation have been subject in recent years, an average of 50,000 home owners and farm owners in this country each year have been driven into farm tenancy or into being sharecroppers. The number of farm owners in the country has been decreasing instead of increasing. The pittance of $50,000,000 will not stem the rising tide of increasing tenancy, but it will afford as much of a dam as the committee was able to give, because it is the full amount of the authorization.

Mr. HILL. The $50,000,000 is a much smaller sum than Congress is appropriating for the United States Housing Authority, which deals with slum clearance in the big cities. Is that not true?

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator from Alabama is familiar with the fact that we have already appropriated $800,000,000 for that purpose, and other legislation is pending providing for an appropriation of an additional $800,000,000. In addition to that appropriation, of course, those who reside in the buildings which are erected as a result of the slum-clearance program receive a subsidy in their rent. That is not the case in the farm-tenancy program. It will pay its own way.

I do not like to make comparisons; but I will say that the amount appropriated by the bill, the full amount of the authorization of $50,000,000, is disproportionate when we consider the needs of farm tenants and sharecroppers compared to the needs of those in cities. The need in both instances is great; but certainly the need of three and a half million families, represented by that number of tenant farmers in this country, would warrant a greater appropriation than $50,000,000.

Mr. HILL. Fifty million dollars is one-sixteenth of what we have appropriated for the slum-clearance program.

Mr. RUSSELL. I am hopeful that some legislation along the line of that suggested by the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE] will be enacted at this session of the Congress to enable us to attack the problem on a wider front. However, as the matter stands before us today, all the Senate can do is to agree to the committee amendment increasing the appropriation for loans by the sum of $25,000,000.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Do I correctly understand the junior Senator from Georgia to say that the bill merely increases the amount available for loans, and that the existing or basic law is not changed in any manner whatever?

Mr. RUSSELL. The Farm Tenancy Act is not affected at all. The original act provided for an authorization of $50,000,000 this year, to be expended for the purpose of making loans. Of course, the committee did not undertake to change the basic law. It only appropriated the amount authorized by existing law.

There is one other matter which I should like to bring to the attention of the Senate, and that is the matter of parity-payment appropriations. In the amendment appropriating $225,000,000 there is a proviso that in the event any of the five basic farm commodities dealt with in the Agricultural Act of 1938 attain a market price equal to three-fourths of parity no funds shall be expended from this appropriation for the purpose of making parity payments in connection with that commodity. In other words, we are not undertaking to bring the farmer full parity. We are merely seeking to insure to the farmer 75 percent of parity. The Congress, after long and careful deliberation, has enacted a farm bill which has as its objective, as it is stated in place after place, bringing the farmer's income up to parity. The basic farm commodities are selling today for half of parity. We cannot afford to defeat an appropriation which will in some measure tend to bring about a nearer approach to parity.

We all hope it will not be necessary to spend one dime of the funds. If wheat, corn, cotton, tobacco, and rice next year bring 75 percent of parity, not a nickel of the funds appropriated will be spent; but the funds are provided to insure against some catastrophe and the suffering and distress which would ensue in the farm homes of the Nation if the basic farm commodities should bring less than three-fourths of parity.

The bill contains a large number of other amendments. Most of them are relatively small. I shall not undertake to discuss all the amendments at this time. If any Senator desires an explanation of any amendment when it is reached, I shall be glad to endeavor to explain its purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the first committee amendment, on page 2, line 6.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 13, after the word "cotton", to strike out "or apples", so as to make the additional proviso read:

Provided further, That no part of the funds appropriated by this act shall be used for the payment of any officer or employee of the Department of Agriculture who, as such officer or employee, or on behalf of the Department or any division, commission, or bureau thereof, issues, or causes to be issued, any prediction, oral or written, or forecast with respect to future prices of cotton or the trend of same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Miscellaneous expenses, Department of Agriculture", on page 5, line 11, after the word "designate", to strike out "$108,250" and insert "$111,450", so as to read:

For stationery, supplies, materials, and equipment, freight, express, and drayage charges, advertising and press clippings, communication service, postage, washing towels, repairs, and alterations; for the maintenance, repair, and operation of one motorcycle and not to exceed three motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles (including one for the Secretary of Agriculture, one for general utility needs of the entire Department, and one for the Forest Service) and purchase of one motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle at not to exceed $1,500, including the exchange value of one such vehicle, for official purposes only; for official traveling expenses, including examination of estimates for appropriations in the field for any bureau, office, or service of the Department; and for other miscellaneous supplies and expenses not otherwise provided for and necessary for the practical and efficient work of the Department, which are authorized by such officer as the Secretary may designate, $111,450.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 23, after the word "That", to insert "except to provide materials required in or incident to research or experimental work where no suitable domestic product is available", so as to make the additional proviso read:

Provided further, That, except to provide materials required in or incident to research or experimental work where no suitable domestic product is available, no part of the funds appropriated by this act shall be expended in the purchase of twine manufactured from commodities or materials produced outside of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, at the end of line 8, to increase the total appropriation under the office of the Secretary of Agriculture from $883,700 to $925,770, so as to read:

Total, office of the Secretary, $925,770.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Office of Information, salaries and expenses", on page 8, line 1, before the word "of", to strike out "$383,040" and insert "$385,440"; and in the same line, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$360,780" and insert "$363,180", so as to read:

For necessary expenses in connection with the publication, indexing, illustration, and distribution of bulletins, documents, and reports, including labor-saving machinery and supplies, envelopes, stationery and materials, office furniture and fixtures, photographic equipment and materials, artists' tools and supplies, telephone and telegraph service, freight and express charges; purchase and maintenance of bicycles; purchase of manuscripts; traveling expenses; electrotypes, illustrations, and other expenses not otherwise provided for, $385,440, of which not to exceed $363,180 may be used for personal services in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Printing and binding", on page 8, line 25, after "(44 U. S. C. 111, 220:)", to insert a colon and "Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture may transfer to this appropriation from the appropriation made for 'Conservation and use of agricultural land resources' such sums as may be necessary for printing and binding in connection with marketing quotas under the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, and from funds appropriated to carry into effect the terms of section 32 of the act of August 24, 1935 (7 U. S. C. 612c), as amended, such sums as may be necessary for printing and binding in connection with the activities under said section 32, and from funds appropriated for parity payments under section 303 of the Agricultural Appropriation Act of 1938, such sums as may be necessary for printing and binding in connection with such payments: Provided further, That the total amount that may be transferred under the authority granted in the preceding proviso shall not exceed $600,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 16, after the word "Information", to increase the total appropriation under the Office of Information from $1,992,610 to $1,995,010.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Library, Department of Agriculture", on page 10, line 3, after the word "expenses", to strike out "$105,420" and insert "$109,220", and in line 4, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$71,600" and insert $75,250", so as to read:

Salaries and expenses: For purchase and exchange of books of reference, law books, technical and scientific books, periodicals, and for expenses incurred in completing imperfect series; not to exceed $1,200 for newspapers; for dues, when authorized by the Secretary of Agriculture, for library membership in societies or associations which issue publications to members only or at a price to members lower than to subscribers who are not members; for salaries in the city of Washington and elsewhere; for official traveling expenses, and for library fixtures, library cards, supplies, and for all other necessary expenses, $109,220, of which amount not to exceed $75,250 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Office of Experiment Stations—Payments to States, Hawaii, Alaska, and Puerto Rico for agricultural experiment stations", on page 10, line 18, after the word "carry", to strike out "in" and insert "into", so as to read:

Adams Act: To carry into effect the provisions of an act approved March 16, 1906 (7 U. S. C. 369), entitled "An act to provide for an increased annual appropriation for agricultural experiment stations and regulating the expenditure thereof," and acts supplementary thereto, the sums apportioned to the several States to be paid quarterly in advance, $720,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, at the end of line 9, to strike out "$55,000" and insert "$60,000", so as to read:

Hawaii: To carry into effect the provisions of an act entitled "An act to extend the benefits of certain acts of Congress to the Territory of Hawaii," approved May 16, 1928 (7 U. S. C. 386–386b), $60,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 18, after "(7 U. S. C. 369a)", to strike out "$8,750; in all, for Alaska, $23,750" and insert "$10,000; in all, for Alaska, $25,000", so as to read:

Alaska: To carry into effect the provisions of an act entitled "An act to extend the benefits of the Hatch Act and the Smith-Lever Act to the Territory of Alaska," approved February 23, 1929 (7 U. S. C. 386c), $15,000; and the provisions of section 2 of the act entitled "An act to extend the benefits of the Adams Act, the Purnell Act, and the Capper-Ketcham Act to the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes," approved June 20, 1936 (7 U. S. C. 369a), $10,000; in all, for Alaska, $25,000.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Georgia as to this amendment and other amendments. In glancing through the bill there seem to be on pages 12, 14, and 16 appropriations under the Bankhead-Jones Act. I was wondering what they aggregate and why the separation?

Mr. RUSSELL. They are separated because the Bankhead-Jones Act relating to experiment and extension work is composed of many different items. For example, on page 12 the appropriation is for payment to States for assisting in carrying on "research into basic laws and principles relating to agriculture" by the various State experiment stations and land-grant colleges. The Bankhead-Jones Act was passed by the Congress in 1935. It provided for an increase of $600,000 a year in the amount appropriated until the amount of $3,000,000 was reached, and thereupon any increase would cease and the appropriation would become permanently $3,000,000. The House did not allow this year's increment in this appropriation. The Senate committee decided to bring this appropriation up to date and to appropriate the full amount of $3,000,000.

The maximum amount that could be appropriated for this purpose was $5,000,000. Sixty percent of that money was to be allocated as between the several States and Puerto Rico and Hawaii. The other 40 percent was to be retained in a special reserve fund in the Department of Agriculture for work in various lines of research that were suggested by the Secretary of Agriculture himself.

The Senator from Colorado will observe on page 15 that the Senate committee did not allow the full amount for this work. We only restored this appropriation to the amount provided for the current fiscal year, which was $1,400,000. The Secretary's special research fund is therefore $600,000 below the authorization and below the amount that was contemplated by the Congress when it enacted the Bankhead-Jones Act in 1935.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment on page 11, line 18.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 8, after "427–427g)", to strike out "$2,400,000" and insert "$3,000,000", so as to read:

Title I, Bankhead-Jones Act: For payments to States, Hawaii, Alaska, and Puerto Rico, pursuant to authorizations contained in title I of an act entitled "An act to provide for research into basic laws and principles relating to agriculture and to provide for the further development of cooperative agricultural extension work and the more complete endowment and support of land-grant colleges", approved June 29, 1935 (7 U. S. C. 427–427g), $3,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 11, after the word "stations", to strike out "$6,843,750" and insert "$7,450,000", so as to read:

In all, payments to States, Hawaii, Alaska, and Puerto Rico for agricultural experiment stations, $7,450,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, my attention was diverted to another matter for a moment. I inquire if the amendment, on page 45, lines 9 to 14, has been agreed to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment has been agreed to.

Mr. McNARY. May I ask the able Senator from Georgia was that amendment discussed in the committee?

Mr. RUSSELL. It was discussed at considerable length. The Senator from Oregon, who has participated in writing most of the forestry laws, in recent years, is familiar with the fact that when the wood or timber is sold from national forests the States receive 25 percent of the amount received from the sale of the wood in lieu of taxes which they have lost. After the great hurricane that devastated the New England States, and which blew down a great deal of timber in national forests we made an appropriation in the deficiency bill of $5,000,000 to employ people and to get that timber out of the woods to the roads where it could be sold. The act provides that the States are to receive 25 percent of the stumpage value of the timber. Without this language in the bill the States in which these forests are situated would receive 25 percent of the $5,000,000 appropriated as well as what the timber ultimately might bring. Therefore, this amendment merely provides that those States shall receive stumpage value, which is the amount they would have received if the wood had been cut without having been blown down by the hurricane.

Mr. McNARY. That is a very clear explanation. I inquire if the Forest Service requested the change?

Mr. RUSSELL. The Forest Service requested the change. The language was submitted in the Budget estimate but for some reason it was left out by the other House.

Mr. McNARY. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The next amendment was, on page 46, line 24, after the word "elsewhere", to strike out "$593,403" and insert "$648,403", and in line 25, after the word "which", to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$20,000", so as to read:

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Cooperative distribution of forest planting stock", on page 49, line 19, after the word "thereto", to strike out "$70,579" and insert "$100,000", so as to read:

For cooperation with the various States in the procurement, production, and distribution of forest-tree seeds and plants in establishing windbreaks, shelterbelts, and farm wood lots upon denuded or nonforested lands within such cooperating States, under the provisions of section 4 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the protection of forest lands, for the reforestation of denuded areas, for the extension of national forests, and for other purposes, in order to promote the continuous production of timber on lands chiefly suitable therefor", approved June 7, 1924 (16 U. S. C. 567), and acts supplementary thereto, $100,000, which amount shall be available for the employment of persons and means in the District of Columbia and elsewhere.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, in connection with the item relating to cooperative distribution of forest planting stock let me say that I have received some communications protesting against it. I do not pretend to know what the situation is, and so I should like to have an explanation. The protests come to me from those who are engaged in the business of developing trees, I think, for private sale. I do not know what the stiuation is, but, as I have said, I have received some telegrams about it and should like to know what the situation is.

Mr. RUSSELL. The item that is now under consideration by the Senate has been carried in the bill for a long number of years. In my opinion, the item to which the Senator from Colorado has reference will be found on page 102 of the bill, which is the cooperative farm forestry item under the Norris-Doxey Act and it appears in the bill for the first time this year. The item now under consideration pertains largely to national forest lands. It is part of the original McNary-Sweeney Act, I think.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee on page 49, line 19.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment will be stated.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Acquisition of lands for national forests", on page 50, line 6, after the word "lands", to strike out "$2,000,000" and insert "$3,000,000", so as to read:

For the acquisition of forest lands under the provisions of the act approved March 1, 1911, as amended (16 U. S. C. 513–519, 521), under sound commercial title satisfactory to the Attorney General as provided in said act, including the transfer to the Office of the Solicitor of such funds for the employment by that office of persons and means in the District of Columbia and elsewhere as may be necessary in connection with the acquisition of such lands, $3,000,000: Provided, That not to exceed $112,500 of the sum appropriated in this paragraph may be expended for departmental personal services in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask to have that amendment passed over until a little later, and also, when it is reached, the amendment on page 80 with reference to grading tobacco.

Mr. RUSSELL. I have no objection.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I will offer my amendment now. On page 50, line 6, in the committee amendment, I move to strike out "$3,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$5,000,000."

I shall make only a brief statement about the amendment.

For some time the Forest Service have been asking Congress to appropriate $10,000,000 a year to enable them to buy new forest lands over a period, so that they may have some reliance on the amount of money that will be available. I have not time to go into details about the matter; but it seems to me that the request of the Forest Service is not an unreasonable one, because we have to start in now to purchase lands available for forestry because of the shortsightedness of some of our ancestors, who allowed nearly all of the available forest lands in certain parts of the country to become owned by private interests; and now we have to go back and buy them up in order to turn them into forests. Our ancestors became a little more farsighted as our country developed toward the west, and were able, out of the public lands and otherwise, to arrange for large forest areas; but especially in the East and in the Middle West and in some parts of the far West there are still available areas for the Forest Service. There are cut-over lands that ought to be reforested. I am not asking that the request of the Forest Service be granted by appropriating $10,000,000, but I am asking that half of that amount be provided.

The Senate committee has amended the House language by increasing the amount from $2,000,000 to $3,000,000. The amendment I offer is to make the amount $5,000,000. I should like to see the House figure increased by $3,000,000 so that the Forest Service may with some degree of assurance go ahead with its program—which it can carry out, under the amendment I offer, only to the extent of 50 percent of its desires—of purchasing available forest lands not only where there are forests in existence, but lands that have been cut over and need to be reforested, because, unless the Forest Service does this work, it is not going to be done.

I wish the Senator from Georgia, in charge of the bill, would accept the amendment.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I should be glad to accept the amendment if the committee had not considered and rejected the proposal submitted by the Senator from Kentucky. I feel bound by the committee's action to state that the committee considered the $5,000,000 amendment and voted it down, and then adopted an amendment increasing the appropriation to $3,000,000, which is the amount provided in the act for the current year.

Of course the representatives of the Forest Service testified before the committee that there was very vital need for increased funds. They had asked the Budget Bureau for $10,000,000, and the Budget Bureau had allowed only $2,000,000, the amount carried in the House bill.

If the committee had not definitely voted on this question, I should be glad to accept the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky; but I feel that I am bound by the action of the committee to say that the committee did consider it, and voted it down.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator knows that the Forest Service now have under contemplation the purchase of a considerable acreage of forest lands in the Appalachian Mountains and in other parts of the country, and that they cannot go forward with that project unless they receive an increased amount.

Mr. RUSSELL. That was the testimony which was adduced before the committee. After hearing that testimony, the committee voted to restrict the appropriation to $3,000,000.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate the Senator's attitude, and I appreciate his sympathy for the increased amount; but I hope the Senate will feel justified in increasing it.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Georgia if my recollection is correct that not only for the current year but for the previous year the appropriation has been $3,000,000. The purpose of the committee, as I understood the discussion, was to try to fix an amount upon which the Forest Service could rely, and, as it has been heretofore fixed at $3,000,000, to retain that amount, instead of increasing it and decreasing it from year to year, and having the Forest Service in such a position that it would not know what amount it could rely upon having. If we stick to the appropriation of $3,000,000, the Forest Service can make its plans accordingly.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the appropriation for the current year is $3,000,000, and the appropriation for the preceding year was the same amount. Until that time varying amounts had been appropriated. One year the Forest Service received from emergency funds an allocation amounting to approximately $16,000,000. The next year the Budget Bureau allowed them only $1,000,000. There has been a great fluctuation; and for the past 3 years the Senate committee has endeavored to keep this sum at not less than $3,000,000.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, of course, the chairman must always follow the action of his committee. I am a member ex officio of the committee, and therefore am not bound, because I was not present when this item was considered. If I had been, the result might have been different.

This probably is one of the most meritorious appropriations contained in this very large bill. Some years ago, when the late able Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. Weeks, was a Member of this body, I recall that he introduced a bill which was called the forest acquisition bill. The first appropriation under that bill was $150,000. It gradually grew to $500,000, and then to a million dollars. In 1926 a bill was passed, known as the Clarke-McNary bill, which authorized an annual expenditure of $10,000,000 to acquire cut-over land in the watersheds of navigable streams.

Anyone can appreciate, from a mere glance at the matter, how full of merit an appropriation of that kind is. Under that authorization large sums have been appropriated, and particularly have been transferred by the P. W. A. and other agencies to this Department for this purpose. Large areas have been acquired in some of the Southern States and the New England States. Very little has been expended in the Western States, because they have sufficient forest areas without acquiring any more. I think the average price of the land acquired has been a little less than $4 an acre—$3.87 an acre. The Government acquires cut-over land where great erosion occurs, where the forests had a great deal to do with climatic conditions and the water-supply and recreation conditions of the country, and reforests them now by means of the C. C. C. camps to a large extent. In a short time these areas are protected from erosion, the rainfall is conserved, a better supply of water for municipalities is assured, and large recreation areas are afforded to the people of the country. Without the purchase by the Government of these practically worthless lands—which oftentimes are abandoned by the private owners, and go back to the States or the counties or the tax roll, and become a charge against the respective political subdivisions—this work could not be carried on.

If I had my way and were going through this bill, I would pare down many of the other appropriations, and place in this fund the amounts thus saved. In my opinion, no more desirable work is being done than taking worthless lands that have been logged off, where bare stumps appear on the soil without any evidence of reforestation, and making forests out of them.

We should have had during all the years since 1925, the year of the passage of the Clarke-McNary bill, annual appropriations of $10,000,000; but somehow we have never been able to obtain them, because there was a lack of appreciation of the splendid work that has been done and is being done in acquiring these lands.

I am in entire sympathy with the able Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] in desiring to increase this amount to $5,000,000. If we do so, I suspect that the House will accept the amendment. It is a very small sum for such a commendable purpose. While I concede the correctness of the attitude of the able Senator from Georgia, the chairman of the subcommittee, that as this matter was considered by the committee of course he should stand up nobly, as he is doing, and oppose the amendment, I am in favor of the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky, and hope we may now have a vote on it, and that that sum of money will be appropriated by the Senate for this purpose.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of Senators to the fact that there have been purchased and added to the Forest Service during the past 10 years 15,000,000 acres. So the Forest Service has not been idle, and Congress has not been neglectful of the Forest Service, when 15,000,000 acres have been acquired in 10 years.

Mr. McNARY. Of course, standing by itself, that seems a tremendous area; but if one goes over the country and makes a study of this matter, as I did a few years ago with a special committee, 15,000,000 acres seem very small compared with the area of denuded land which should be reforested. Of course some areas have been added, and some money has been appropriated, but not sufficient.

There were 400,000 acres of lands in the East originally which should have been forested, and now the area has been reduced by at least three-fourths, much of it in the New England States, where hardwood is grown and converted into lumber, and much of it in the Great Lakes States, lands which are as bare as they were 25 or 30 years ago when the timber was removed. The Government should begin to acquire those lands and build up the forests for the benefit of those who live in the region and for the great purpose forests serve the entire Nation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McNARY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Fifteen million acres, compared with the acreage of an average farm or even an average county, may seem like a tremendous acreage, and I wish to compliment the Forest Service for doing the best they could with the amount of money available. But when we consider what every other country in the world has done to preserve its forests, and the regulations in force under which a man is not even permitted to cut a tree from his own land; when we consider the welfare of our country 50 or 75 years hence in the matter of forests and the preservation and re-creation of forests, 15,000,000 acres is really a very insignificant area. I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I have listened to what the chairman of the subcommittee and the Senator from Colorado have said as to the 15,000,000 acres. My information is that on July 1 a considerable acreage is to be transferred to the Forest Service from the Resettlement Administration. I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia what acreage will be transferred on July 1 to the Forest Service from the Resettlement Administration.

Mr. McNARY. Is the transfer statutory, or is it to be made under an edict under the reorganization plan?

Mr. BYRNES. I wish to ascertain that from the Senator from Georgia. I remember a statement being made before the committee of a considerable acreage being transferred, but I am not familiar with the amount.

Mr. McNARY. I am anxious to know whether this is in contemplation by the President or is mandatory by statute.

Mr. BYRNES. I have just stated that I do not know, and that is what I intend to ask the Senator.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator knows a good deal about the reorganization plans.

Mr. BYRNES. I know only of the order which has come to the Senate, and I know of no order affecting this particular question. I think the Senator from Georgia has the information desired by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I do not have before me the exact figures as to the number of acres acquired by the Resettlement Administration under the acquisition program affecting submarginal lands. It is my recollection that approximately 8,000,000 acres were acquired. I do not know the exact number that were transferred to the Forest Service.

I may say to the Senator from Oregon that this has nothing whatever to do with the reorganization program, but the Resettlement Administration did purchase these lands with emergency funds to retire them from cultivation, on the theory that they were submarginal. While I am not sure, my recollection is that 1,500,000 acres will be transferred on the 1st of July to the Forest Service.

Mr. McNARY. That is submarginal land.

Mr. RUSSELL. It is adjacent to forest areas.

Mr. McNARY. It has no relation to forest bearing lands at the headwaters of navigable streams.

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes, it is land which is adjacent to established forest areas. Of course, some of these lands were given to many other agencies. The Biological Survey has acquired a considerable number of acres. A number of acres have been transferred to the National Park Service. But those adjacent to established forest areas were transferred to the Forest Service.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, as a member of the National Forest Reservation Commission I would like to say upon that point that all the lands that will be transferred to the Forest Service are outside of existing units. They are not within the units. They may be adjacent, and are adjacent, because attractive land far removed from any forest unit could not be very well handled by the Forest Service unless it were sufficiently large within itself to warrant the handling of the tract as a separate forest unit area. So, while the addition of these lands does increase the forests, the additional lands do not fill out units which have been commenced. In other words, the National Forest Reservation Commission, on the advice and recommendation of the Forest Service, approves a unit. The boundaries are marked out and lands are purchased within the unit. The addition of lands outside the unit may increase the total area of the unit finally, but will not make any contribution to the filling out of the area included within the unit.

We have tried to follow a somewhat consistent rule by not purchasing lands where less than 20 percent of the unit has been acquired by the Government. Generally speaking, the Commission has followed that rule during the past 2 years.

The larger part of the money paid to the Forest Service with the assistance of the Commission for establishing units throughout the country has come to us through allotments from relief or public-works appropriations. By virtue of an order issued by the President 2 years ago, I believe, some $30,000,000 was transferred at one time.

These forest units have now been established as far west as Minnesota, and even beyond, some in California, but the greater part of the units which are now being filled out are in the eastern part of the United States. Large areas have been purchased in the State of Michigan, as well as areas in Missouri and Illinois, and, as I have stated, some have been established as far west as Minnesota.

I do not think there is any better purpose for which Congress can authorize the expenditure of public money than in the rebuilding of our forests, in the rebuilding of lands which have been denuded of timber—cut-over lands. The purchases made by the Forest Service and approved by the Commission have not evoked any complaint on account of the high prices paid; but from time to time the Commission have considered protests, coming from various and widely scattered sections of the country, that we were paying too little for the lands, and thereby affecting the general market price of other lands in the areas.

It seems to me that this program ought to be extended as far as possible, and I heartily agree that we should have a fixed appropriation of $10,000,000 a year for the purpose of filling out the various forest units, now running very high in number.

In many of the units only 25 or 30 percent of the land within the area has been purchased, and the longer we defer action probably the higher will be the prices which will have to be paid, and certainly greater will be the delay in the actual effective work of the Forest Service in treating the whole area as a unit, and applying to it such principles and such policies as the Forest Service desires to apply to the respective units. I hope the appropriation will be increased to $5,000,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Georgia whether he will not be willing to step forward to page 80 to another amendment in which I am interested, because I am compelled to leave the Chamber?

Mr. RUSSELL. I shall be glad to accommodate the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that we take up at this time the amendment in line 2 on page 80.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 80, line 2, the committee proposes to strike out "$375,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$450,000", so as to make the paragraph read:

Tobacco Inspection Act: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of an act entitled "An act to establish and promote the use of standards of classification for tobacco, to provide and maintain an official tobacco-inspection service, and for other purposes", approved August 23, 1935 (7 U. S. C. 511–511q), $450,000.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I move that the figures "$450,000" be eliminated and that "$525,000" be substituted.

This is an increase in the amount of money appropriated for the purpose of scientific grading of tobacco through the Department of Agriculture. If I had the time, I should like to go into the history of the appropriation and the history of the activities of the Department of Agriculture in the matter of grading tobacco. It is a sort of self-liquidating proposition.

When I was a boy, living in the country, we used to raise tobacco, but we knew only three grades. In the scientific development of the marketing of tobacco, however, there are now some sixty-odd grades of tobacco, and the more scientifically these tobaccos are graded better prices and the more logical prices are received by the producer according to the quality of his tobacco.

Mr. President, tobacco produces about one-eighth of the entire revenue of the United States Treasury. Between $525,000,000 and $550,000,000 goes into the Treasury of the United States because of taxation on tobacco. That is about one-eighth of the income of the Treasury Department.

Tobacco is the only product which still bears war-time taxes levied during the World War. There is a tax of 18 cents a pound on tobacco that is distributed in the rough, or in the hand, or loose for chewing or smoking purposes, unless the farmer sells his own tobacco which he himself has produced on his own farm, and in that event he does not have to pay the tax. But if I raise tobacco and I sell it to B, and B desires to sell it to the consuming public for the purposes of chewing or smoking, without going through what is called the manufacturing process, B must pay a tax of 18 cents a pound into the Treasury of the United States in order to enjoy the right to resell that tobacco. Although that tobacco may have been sold by the farmer for 5 or 6 cents a pound, the Government of the United States gets 18 cents a pound in the form of a tax. There is the tax on cigars; there is the tax on smoking tobacco; there is the tax on cigarettes, and all these different taxes on tobacco in its various forms amount to nearly $550,000,000 a year.

All we are asking is $150,000 increase in the amount of money carried in the appropriation bill as passed by the House in order to assist the Department of Agriculture to help the farmers grade their tobacco more scientifically.

Under the appropriation of $375,000 carried in the House bill, and $450,000 carried in the bill as amended by the Senate Committee on Appropriations, there are scores of tobacco markets in the United States, in Kentucky, Tennessee, Virginia, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Wisconsin, and in the southern part of Ohio, and probably a few in Indiana, where the Department cannot install any scientific and well-trained graders in order to teach the farmer how to grade his tobacco so that it may produce more money for the farmer, and of course produce more money for the Treasury.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. Is it not also true that the farmers in those markets where they sell the tobacco are asking for these graders, but the Department of Agriculture cannot furnish them because of lack of funds?

Mr. BARKLEY. That is absolutely true. The tobacco growers have been imploring and are now imploring Congress to increase this appropriation. I went before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations and asked for an additional $150,000 and the committee granted an increase of $75,000, which is really insignificant when compared to the need. The farmers' organizations, individual farmers, and the Farm Bureau Federation in all the States which produce tobacco, are asking for the increase.

Mr. President, in view of the enormous revenue that is produced and which comes into the United States Treasury from tobacco alone, $150,000 is an insignificant sum to ask Congress to appropriate in order that the tobacco farmers may be given the necessary help in undertaking to grade scientifically their tobacco. They are asking for such help. The amount asked is small. I realize that it is the committee's duty to keep appropriations down. However, greater amounts of money are carried in the appropriation bill for the benefit of crops which do not produce a dime of revenue for the United States. I do not object to that. I am in favor of appropriating money for the benefit of all agricultural products. I am not sectional in my attitude toward agriculture, and even though the increase I ask is not allowed, I would not vote to strike from the bill any item in it the purpose of which is to help some other crop in some other section of the country. But it certainly seems to me to be a just and fair request, and one which ought not to receive opposition, when a great agricultural industry, the tobacco industry, which provides for the United States Treasury one-eighth of its income, asks for $150,000, not only to help the farmer grade his tobacco more scientifically, and therefore receive more money for it, but almost automatically to increase the amount of money that will come into the United States Treasury by reason of the more scientific grading and marketing and distributing of the tobacco produced in the United States.

I hope the amendment to the committee amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I was personally much impressed by the statement which the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] made when he appeared before the Committee on Appropriations. However, the item he refers to is just one of any number of very meritorious items which the Appropriations Committee would like to include in the bill. But when considering the many requests which were made, in the light of the amount carried in the House bill, and the amount approved by the Bureau of the Budget, the committee allowed the Senator from Kentucky one-half of the amount which he requested. I might point out that this amount of $75,000 was just that much above the Budget estimate. The Budget recommended the sum of $375,000.

We were keenly aware of the merits of the assertions of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] in making this appropriation last year. The year before last only $275,000 was allowed for this purpose. The Senator from Kentucky appeared before the committee and we agreed to $450,000 last year, and the item came out of conference with $375,000. Therefore the item for the current year is a substantial increase over the amount carried year before last.

It is true that tobacco does pay an enormous amount of revenue into the National Treasury, but when the basic act was enacted providing for this inspection work, that fact was taken into account.

This is one of the few inspection items under the Department of Agriculture for which no inspection fee is charged the farmer. In most instances some fee is charged for inspection. Of course, I am arguing against self-interest in this matter because the tobacco farmers in my State are very anxious to have these grading markets established, but my responsibility as Senator in charge of the bill compels me to oppose any increase over and above the amount we allowed.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. The thing that is uppermost in my mind is that if the Department of Agriculture is given the additional $150,000 it can supply the demand for grading. But if Congress stops with a $75,000 increase, then there will be many tobacco markets in which the graders and inspection service cannot be installed. The service would be installed in the tobacco market in one town, let us say, and in another town, not far away, the Department cannot give them the same service, and they must do without it.

In view of the fact that the Department of Agriculture can furnish all the graders necessary if the $150,000 increase is granted and will have to leave certain markets out if only $75,000 is granted, it seems to me apparent that the $150,000 asked for should be allowed.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, of course, there is some merit in that argument, but this inspection service is not installed in any tobacco market until there has been a referendum of the farmers living in the neighborhood, and the Department has proceeded very wisely and has not called referendums except when the Department has been requested so to do.

Mr. LOGAN. That is true.

Mr. RUSSELL. And the service is now being afforded where the referendums have been held and the majority of the farmers have voted in the affirmative. Other tobacco markets doubtless would have approved the establishment of this service if referendums were held, but at the present time the service is established in all the markets in which referendums have been held, and the increase which the committee allowed will permit an increase in the number of markets where the farmers can vote that they wish to have the service established.

Mr. LOGAN. The Department of Agriculture would naturally not call a referendum when it knew it did not have the money to supply the graders. I think all the farmers want this grading help if they can get it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] to the committee amendment on page 80, line 2.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment.

The next amendment was, on page 50, after line 23, to insert:

> For the acquisition of lands for addition to the Tahoe National Forest in the State of Nevada in accordance with the provisions of sections 1 to 4, inclusive, of the act approved February 12, 1938, $325,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, upon a number of occasions during the past few years I have challenged attention to the fiscal policies of the Government and the unjustifiable if not illegal appropriations which were being made. I have called attention to the heavy burdens of taxation which the American people were compelled to meet and the unwise and in many instances unsound and dangerous policies which were being adopted and which called for increased appropriations and encroachments of the Federal Government upon the States. We have seen the mounting costs of Government during the past few years and the enormous increase in the demands made upon the taxpayers of the United States. All appeals for economy in governmental activities have fallen upon deaf ears. There has been a veritable orgy of expenditures without commensurate results. It would appear that the more bureaus that were created and the larger the appropriations made by the Federal Government, the more unsatisfactory was our economic and industrial condition. Certain it is that we have not by these large expenditures reduced unemployment, improved the conditions of agriculture, and advanced the industrial and economic condition of the Nation. Indeed the demands for larger appropriations are increasing, based in part at least upon the contention that there has been no improvement in the economic or industrial conditions of our country. The opinion seems to prevail that the obligation rests upon the Federal Government to respond to every request for Federal appropriations.

There are many indications that some of our citizens are relying more and more upon the Federal Government to assume responsibilities which belong to individuals, States, and their political subdivisions. The Government is responding to many of these demands and projecting itself into fields of endeavor which are without the authority of the Federal Government.

It must be apparent to even the most casual observer of the economic and industrial conditions of the United States during the past few years that there is a subsidence of that fine spirit of individualism which is essential to the preservation of democratic institutions and of our form of government. There are limits under the Constitution to the power of the Federal Government, and whenever it transgresses such limitations unfortunate and, indeed, serious consequences will inevitably result.

I have indicated on several occasions that the Federal Government has been engaged in a spending spree, and it is obvious that the spree is not ended. But I fear that my criticisms of some of the policies of the Government have been regarded as discordant notes. I have no reason to believe that what I shall say today will meet with any very general approval in this body, and certainly not with millions who are the beneficiaries of Federal gratuities and appropriations.

We are spending billions of dollars annually in excess of the billions which we wring from the people of the United States by oppressive revenue measures. Before concluding my remarks I shall indicate some of the enormous expenditures which are being made, and the progress toward national bankruptcy which some contend we are making.

Mr. President, excessive debt, whether of individuals or of governments, may not be defended; and certainly excessive debt corrupts a nation just as it ruins individuals. As I indicated, I know that I am but a voice crying in the wilderness and that efforts to reduce governmental expenses and adopt sound fiscal policies will under the present phobia of State socialism prove futile. We cannot stay the torrential flow of Federal expenditures, nothwithstanding the fact that there are signposts along the way to show that we are tending toward inflation, which will culminate in impairing the credit of the Government.

The attempt to borrow one's self out of debt only prolongs the evil and adds to the confusion. Upon many occasions I have criticized the spending policy of the Government and of my party, and have indicated that unless the demands are resisted the inevitable consequence must be bankruptcy. I have examined many of the hearings, not only those before the committee which reported the bill, but those in the House. I have examined many thousands of pages of the Senate and House hearings this year and I recall but few instances in which there was any opposition to the appropriations which were being made or to the demands which were presented by executive departments.

It is worthy of note, Mr. President, that in 99 cases out of a hundred, if not 999 out of a thousand, the demands for appropriations come from Federal officials; from these persons and Federal agencies which will profit thereby and increase their authority and power. The bureaus are always in tune to sound their demands when appropriations committees meet. The bureaus and the hundreds of thousands of Federal officials are the ones who are most anxious to obtain appropriations. There are no opponents to question or defeat their demands; there is no devil's advocate before the committees to protect the interests of the public and of the Government. Senators may search the hearings in vain to find justification for many appropriations, or to find opposition voiced to the demands which are made.

Within a few days I shall offer a bill which I hope will have the effect of protecting the people and the Government and of providing satisfactory evidence to the legislative branches of the Government of the validity of any claim which is presented for consideration. The measure provides for an independent legislative organization or commission, with an adequate and suitable staff to investigate claims and measures presented or requests made for appropriations. This commission will have full authority to subpena witnesses and, as indicated, to make exhaustive investigations as to the merits of any measure, or bill, or demand for legislation, and particularly for appropriations from the Federal Treasury.

Under the provisions of the proposed bill the legislative branch of the Government will not have to depend almost exclusively upon Federal agencies, Federal employees, Federal bureaus and organizations, for facts with respect to claims and demand for legislation. There will be no ex parte hearings in which only Government agencies and claimants for Federal appropriations will be heard.

Mr. President, in my opinion it would be in the interest of economy and in the interest of the people if Federal employees, and representatives of Federal bureaus and organizations, were permitted to appear before committees preparing legislation, only when requested by the proper legislative committees and organizations.

As I have indicated substantially all of the propaganda in favor of appropriations and increased activities of bureaus and Federal organizations come from employees in the Federal Government who would be profited thereby. As I have stated the hearings are practically ex parte, and committees preparing legislation are dependent almost exclusively upon representations made by Federal agencies and bureaus and by Federal employees.

Unfortunately there is great apathy upon the part of the public. Representatives of the people seldom appear, and only when they are interested in securing legislation, including appropriations. The view seems to prevail that the various departments and Federal agencies and bureaus, including the Bureau of the Budget, will prepare the necessary measures, including appropriation bills, and therefore it is not important that representatives of the public should participate in hearings leading up to the preparation of appropriation bills.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think the Senator has made an excellent suggestion in proposing an independent legislative budget and in arming senatorial debate with an independent source of information with which to combat the constant campaign for increased expenditures.

I should like to remind the Senator that the able chairman of the Finance Committee, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], in discussing the same problem in an address this week, suggested that it might be well to require a two-thirds majority in the House and Senate to sustain appropriations. As he pointed out at the time, that was one of the provisions of the Constitution of the Confederate States.

I should like to add for the Senator's consideration, Mr. President, the further thought that the Chief Executive of this country can never fulfill his promises to the American people in respect to economy unless he has the privilege of the item veto in connection with appropriation bills. I know of nothing more essential than to give the President the item-veto privilege, so that an Executive who wants to economize may have an opportunity to do so effectually.

I submit that suggestion to the Senator.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am glad the Senator has indicated approval of the suggestion which I made; and I sincerely hope that the bill which I shall present may have his support, because I fear that it will encounter opposition.

With respect to the suggestion which the Senator has made concerning the power of the President to veto items in an appropriation bill, I heartily subscribe to that view. I have favored it for a number of years, and have supported the Senator who has so eloquently and forcibly presented it from time to time for the consideration of the Senate. I marvel that we have not taken the necessary steps to effect that reform, even though a constitutional amendment might be necessary.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I merely wish to add that about 2 years ago the present President of the United States indicated a very active interest in the item veto. Since that time nothing has been heard from the White House on the subject. I do not know whether or not it has become lost in the concentrated attention which foreign affairs now demand, monopolizing every consideration we give to public matters. However, I respectfully suggest to the President of the United States that he renew his interest in his suggestion of 2 years ago. I think it would be very helpful to him, and to his successor in salvaging his deficits.

Mr. KING. I shall be pleased to see the necessary steps taken to accomplish that reform. However, Mr. President, in my opinion Senators individually and collectively do not give to the consideration of appropriation bills that serious and earnest attention which they should. We have before us today a bill calling for appropriations of more than $1,300,000,000 in the aggregate. There were 20 Senators present before the able chairman of the subcommittee began explanation of the bill and its most important provisions; and at the conclusion of his statement less than 10 Senators were present.

It is expected that the bill will pass with but little opposition; and perhaps the lamentation will be that instead of $1,300,000,000 the appropriation should be $1,500,000,000.

When I was in the House, I remember that the agricultural appropriation bill carried appropriations of but a few million dollars. It now carries appropriations exceeding $1,300,000,000, plus $100,000,000, and perhaps more, which will be realized from customs receipts. As Senators know, a few years ago our customs receipts were between $400,000,000 and $600,000,000 annually. If there should be a revival of business, and a reasonable degree of prosperity, undoubtedly the customs receipts would soon rise far above the present figure, and perhaps attain a figure of $400,000,000 or $500,000,000 annually, which would, of course, automatically increase the appropriation for the Department of Agriculture.

The bill, of course, does not indicate the sum of over $100,000,000 which comes from customs receipts. So when the bill passes the Department of Agriculture will have available for expenditure during the next year approximately $1,400,000,000, a sum so large that I fear many of us do not fully comprehend.

A few moments ago we were debating over an appropriation of $150,000 for the benefit, as it was claimed by the distinguished Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], of the producers of tobacco. Why not take $150,000 from the salaries of the personnel in the Department of Agriculture and give it to the Senator from Kentucky for the benefit of tobacco growers? The personnel in the Department of Agriculture, as I recall, exceed 35,000. We could strike from the rolls thousands of those who constitute the great army in the Department of Agriculture and provide $150,000 for the tobacco growers. However, that will not be done. The personnel will be increased by this bill. A few years ago the personnel in the Department of Agriculture was only a few thousand. In fact, I recall that when I was in the House years ago the personnel in the Department of Agriculture was approximately 1,000. I believe it is now more than 35,000. So I suggest that we economize by reducing the enormous army in the Department of Agriculture and in all the other executive departments of the Government.

There are now considerably more than a million and a half persons employed by the Federal Government not including several million whose names appear upon the pay rolls of the various Federal agencies.

As an illustration of the increase of personnel I recall that the number of employees of the Department of Commerce and Labor soon after its organization was 1,047. Later it was divided into two departments and the employees in the two departments today total many thousands. I recall that in 1903 the number of employees in the District of Columbia in the Department of Justice was 141. In 1936 there were 2,178. In the Department of the Navy the employees in the District of Columbia in 1903 were 324 and in 1936 there were 11,000. The number of employees in the Post Office Department in the District of Columbia increased from 697 in 1903 to 3,940 in 1936. The number of employees in the Department of the Interior between the years just mentioned more than doubled and in the Department of the Treasury the number of employees in 1903 in the District of Columbia was 4,881 and in 1936 there were 19,300. In June 1936, as I recall, there were employed in the civil establishment of the Government 824,259 persons. In December 1935, according to an industrial conference board estimate, there were 11,120,925 persons receiving income from the Government of the United States. In the preceding 2 years more than 9,000,000 persons were recipients of bounties and contributions from the Federal Government aside from those on the direct pay and pension rolls.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further at that point?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think the Senator's figures are very conservative as to the number of those who are now attached to the public pay roll. I have seen an authentic analysis which demonstrates that one out of every nine gainfully employed persons in the United States is on a public pay roll. We cannot sustain a Republic indefinitely upon that basis.

Mr. KING. I have seen figures given by the Senator, and, as I remember them, they are correct. May I digress for a moment to make a statement and say that the Democratic Party was builded upon the concept that this was to be a government economically administered, that the States were to take care of the functions which belonged to them under the division of authority in this dual form of government. The Democrats for years criticized the Republican Party because they claimed that it was building up a great bureaucracy, that it lacked economy in the administration of public affairs. I wonder what some Democrats who carried the banner of democracy for years would say now, when they contemplate the tremendous expansion of the Federal Government, its usurpation of the functions and duties and responsibilities of States and individuals, with its enormous appropriations which this year will exceed $10,000,000,000, with authorizations of several billion dollars more? I may say—and I say it with regret—that I cannot understand the attitude of my party, the Democratic Party, that has always stood for economy, for the limitation of the power of the Federal Government, for the assertion of the rights of individuals and States. I cannot understand why it has abandoned those principles upon which it was founded and has accepted policies and principles of some Republican administrations. Indeed, it is said, that it has gone beyond some Republican administrations in the matter of expenditure and encroachment upon the rights of individuals and upon the authority of the States.

It is believed by many that the fundamental principles upon which the Democratic Party was founded by Jefferson have been forgotten or at least are not being followed.

May I recur to the increase in the expenditures of the Federal Government, to the demand for larger appropriations, the demand for the Federal Government to take over the functions of the States? The mail that I receive contains demands for larger appropriations and for the Government to enter into the States and take over duties and responsibilities which rest upon the counties and cities and upon the States themselves. We seem to have lost our conception of our form of government, of its dual character, and we are moving rapidly toward a condition under which the States will lose their power, their vitality, and their strength—and there will be devolved upon the Federal Government responsibilities belonging to individuals as well as to the States. Democracy will be lost; State rights will be destroyed, and we will have a powerful paternalistic or socialistic state.

I recall that Madison stated:

> The powers reserved to the several States will extend to all the objects which, in the ordinary course of affairs, concern the lives, liberties, and properties of the people and the internal order, improvement, and prosperity of the State.

I fear that we are forgetting some of the features of our form of government which commanded the admiration of students of government in other lands. Senators will recall that Lord Acton said:

> Whilst England was admired for the safeguards with which, in the course of many centuries, it had fortified liberty against the power of the Crown, America appeared still more worthy of admiration for the safeguards which, in the deliberations of a single memorable year, it had set up against the power of its own sovereign people.

We should not forget that Madison, speaking for the great patriots who gave us this Republic, said that the powers delegated to the Federal Government were few and definite, but the powers remaining to State governments were numerous and indefinite. It has been said that the approach to political paternalism was paved with benevolence. The Federal Government, for at least a hundred years, did not covet authority. It merely extended a helping hand. It paid out money to the States and, indirectly, to their citizens without attaching strings to it. It left them free to work their own salvation. The fact that public generosity was a step in the substitution of collective political responsibility for personal responsibility and that it put the beneficiary in the position of paying for what the Government gave him rather than of buying what he wanted when he wanted it was not brought home until the burden of expenditure for this assistance began to be reflected in mounting taxes and increasing public debt. By giving to the States public lands and, finally, from the General Treasury the Federal Government purchased the acquiescence of the citizens and their local governments, allaying any misgivings that may have arisen.

Bills are now pending before the Congress for the Federal Government to take over the public health, to make loans to all manner of persons, and to engage in every activity incident to human life and human development, regardless of State and individual rights.

History is so clear as to the effect of excessive debts that it seems difficult to believe that a country such as ours would deliberately follow the primrose path to economic destruction. Egypt, Syria, Greece, Rome, and many other nations to which attention might be called all echo the same refrain—great expenditures, and then finally the destruction of the government through inflation and through bankruptcy.

Let me give an illustration of one of the evils following the course I have indicated. We are all familiar with New Zealand, a great democratic country. In 1880 it was an enterprising, democratic dominion, functioning under a conservative constitution akin to our own. A trade depression brought forth political leaders who would create national prosperity by different policies. A daring "borrow and scatter" government—that was its title—program was launched. The public debt was multiplied four times in as many years. The Premier, through his ability to supply more borrowed money in answer to the demand, "Where is the prosperity?" became an unchallenged dictator; economic laws were ignored; business and industrial returns declined in ratio with lavish government spending.

The court, offering some resistance to the folly, was packed. Vast loans were floated each year and all manner of pensions were granted, sapping the people of their vitality and of their independence. The Government fostered labor unions, resulting in increased wages, increased unemployment, and increased cost of living. It also resulted in a wedge between classes, such as is being developed in the United States today and such as the Communists desire to accomplish here in this country as well as in other democratic countries. Repeating, it also resulted in a wedge between classes, which marked the end of the democracy and pointed to a later state socialism. Industry was regulated and then taken over by the Government.

We are regulating industry and fixing hours of labor; wages will soon be fixed in every department, if they are not fixed now; and, little by little, the activities which come within the category of private endeavor will come under the iron hand of a despotic bureaucracy which will presage, as I have indicated, state socialism. Our Democratic friends may think we are going to remedy the evils which have come to other nations by following the course which we are following, but they will be mistaken; and their children, if they themselves do not, will witness a change that will bring to them regret that their fathers failed to follow the principles and precepts under which this Republic was organized and established.

As I have said, in New Zealand the industry was regulated and then taken over by the Government; farmers were at first guaranteed a price, the balance being paid by the Government from taxes, as we are now giving parity-price payment to farmers; and demands will be made for similar measures dealing with those engaged in industrial activities. I make no comment upon the wisdom of it, but it is analogous to legislation which contributed to the economic downfall of the country to which I am referring.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator one more question? I do not wish to interrupt his trend of thought.

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator has been discussing the enormous appropriations which are to be domestically consumed. I read in the newspapers this morning what seems to be a commitment to $250,000,000 which, out of a plenitude of our deficits, we are going to extend to some of our neighbors externally. Will the Senator indicate to me where the Government gets the authority, constitutionally or otherwise, to make external loans about which we read this morning in the newspapers?

Mr. KING. I am unable to answer my friend from Michigan, but I suggest that he confer with some of the advisers of the President or some of the legal luminaries whose radiance is shed upon our country today. I confess I have not enjoyed much of it.

In New Zealand high incomes were prohibited. We are going to do that by taxation. There is now pending here a bill to compel every man who has a dollar to declare it, and then he will be compelled to buy with the dollar Government bonds whether or not he wants to do so.

As stated, high incomes were prohibited in New Zealand, so that the task of paying the huge debt fell to the low-income group. The depression of 1930 brought the people abruptly face to face with their folly, but it was too late. They had become "leaners" on the Government, as we are becoming. The result was repudiation and complete socialism. If we can escape the tragic ending of New Zealand, as I have indicated, we will be more fortunate than I now anticipate. I do not think we can stop our Government upon the toboggan slide where it now finds itself in its economic, political, and industrial activities.

Mr. President, may I invite the attention of the Senate to France? Senators doubtless are more familiar with some of these historical matters than am I, but I have attempted to understand the progress of the nations and their rise and fall and the cause of their decadence and destruction.

At the end of the eighteenth century, as Senators know, France was in dire financial embarrassment. Despite thoughtful warnings, paper money inflation was adopted as the way out. We are adopting paper money; we have issued bonds to the extent of $44,000,000,000; and a short time ago a demand was made by an important element in the administration that we should be permitted to issue $75,000,000,000 of bonds. The bonds are largely unloaded upon the banks; and if my friend from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN], who will pardon me for addressing him, has $10,000 in a bank in his State, if he should seek to withdraw $10,000 he would not receive gold or silver, but would receive Government obligations, predicated upon bonds which had been unloaded upon his bank, or perhaps upon some other bank.

Mr. President, in spite of all the paper issues in France, it has been said that business activities grew more and more spasmodic. Enterprise was soon chilled, and stagnation followed. There had come a complete uncertainty as to the future, as there is today a complete uncertainty as to the future of our fiscal policy and the future of our taxation and revenue system. The result was that capitalists declined to embark their means in business. That is the case here. Enterprise received a mortal blow. Demand for labor was still further diminished. This state of things, too, while it bore heavily upon the interests of the moneyed classes, was still more ruinous to those in most moderate, and most of all to those in straitened circumstances. Private property rights gave way to frantic attempts of the Government to regulate the value of the paper money. We regulated the value of our money. We compelled men who had gold to surrender it to the Treasury. Then we "revalued," as it was termed, the gold, and made an ounce of gold which was worth $20 plus, worth $35. You may call that high financing, or give to it any term you please, but it was not—so some stated—an honest transaction.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I have been detained outside the Chamber; and just as I came in I heard the Senator say that we might call a certain transaction high financing, or anything else we pleased, but it was not honest.

Mr. KING. I meant to say, some persons contended that it was not an honest policy.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not understand that there has ever been any high financing except that which was honest; has there? How can the Senator apply those two terms to the transaction?

Mr. KING. My dear friend always speaks with so much irony, and his questions carry so much condemnation, that I am very often disposed to agree with him.

To cure a disease temporary in its character, a corrosive poison was administered which ate out the vitals of French prosperity. It progressed according to a law in social physics which we may call the law of accelerating issue and depreciation. It brought to commerce, manufacturing, mercantile, and agricultural interests utter ruin. It ended in the complete financial, moral, and political prostration of France.

There is a lesson in all this which it behooves thinking persons to ponder. Whether individual or nation, debt leads slowly and insidiously to disaster.

Now, let us look at our own country. What is our economic status? Wither are we tending? The table of our Federal public debt presents a picture which, repeating the language I used a moment ago, it behooves every thinking man to ponder.

I shall go back no further than 1910. In that year the public debt was $1,147,000,000.

In 1911 it was $1,154,000,000.

In 1912 it was $1,194,000,000.

In 1913 it was $1,193,000,000.

In 1914 it was $1,188,000,000.

In 1915 it was $1,191,000,000.

In 1916 it was $1,225,000,000.

In 1917, as Senators know, we entered the World War and, of course, that compelled large appropriations for preparation and to carry out what we conceived to be our obligation as one of the belligerents in that frightful contest; so in 1917 the public debt was $2,976,000,000.

In 1918 it was $12,244,000,000. We were building ships. We were marshaling nearly 4,000,000 of our boys under the colors, and transporting to France more than 2,000,000 men. We were also making loans to our Allies of billions of dollars in order to enable them to purchase supplies from us, wheat and other commodities, powder and shot and shell and munitions in very large quantities. So, as stated, in 1918 the debt rose to the stupendous height of $12,244,000,000.

In 1919 pay day was coming. Some of the bonds were maturing. Some of the obligations we had incurred demanded consideration, and so the debt mounted to $25,482,000,000.

In 1920 we reduced the debt more than a billion dollars, so that it amounted to but $24,298,000,000.

In 1921 we reduced the debt again nearly a billion dollars, down to $23,964,000,000.

In 1922 it was $22,964,000,000.

The following year, 1923, it was $22,350,000,000.

In 1924 it was $21,251,000,000. We were reducing the debt by the very heavy burdens of taxation which we were imposing upon the American people, and were on the way to a balanced Budget within a reasonable time.

In 1925 the debt was $20,516,000,000.

In 1926 it was $19,643,000,000.

In 1927 it was $18,510,000,000.

In 1928 it was $17,604,000,000.

In 1929 it was $16,931,000,000.

In 1930 it was $16,185,000,000.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. DOWNEY. Am I to understand, then, that we were reducing the national debt when the depression came?

Mr. KING. I have given the figures, which indicate that issue. The Senator from California may determine for himself the implications to be derived therefrom. I have stated that we reduced the debt from the figure I have indicated so that in 1929 it was $16,931,000,000; in 1930 it was $16,185,000,000; in 1931 it was $16,801,000,000; and in 1932 it was $19,487,000,000. It had increased from 1931 to 1932 to $19,487,000,000.

In 1933 it was $22,539,000,000.

In 1934 it was $27,053,000,000—a rising scale again.

In 1935 it was $28,701,000,000.

In 1936 it was $33,545,000,000.

In 1937 it was $36,427,000,000.

In 1938 it was $37,167,487,000.

In 1939 it is estimated at $41,131,502,000.

In 1940 it is estimated at $44,457,847,210.

As I have indicated, Mr. President, in my opinion our appropriations for the coming fiscal year will be at least one billion and I think probably two billion dollars more than they were for the current fiscal year, which will make, at the close of next year, unless there should be a tremendous renaissance in our business activity, an indebtedness of $50,000,000,000; and we shall incur deficits, probably in violation of the terms of statutes, which we shall feel in honor bound to meet by increasing the taxes or lifting the ceiling, which is now $50,000,000,000, for the issuing of bonds.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have listened with tremendous interest and agreement to the remarks of the Senator from Utah. My only comment is that with my fellow Senators on the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee, which considered the agricultural appropriation bill, we do not want this one bill, the farmers' bill, to be the one in which drastic cuts must be made.

Mr. KING. May I interrupt my friend?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. KING. My observations are general in character and not directed to any particular measure.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand that.

Mr. KING. I am directing my remarks generally to our philosophy and to our policy.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand the Senator, and I am in entire agreement with him.

Mr. KING. If money is to be expended, I would rather to spend it for the farmers than for many other activities.

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe the way out is the way the Senator has suggested, that all the various measures asking for appropriations be scrutinized by a staff organized for that purpose, as suggested by the Senator from Utah, the Senator from Georgia, and the Senator from Colorado.

At this point, substantiating the Senator's remark as to what happens in history to those who give way to selfish demands, I should like to have permission to read a short poem of four stanzas, composed by an Oregonian.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. The poem reads:

THE WITNESS OF THE DUST

Voices are crying from the dust of Tyre,
From Baalbec and the stones of Babylon—
"We raised our pillars upon self-desire,
And perished from the large gaze of the sun."

Eternity was on the pyramids,
And immortality on Greece and Rome;
But in them all the ancient traitor hid,
And so they tottered like unstable foam.

There was no substance to their soaring hopes;
The voice of Thebes is now a desert cry;
A spider bars the road with filmy ropes,
Where once the feet of Carthage thundered by.

No house can stand, no kingdom can endure,
Built on the crumbling rock of self-desire;
Nothing is Living Stone, nothing is sure,
That is not whitened in the social fire.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think the poem the Senator has read came from a person who was familiar with history and the deductions which are to be drawn from infractions of moral and spiritual laws, as well as sound financial policies.

I might add, supplementing the observations of the Senator, that governments are not immune to the evil results which follow the transgression of moral and spiritual laws. Men who violate those laws perish miserably. Nations which violate the laws of God and the laws of justice and humanity will perish. The history of the world is a record of the struggles of individuals for liberty and justice, their ascent to a high degree of civilization, then, by corruption, they lost the proud eminence which they had achieved and went down to destruction.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I have not been in the Chamber during all of the Senator's references to the question which he has been discussing, but the remarks of the Senator from Oregon make me believe that perhaps I lost the principal part of the address. Has the Senator proposed setting up some supercommittee to coordinate all appropriation bills, and things of that sort?

Mr. KING. I shall be glad very briefly to respond to the Senator. What I suggested was that we have an executive budget organization, speaking primarily for the executive department. I hope I will be pardoned a personal allusion. The late Senator of Illinois was chairman of a committee considering that matter, and I had the honor to serve with him. We worked for months attempting to devise a budget system which I hoped would tend to reduce the expenditures of the Government, and coordinate the expenditures in the various departments. I think we failed in accomplishing all that was desired. What I stated, supplementing that, was that Congress does not have a budget commission, does not have organizations to scrutinize appropriations. The Committees on Appropriations meet, and in niney-nine cases out of one hundred every person who comes before the committees is interested in getting something out of the Treasury.

We do not have a devil's advocate there. We do not have anyone to defend the Government. Senators, with their multitudinous duties on various committees, can only accept the testimony that is presented, with the limited opportunities afforded them of securing evidence corroborative, or evidence to negative and overcome the testimony which has been given.

I suggested, therefore, that we should have an independent legislative organization to look into the various demands being made, and to make independent investigations, that we give it a staff to secure evidence and the facts as to the matters under consideration. The legislative commission, under the plan suggested, would get experts from outside of the Government service, persons who are familiar with governmental and social questions, and with the problems which Congress has to meet. The commission would be advisory to the House and the Senate, and would sit in with the committees and present the facts which they have elicited.

Mr. HATCH. There would be no intention on the part of the Senator, then, that the advisory committee supersede or take the place of the regular committees of Congress?

Mr. KING. Oh, no.

Mr. HATCH. Its function would be to furnish information?

Mr. KING. Yes. The Senator has been a very able judge, and he knows it is not satisfactory to rely only upon ex parte testimony. Frequently, where no preparation has been made by a defendant, the case goes against him by default, whereas if all the facts had been obtained, a different judgment might have been rendered by the jury or by the court.

All I am suggesting is that Congress get the facts and not rely solely upon special interests, upon people who are in the Government service and who want large appropriations or who desire to expand their functions of the organizations with which they are connected.

We know the tendency of bureaus to proliferate. There is a greater fecundity in Government agencies and Government organizations than there is in any branch of the animal kingdom.

Mr. President, I have been diverted by the poem read by the Senator from Oregon and I am sure he should congratulate the writer of the same.

Mr. HOLMAN. The author was Edwin Markham.

Mr. KING. Anything which comes from the pen and brain of Edwin Markham is a benediction, and calls for thought upon the part of those who read.

Mr. President, the figures which I have read of the mounting indebtedness of the Government, up to more than $44,457,847,000 are so huge as to stagger comprehension. I wonder if we understand what a billion dollars means? Yet I notice in the first amendment that we are asked to increase the salaries in one small branch up to nearly a million dollars, where it ought to have been only perhaps $25,000 to $100,000.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. I think the Senator from Utah is in error as to the bill providing any increase in salaries in any such amount.

Mr. KING. It is an increase for the department here in Washington, and I assumed it referred to compensation.

Mr. RUSSELL. The total amount in the item referred to by the Senator is only $24,000.

Mr. KING. That is not the one to which I refer.

Mr. RUSSELL. The appropriations in the bill are large enough, without exaggerating the amounts.

Mr. KING. There is an increase of $600,000 plus for salaries in one of the agencies here.

Mr. RUSSELL. There is no such item in the bill. The office of Budget and Finance does have an increase of $8,800.

Mr. KING. That is not the one to which I refer, and I am sure if the Senator will look at the bill he will find the one I am discussing. When I conclude my remarks, I shall point it out.

Mr. RUSSELL. I have been living with the bill for several weeks, and I am sure there is no such increase in salaries. There are increases in appropriations, but there is no such increase in salaries.

Mr. KING. Perhaps I was in error in saying it was for salaries, but it was for one of the agencies in the District of Columbia, and for services in the District of Columbia, and I cannot conceive that it could be for anything else—because they get their rent free—except for salaries.

I indicated that many do not understand what a billion dollars is. Let me give some idea of what it means. There are in the District approximately 600,000 people, plus. If every man, woman, and child in Washington came forward and deposited a dollar each day it would take 2 days to accumulate a million dollars. They would have to deposit a dollar each day for 2,000 days, approximately 6 years, in order to accumulate a billion dollars. It would require 270 years to accumulate $45,000,000,000. Every man, woman, and child in the District of Columbia would have to deposit a dollar a day for approximately 270 years in order to pay the principal alone of the public debt. Assuming a man lived to be 60, it would take four and a half lives of that duration.

Then there is the interest on the public debt. At 2 percent, the interest alone amounts to nearly $1,000,000,000 a year. Eight dollars for every person in the United States would be required to pay only the interest on the public debt for 1 year.

There is a disturbing factor in the increase portrayed by the table, in addition to the mere size of the figures. Since 1930 the debt has been higher each year than in the preceding year. From 16 to 19, 22, 27, 28, 33, 36, 37, 41, 44, and so on. For 10 years now, without a single exception, Government expenditures have greatly exceeded Government receipts. On the other hand, the expansion in the debt necessitated by the war emergency, from $3,000,000,000 in 1917 to $25,500,000,000 in 1919, was immediately checked when the emergency had passed. The debt was lowered each year, without exception, between 1919 and 1930.

I digress for a personal allusion. I am a member of the Finance Committee and I am receiving letters daily from all parts of the United States protesting against increasing the Federal taxes. Complaints are made that bankruptcy is being forced upon the small-business men as well as others in various industrial and business activities, and upon private individuals, by reason of the enormous taxes which are wrung from the people by the oppressive Federal legislation.

I desire to reduce the taxes, but we will increase them, and if we do not increase the taxes but continue the enormous expenditures, undoubtedly the day will come when the bonds of the Government will react to the situation, thus forced upon the country. If they should fall a few points, it can be imagined what the result would be. Banks and insurance companies might experience some concern. It is a fact that 60,000,000 Americans hold insurance policies. Millions of American people, particularly women, are investing their savings in annuities with insurance companies, and the insurance companies are taking the payments which are made and obtaining Government bonds. Suppose that the policy of spending is continued; it might eventuate in inflation. This would result in an unfortunate situation.

Mr. President, do the figures mean that the emergency of 1930 is still with us, or has there been a fundamental change in the conception of government which will require the huge expenditures as the rule rather than the exception?

I find no movement here among members of my own party, and not a suspicious movement by my brethren on the other side of the aisle in favor of the reduction of Government expenditures.

I should like to see a group of Senators and a group of Representatives work together for the purpose of demanding a reduction in Federal expenditures so that we may not be compelled before the Congress adjourns or at the next session of Congress, to increase the burdens of taxation which are now bearing so oppressively upon business, upon the big-business man and the little-business man, upon private individuals as well as upon partnerships and corporations. But I find no voices raised demanding reduction in expenditures. The demand is "Give. Give more." And in Washington today I venture that there are many representatives of States, counties, and municipalities for the purpose of obtaining appropriations from the Federal Government, or securing grants which call of course for increased taxes, and which stimulate in other sections of the country demands for excessive grants and payments out of the Federal Treasury for activities which belong to the municipalities and the counties and the State and individuals. I fear we have lost all sense of proportion.

The Federal Government no longer is a federal government. It is a national government with a big "N." It is increasing its power and encroaching upon the rights of individuals, and thus destroying the initiative of the American people.

It is a strange philosophy that government debt can be differentiated from the debt of an individual. Of course, it is to be differentiated only because it is more danger, and in the long run has potentialities for evil far in excess of those which hover over the individual in his greatest problems.

There is no magic, Mr. President, in government borrowing and spending. I have said before that this is the spendingest Nation in the world. This is the spendingest administration that our country has ever seen.

The debt must be paid, and with money. Of course, it may be deflated money. Will the Senate pardon a personal allusion? I was in Germany under the period of deflation, and I saw working people, when they got their marks at night, run as fast as possible to the nearest store to buy anything to get rid of their marks, because before morning they would lose in value perhaps several hundred percent.

Taxes now yield more than $5,000,000,000 to the Government annually. Thirty years ago less than $1,000,000,000 was collected in taxes, and this revenue was sufficient to pay the operating expenses and to reduce the public debt. Now, with the taxes increased more than five times—and under this administration—expenditures have gone up nearly 1,000 percent. The debt is 40 times as large today as it was 30 years ago. That is because the Government receipts have increased only five times, whereas expenditures are today approximately 15 times as much as they were in 1910. And we will increase the expenditures before we adjourn, and with increased public indebtedness we will have a larger deficit next year than we have this year, and so on until ultimately, if the people are not aroused, there will be national bankruptcy. It is inevitable. Bankruptcy in the sense that Germany had it; bankruptcy in the sense that Russia had it. When a mark was less than one-hundredth part of a cent, and when a ruble—and I found that was the case—had no value.

When I was in Moscow a few years ago the little children in the street were taking the paper rubles and making spitballs out of them, which they flung at each other in the streets.

Mr. President, an individual could not long operate upon such a financial basis. How long may a government?

The deficit trend must be reversed and this alarming debt reduced or repudiation and cancellation through inflation is inevitable, with all its chaos and tragedy. It has been well said:

> All of us are committed to the proposition that the worthy needy must be taken care of, but at the same time, it must not be forgotten that the destruction of savings and the starvation of production through an ever-increasing deficit and public debt means that there will be a loss of the capacity to care for the needy. The thrifty citizen, and not the Government, must produce the money for this purpose. Necessarily, the interests of those on relief are identical with the interests of the producers and those who have saved, for the Government cannot care for the needy one moment longer than it remains within the capacity of the thrifty in America to provide the Government with necessary funds.

The masses of the people in America have been misled into the belief that the debt caused by public spending is to be paid by the rich. Let us look at the facts. In 1936, 61 individuals, with incomes of a million or more, paid $107,000,000 in income tax. The Government took all but thirty million, leaving these 61 persons only 29 percent of their income. A government that spends eight billions a year spends more than $21,000,000 each day. If the Government had taken the thirty million from the rich that it did not take, it could have operated on this sum for only 1½ days. Of the persons with less than $5,000 income, aggregating five and one-half billion, only 1.2 percent was taken as income tax, or sixty-six million. Who, in the end, is going to pay this public debt—the rich, who are already deprived of 71 percent of their income, or the poor, who now pay a little more than 1 percent?

The answer is obvious, and the reason they are not protesting against the extravagant spending is that they do not realize that they are the ones who will have to pay in the end. If all the property of the rich is taken, then obviously the burden of taxation must rest, as it now does, upon the wage earner and those of limited resources.

The trouble is that the American people are not tax-conscious. In 1936 only 3,000,000 out of 40,000,000 gainfully employed persons paid any tax on income. The persons upon whom the burden will lie are at present enjoying a short immunity. It would be well if we were conscious of the plight which awaits the American people if this extravagance continues.

Where are the blessings which were to follow Government spending? The New York Sun, in its Voice of Business issue for January 7, presents an interesting comparison. I do not endorse all the statement, but it is worthy of consideration as showing the thought which prevails in some parts of our country.

The population of the United States is 130,000,000. The population of the United Kingdom, which we shall call England, is 45,000,000. Therefore, on a population basis the national income of the United States should be three times that of England. In 1929 it was four times that of England. In 1937 it was only two and two-fifths times that of England. From the low point of the depression, 1932, England's national income had increased 101 percent at the end of 1937. The national income of the United States, from the low of 1933, had increased only 49 percent at the 1937 high. National tax receipts in England have increased 11 percent since 1932. In the United States they have increased 193 percent.

England did not attempt to spend itself out of the depression. From 1932 to 1938 the British budget shows a surplus of about $400,000,000, which means that that sum was the amount of tax revenues which remained after Government spending. The United States did attempt to spend itself out of the depression. From 1932 to 1938 the United States Budget showed a deficit of $20,400,000,000, which means that that sum was the amount of money spent over the revenue which was collected by the Federal Government.

Mr. President, it is to be hoped that the American citizenry will soon ask, "Where is the prosperity?" The answer to that question will determine whether this Nation will continue as a democracy, or whether it will follow the course of New Zealand, where the answer was more spending, culminating in state socialism.

It must be remembered that the Government has no money of its own. Yesterday I received a letter with a demand for more money. In answer to my reply to the first inquiry, I stated that the Government did not have the money, that we were in debt, and spending more than we were collecting. My correspondent was amazed. He thought the Government had an abundance of money, and could meet all demands made by the people. That illustration shows that we are not tax-conscious. It shows that many of our American people do not understand the question of Federal finance, or the relation of individuals, States, and counties to the Federal Government.

Every cent the Government spends must come from the people. Taxes fundamentally depend upon the exchange of articles or services. Capital is essential for the functioning of both governments and individuals. Without it services will not be rendered, or articles or commodities produced. It seems to me that we need some lessons from Adam Smith, from Ricardo, and from the great writers upon political economy and upon a sound economic system. The experience of countries all down the pages of history, and the experience of the United States during the past few years, testify to the general principle that capital is dormant in the face of uncertainty, in the threat of overpowering debt and imminent bankruptcy. Excessive bank reserves in America today are illustrative of the unhealthy status of our national economy. A few moments ago I presented the picture of the national debt. To make the figure complete, and to illustrate its growth year by year, the table of our national receipts and expenditures will indicate the current tendency toward deficits, despite the marked increase in revenue.

I hope the Senate will pardon me for inviting attention to the figures of receipts and expenditures. Figures always give us headaches. They are not always very illuminating. In stating the figures, I shall give only the round numbers.

In 1910 the receipts were $899,000,000, or less than $1,000,000,000. The expenditures were $673,000,000; and the surplus $206,000,000.

In 1911 the receipts were a little more than $900,000,000; the expenditures only $600,000,000; and the surplus $248,000,000 plus.

In 1912 the receipts were $939,000,000; expenditures, $689,000,000; surplus, $249,000,000.

In 1913 the receipts were $990,000,000; expenditures, $724,000,000; surplus, $266,000,000.

In 1914 the receipts were $1,018,000,000; expenditures, $700,000,000; surplus, $283,000,000.

In 1915 the receipts were $900,000,000; expenditures, $700,000,000; surplus, $220,000,000.

In 1916 the receipts were $1,094,000,000; expenditures, $734,000,000; surplus, $360,000,000.

In 1917, the receipts were $1,448,000,000; expenditures, $1,977,000,000; and that year, during the war, we had a deficit of $528,000,000.

In 1918 the receipts were $3,000,000,000; expenditures, $12,000,000,000; deficit, $8,000,000,000.

In 1919 the receipts were $5,000,000,000, expenditures $18,000,000,000; closing out the expenditures of the war with a deficit of $13,000,000,000.

In 1920, the receipts were $7,000,000,000, expenditures $6,000,000,000; and we had a surplus in 1920 of $644,000,000.

In 1921 we reduced taxes down to $6,000,000,000. Expenditures were only $5,000,000,000, and we had a surplus of more than $550,000,000, which was applied to the extinguishment of the public debt.

Without taking the time to read all these figures, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that they be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table is as follows:

Receipts and expenditures of the Federal Government

[1] Estimates from the Budget.

Figures as to expenses and receipts are taken from the Report of the Treasury Department for the fiscal year 1938.

Mr. KING. I will come down to the last 2 or 3 years, to show the change. In 1931 receipts were $4,883,000,000, expenditures were $3,994,000,000, and the surplus was $889,000,000.

In 1932 the receipts were $3,000,000,000 plus, expenditures $4,000,000,000 plus, and the deficit was $245,000,000.

The deficits have been increasing until 1940, when they will be more than $3,336,000,000. Although taxes are $5,669,000,000, our appropriations are practically $9,000,000,000. We increased taxes from $1,000,000,000, as they were a few years ago, to $5,669,000,000, and expenditures from the amount which I have indicated to approximately $9,000,000,000 in 1939, and $9,000,000,000 in 1940, with deficits in 1939 of nearly $4,000,000,000, and in 1940, in my opinion, in excess of that amount.

Mr. President, one of the more unfortunate aspects of the Government embarking upon a program of this character is the fact that once inaugurated it is difficult, if not impossible, to stop. I now make the prediction, Mr. President, that we cannot stop, or will not stop, the spending program until, as I have indicated, we reach the dead line, beyond which will be impairment of national credit, if not insolvency.

It takes no argument to show that a person cannot receive something for nothing, but must work for that which he receives. The so-called emergency appropriations and the continued demand for them are unhappy evidences of the truth of this statement. The emergency appropriations for relief since 1933 are as follows:

For farm aid, we started in 1933 with an appropriation of $84,000,000 plus. The appropriation was increased right along until 1938, when it was $531,000,000.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point the entire table from which I am reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the impossibility of cutting out so-called emergency spending is indicated by the cry that went up all over the country when the Congress voted to cut the W. P. A. appropriation in January by one hundred and fifty million. It was claimed, and accurately, that the cut would bring misery and misfortune to many. Of course, those receiving gratuities from the Government will suffer if they are taken away. No one doubts that to be so; but that suffering is to be considered in view of the evil which ultimately will result if we continue to travel along the road that leads to bankruptcy and chaos. An individual who cuts his standard of living in order to pay his debts is deprived of many things; he does not enjoy many of the things to which he has been accustomed; and similar deprivation must be faced by a government if it will heed the warning of nature's law of economics.

FEDERAL BUREAUS AND PERSONNEL

One of the factors commonly ascribed to the downfall of the great Roman Empire is the vast army of officials and employees of the government which marched in and out among the people, eating out their very livelihood. The personnel of a government that becomes predominantly administrative is of necessity staggering. It has already been stated that in New Zealand more than one-third of the population was dependent upon the government under their state socialistic plan.

Senators need not be reminded of the number of administrative agencies that have been created in our country—quasi judicial, and quasi legislative. More and more, the judicial functions are being transferred from the courts to other bodies. Legislative functions are devolved upon executive officials under the pretense that Congress is incapable of legislating upon the complicated problems of today. Each agency is clothed with the rule-making power—prescribing regulations for the future—an inherently legislative function.

The fate of Rome is a poignant warning, if only we would heed, and check this destructive tendency toward administrative government. The Romans enjoyed a highly developed system of legal jurisprudence, administered by independent tribunals—the praetors and the iudexes. Slowly, and over the course of centuries, the emperor usurped the prerogatives of the praetor. The iudex was dispensed with, and, beginning with the reign of Diocletian, the judicial power was completely in the hands of the emperor, and was exercised under him by administrative officers and through administrative procedure.

The Roman Senate followed the same course. During the republic it enacted the laws. In time the Emperor submitted legislation to the senate for consideration, then "must" legislation, and then gradually and without realization came the change—the mere reading of the Emperor's suggested legislation before the senate gave it the force of law. The senate, of course, was not needed further. It was not long after the Emperor had control of all power—executive, legislative, and judicial—that the Romans lost their liberties, and not long thereafter the great Empire fell prey to invading tribes.

What of our own country? Are we immune to the inexorable laws of nature? Are we not intelligent enough to read from the pages of history the lessons that are there to guide us? The fathers, in founding this Republic, gave deep thought to the plight that had overtaken previous nations and attempted to safeguard theirs from the causes which commonly had led to disaster. Today, when the theory of government is being changed in so many lands—with consequent loss of civil rights—and when our own Government is rapidly approaching the pitfalls to guard against which our Constitution was adopted, it is regrettable that little thought is given to the causes that brought about the downfall of other nations.

What are the facts? The need for last year's Government reorganization bill lay in the fact that, according to the majority report, there were 133 distinct agencies and bureaus. It was stated that 13 different agencies of the Government were engaged in the map-making business. There are 10 major executive departments; the Civil Service Commission lists 48 independent establishments; and if every bureau and division in every department is counted, the figure is in the hundreds. The Congressional Directory lists some 185 different divisions, boards, agencies, and bureaus.

As an inevitable result of our vast bureaucracy, we have an army of persons working for the Government today.

On December 31, 1938, there were 5,351,749 persons upon the Federal pay roll. This does not include the vast numbers that depend upon the Government in the form of pensions, old-age insurance, and so forth. In other words, excluding pension receivers, nearly one-eighth of the gainfully employed were paid by the Government from taxes which it collected from those engaged in productive activities, or paid by borrowing from the people or by creating deficits which call for the issuance of bonds.

The figures, except as otherwise specified, are of December 31, 1938, and, I may say, that I obtained these figures from the Government records.

I have a table here showing the classification of the 5,351,749 on the pay rolls. Mr. President, may I insert it in the RECORD without taking the time to read it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the table will be printed in the RECORD.

The table referred to is as follows:

1. Office of the President	45
2. The 10 executive departments	754,645
3. Independent establishments	162,613
4. Legislative branch of the Government	5,145
5. Judicial branch of the Government	2,271
6. War Department, total officers	13,436
7. War Department, total enlisted men	173,127
8. Navy Department,[1] total officers	10,151
9. Navy Department,[1] total enlisted men	110,252
10. Marine Corps, total officers	1,358
11. Marine Corps, total enlisted men	17,546
12. Coast Guard,[2] total officers	1,201
13. Coast Guard,[2] total enlisted men	8,881
14. C. C. C., enrollees and officers	269,020
15. N. Y. A. (student-aid program)	368,921
16. N. Y. A. (works program)	239,627
17. Works Progress Administration[3]	3,213,510
Total	5,351,749

[1] As of Feb. 1, 1939.
[2] As of June 30, 1938.
[3] As of week ending Nov. 26, 1938.

Mr. KING. In other words, the total Federal employees may be classified as follows:

Executive, legislative, judicial, and administrative	924,719
National defense	335,952
C. C. C. and N. Y. A.	877,568
W. P. A.	3,213,510
Total	5,351,749

Mr. KING. The astounding number of persons employed in our vast bureaucracy presents a discouraging picture. They are not engaged in productive activities. They do not create national wealth or national income. They do not produce the goods that are essential to a recovery of prosperity. The number in each particular agency is inconceivable.

Mr. President, I have here as an exhibit a list of the civil employees in the 10 executive departments and in the office of the President as of December 1938, the regular force account and works program indicating, as I have said, more than 5,000,000.

I ask that this exhibit be inserted in the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the exhibit will be inserted in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

I. Civil employees in the 10 executive departments and in the office of the President, as of December 1938

[1] "Force account" are persons employed directly by the Federal Government on construction projects, such as building, naval vessel, or road construction.

Mr. KING. I have here a list of the civil employees of 48 independent establishments as of December 31, 1938. I ask to have those inserted in the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the list will be printed in the RECORD.

The list referred to is as follows:

Total pay roll for the 917,303 persons employed in the executive departments and 48 independent establishments during month of December 1938 was $141,924,984. This is the pay roll for 1 month.

Mr. KING. I have here a small list, which is very gratifying, of the employees of the legislative branch of the Federal Government, including the Library of Congress and the Botanic Gardens as of December 31, 1938, showing the number to be 5,145. The number of employees in the judicial branch of the Federal Government as of December 31, 1938, was only 2,271. The judicial branch of the Government sets an example of economy that other departments might well follow.

Mr. President, I have before me a tabulation of personnel under the heading "National Defense," including the War Department, the Navy Department, the Marine Corps, and the Coast Guard, showing a total of 335,952. I ask that that be inserted in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

National defense

(Figures on civilian and administrative personnel are included in the figures for the executive departments and do not appear below)

War Department (as of Dec. 31, 1938):
Commissioned officers	12,662
Warrant officers	774
Total officers	13,436

Total Coast Guard officers and enlisted men	10,082
Total of all officers, enlisted men, and cadets of the War and Navy Departments, the Marine Corps, and the Coast Guard	335,952

Mr. KING. I also have a tabulation showing employees under the Civilian Conservation Corps, the National Youth Administration, and the Works Progress Administration, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Civilian Conservation Corps, as of Dec. 31, 1938

Total, C. C. C. enrollees and officers		269,020

(NOTE.—The C. C. C. administrative personnel, numbering 31,847, is included with the personnel of the executive departments to which the workers are assigned and are not counted above. Also, the figure for enrollees is unusually low, since December 31, 1938, was the end of a discharge period. The total enrollees in continental United States, excluding the Indians, as of January 31, 1939, was 292,971, or an increase of more than 40,000 during the month of January.)

National Youth Administration, as of Dec. 31, 1938

Employed on the student-aid program	368,921
Employed on N. Y. A. works program	239,627
Total employed on N. Y. A. projects	608,548

The pay roll for the above N. Y. A. employees for month of December 1938 was: Student aid, $2,395,855; and works program, $4,395,682; or a total of $6,791,537.

Mr. KING. Of course, in our—I was about to say hysteria, but I will not use that expression—in our great concern over the situation in Europe we cannot tell what military demands will be made and the number of persons who will be required in the War Department, the Navy Department, the Coast Guard, in the Aviation Service, and in other branches of the Government which fall within the category of national defense. Undoubtedly there will be a large increase, which will absorb perhaps the $2,000,000,000 and more which we will appropriate for so-called national defense before the adjournment of Congress. I make the prediction without any fear that my prediction will not be verified that our appropriations for the Army and the Navy and for all other branches falling within the category of national defense will exceed $2,500,000,000 before the Congress adjourns.

The question arises, Where will we obtain the $10,000,000,000 we will appropriate, and what provisions will be made to meet the authorizations which will be $4,000,000,000 or $5,000,000,000 more? I have indicated—and I apologize for repeating—it seems to me we are on the road to national bankruptcy. We must change our policy. Spending is too great; taxes are too heavy; and when we increase taxes, as we probably will before adjournment, tax resistance will be encountered. That situation ought to be an admonition to the Congress to reduce expenditures and pursue a course that within a reasonable time will lift the burden of taxation from the people and place the Government upon the highway leading to a balanced Budget.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I am in favor of economy in government. I am very much in favor of reductions in Government expenditures, but I am not in favor of making these reductions entirely at the expense of agriculture. Congress is appropriating lavishly for every other purpose. I do not propose to see the farmer ruined in the name of an alleged program of economy which proposes to economize only at the expense of agriculture. So I intend to support the amendment providing $225,000,000 for parity payments—payments which have been promised by Congress in the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

I suppose I could spend several hours in telling you of the conditions affecting agriculture in this Nation today, but I do not believe that is necessary. It may be that a few figures by themselves will give you the picture.

Most of our national farm legislation to date has been based on attempting to regain and then retain the relationship between agriculture and industry which prevailed during the period 1909–14.

The Bureau of Agricultural Economics of the Department of Agriculture publishes monthly a bulletin entitled "The Agricultural Situation." The current issue of this bulletin gives the following information as to the farm price situation in relation to industry and labor:

Industrial wages in February of this year were 213 percent of the 1909–14 level.

Wholesale prices of all commodities were 112 percent of the 1909–14 level.

Taxes paid by farmers are 161 percent of the amount they paid in 1909–14.

Remember, Mr. President, that these figures represent how much more the farmer has to pay for things today. The wages of labor, for example, go into what he pays. So do taxes.

Now, let us look at the other side of the picture. Let us see the prices received by farmers for their products. For all grains the average farm price in March of this year was 66 percent of 1909–14 prices. Cotton and cottonseed prices were 71 percent. These are the commodities which would receive parity payments from the $225,000,000 proposed in this measure. These farmers are receiving from 66 to 71 percent of the prices they received in 1909–14. They are paying 120 percent of the prices they paid in 1909–14.

I believe that is the picture.

Last year the Congress passed the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938. Whether or not that measure represents the best that Government can do to help solve the farm problem is not the question that is before us. We passed that act. It includes a provision that whenever farm prices are below 75 percent of parity, the Federal Government will, in part at least, make up the difference through adjustment, or so-called parity payments.

Mr. President, those conditions prevail today. Under present price conditions producers of the five commodities named in the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 will fall short this year nearly $1,000,000,000 of parity income, according to my best information.

Mr. President, it seems to me we have before us a very plain and simple proposition. Congress has said to the producers of these commodities, "If you will comply with the national farm program, and the prices received are sufficiently below parity, the Government will make up part at least of the difference through adjustment payments."

Prices of these commodities are so much below parity today that it would take $1,000,000,000 to make up the entire difference. It seems to me there is no excuse for the Senate rejecting an appropriation of less than one-fourth that difference—the $225,000,000 provided in the committee amendment. Congress ought to live up to the contract at least to that extent.

So much for the law and the facts in the case. Under the law and the facts Congress owes it to cooperating farmers to make provision for adjustment or parity payments.

But there also is the human element. Now, if ever, the farmers of my part of the country need Government assistance if they are to survive. The plight of the small farmer is especially pitiful. This appropriation will help him to some extent, though not as much as I should like; but at least he will get that much. So I hope to see this bill receive the approval of the Senate.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Clark, Idaho	Hayden	Minton

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHAVEZ in the chair). Eighty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee, beginning on page 50, line 24.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, line 3, before the word "of", to strike out "$18,746,979" and insert "$20,972,285", and in line 4, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$59,528" and insert "$62,328", so as to read:

Total, Forest Service, $20,972,285, of which amount not to exceed $62,328 shall be available for the purchase of motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles necessary in the conduct of field work outside the District of Columbia, and, in addition thereto, there is authorized for expenditure from funds provided for carrying out the provisions of the Federal Highway Act of November 9, 1921 (23 U. S. C. 21, 23), not to exceed $9,755 for the purchase of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles for use by the Forest Service in the construction and maintenance of national-forest roads.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Bureau of Agricultural Chemistry and Engineering, salaries and expenses", on page 52, line 24, after the word "analysis", to strike out "$407,500" and insert "$411,500", and in line 25, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$15,000" and insert "$19,000", so as to read:

Agricultural chemical investigations: For conducting the investigations contemplated by the act of May 15, 1862 (5 U. S. C. 511, 512), relating to the application of chemistry to agriculture; for the biological, chemical, physical, microscopical, and technological investigation of foods, feeds, drugs, plant and animal products, and substances used in the manufacture thereof; for investigations of the physiological effects and for the pharmacological testing of such products and of insecticides; for the investigation and development of methods for the manufacture of sugars, sugar sirups, and starches and the utilization of new agricultural materials for such purposes; for the technological investigation of the utilization of fruits and vegetables and for frozen pack investigations; for the investigation of chemicals for the control of noxious weeds and plants; and to cooperate with associations and scientific societies in the development of methods of analysis, $411,500, of which amount not to exceed $19,000 shall be available for the construction and equipment of an addition to the United States Citrus Products Laboratory, Winter Haven, Fla.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, line 4, after the word "and", to insert "drainage and"; and line 18, after the word "reports", to strike out "$339,469" and insert "$359,469", so as to read:

Agricultural engineering investigations: For investigations, experiments, and demonstrations involving the application of engineering principles to agriculture for the investigation, development, experimental demonstration, and application of methods for the prevention and control of dust explosions and fires during the harvesting, handling, milling, processing, fumigating, and storing of agricultural products, and of other dust explosions and resulting fires not otherwise provided for, including fires in grain mills and elevators, cotton gins, cotton-oil mills, and other structures; the heating, charring, and ignition of agricultural products; fires on farms and in rural communities and other explosions and fires in connection with farm and agricultural operations; for investigating and reporting upon the different kinds of farm power and appliances; upon farm domestic water supply and drainage and sewage disposal; upon the design and construction of farm buildings and their appurtenances and of buildings for processing and storing farm products; upon farm power and mechanical farm equipment and rural electrification; upon the engineering problems relating to the processing, transportation, and storage of perishable and other agricultural products; and upon the engineering problems involved in adapting physical characteristics of farm land to the use of modern farm machinery; for investigations of cotton ginning under the act approved April 19, 1930 (7 U. S. Co. 424, 425); for giving expert advice and assistance in agricultural and chemical engineering; for collating, reporting, and illustrating the results of investigations and preparing, publishing, and distributing bulletins, plans, and reports, $359,469.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, line 2, after "(5 U. S. C. 556b)", to strike out "$79,400" and insert "$100,000", so as to read:

Naval-stores investigations: For the investigation of naval stores (turpentine and rosin) and their components; the investigation and experimental demonstration of improved equipment, methods, or processes of preparing naval stores; the weighing, storing, handling, transportation, and utilization of naval stores; and for the assembling and compilation of data on production, distribution, and consumption of turpentine and rosin, pursuant to the act of August 15, 1935 (5 U. S. C. 556b), $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, line 6, after the word "use", to strike out "$200,000" and insert "$263,800", so as to read:

Fertilizer investigations: For investigations within the United States of fertilizers, fertilizer ingredients, including phosphoric acid and potash, and other soil amendments and their suitability for agricultural use, $263,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, line 8, before the word "of", to strike out "$1,330,369" and insert "$1,438,769"; and in line 9, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$875,000" and insert "$922,826", so as to read:

Total, salaries and expenses, Bureau of Agricultural Chemistry and Engineering, $1,438,769, of which amount not to exceed $922,826 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia, and not to exceed $3,725 shall be available for the purchase of motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles necessary in the conduct of field work outside the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Bureau of Entomology and Plant Quarantine, salaries and expenses", on page 56, line 20, after the word "nuts", to strike out "$378,600" and insert "$428,600", so as to read:

Fruit insects: For insects affecting fruits, grapes, and nuts, $428,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 56, after line 22, to strike out:

Sweetpotato weevil: For the determination of such methods of control for sweetpotato weevils as may be necessary, $75,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used to pay the cost or value of farm animals, farm crops, or other property injured or destroyed.

And in lieu thereof to insert the following:

Sweetpotato weevil control: For the determination and application of such methods of control for sweetpotato weevils as, in the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture, may be necessary, $75,000: Provided, That, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the control of sweetpotato weevil in any State until such State has provided cooperation necessary to accomplish this purpose: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used to pay the cost or value of farm animals, farm crops, or other property injured or destroyed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, after line 12, to insert:

Mexican fruitfly control: For the control and prevention of spread of the Mexican fruitfly, including necessary surveys and control operations in Mexico in cooperation with the Mexican Government or local Mexican authorities, $160,460.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, after line 16, to insert:

Citrus canker eradition: For determining and applying such methods of eradication or control of the disease of citrus trees known as "citrus canker" as in the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture may be necessary, including cooperation with such authorities of the States concerned, organizations of growers, or individuals, as he may deem necessary to accomplish such purposes, $13,485: Provided, That no part of the money herein appropriated shall be used to pay the cost or value of trees or other property injured or destroyed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 58, after line 2, to insert:

Gypsy and brown-tail moth control: For the control and prevention of spread of the gypsy and brown-tail moths, $375,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 58, after line 5, to insert:

Dutch elm disease eradication: For determining and applying methods of eradication, control, and prevention of spread of the disease of elm trees known as "Dutch elm disease" and of a virus disease of elm trees prevalent in the Ohio Valley, $500,000: Provided, That, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, no expenditures from this appropriation shall be made for these purposes until a sum or sums at least equal to such expenditures shall have been appropriated, subscribed, or contributed by State, county, or local authorities, or by individuals, or organizations concerned: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used to pay the cost or value of trees or other property injured or destroyed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, line 19, after the word "shrubs", to strike out "$200,000" and insert "$253,100", so as to read:

Forest insects: For insects affecting forests and forest products, under section 4 of the act approved May 22, 1928 (16 U. S. C. 581c), entitled "An act to insure adequate supplies of timber and other forest products for the people of the United States, to promote the full use for timber growing and other purposes of forest lands in the United States, including farm wood lots and those abandoned areas not suitable for agricultural production, and to secure the correlation and the most economical conduct of forest research in the Department of Agriculture, through research in reforestation, timber growing, protection, utilization, forest economics and related subjects," and for insects affecting ornamental trees and shrubs, $253,100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 61, line 16, after the word "authorities", to strike out "$446,800" and insert "$1,366,800", so as to read:

Pink bollworm control: For the control and prevention of spread of the pink bollworm, including the establishment of such cotton-free areas as may be necessary to stamp out any infestation, and for necessary surveys and control operations in Mexico in cooperation with the Mexican Government or local Mexican authorities, $1,366,800.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I have the attention of the chairman of the subcommittee? The item in line 16, page 61, seems to indicate that the Senate committee has multiplied the House figure about three times. Will the Senator make an explanation of that rather amazing increase?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, recently there has been discovered in the Rio Grande Valley in Texas a considerable area infested by the new insect pest known as the pink bollworm. The insect at present is confined to a relatively small area. The authorities in charge of the Bureau of Entomology and Plant Quarantine believe that if they are allowed the amount of money carried in the pending bill, the pest can be entirely eradicated. Negotiations are in progress with the Mexican Government looking to the establishment of a 50-mile zone on each side of the river which would prevent the insect coming back into our country.

The Senator from Michigan doubtless is familiar with the ravages of what is known as the boll weevil, which took an enormous economic toll of the South. It has been said that perhaps that would have disposed of the cotton surplus; but the unfortunate part of the matter is that the weevil did not attack the cotton plant equally over the entire Cotton Belt. It would come into a certain area, destroy all of the crop there, and thereby impoverish the farmers in the area where the insect had come, but would not affect the cotton being grown in other areas.

Dr. Strong, the head of the Bureau of Entomology and Plant Quarantine, stated that in his opinion the $920,000 increase would enable the Department to eradicate this pest. There was a Budget estimate for half of this amount, $460,000; so the report of the committee exceeds the Budget estimate for this item by only that amount, $460,000.

It is good economy for the Government to attack these insects comprehensively when they are in a very small area. For example, when the Japanese beetle first was found in this country, it covered only a little plot of land in New Jersey, a plot less than 7 acres in extent. The Government could have purchased that land, it could have been burned over and had everything on it destroyed for about one-twentieth of the amount we have appropriated from year to year in undertaking to combat the Japanese beetle all over the country, and in addition there would have been saved the huge sums which have been lost by the fruit people and by the truck producers of the country due to the ravages of the insect.

The committee decided that it would be better to attempt to eliminate the pink bollworm all at one time, as the experts whom we pay to advise us on these matters suggested we do, rather than to let it spread all over the entire belt, and to have the Government compelled to appropriate millions of dollars to carry on a more far-flung campaign over a long number of years in an effort to eliminate this pest, which is just as disastrous or more injurious than was the Mexican boll weevil.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee on page 61, line 16.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Conservation and use of agricultural land resources, Department of Agriculture", on page 94, line 21, after the numerals "1938", to strike out the comma and "and not to exceed $3,200,000 shall be available under the provisions of section 202 (a) to 202 (c), inclusive, of said act, including research on food products of farm commodities," so as to read:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of sections 7 to 17, inclusive, of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, approved February 29, 1936 (16 U. S. C. 590g–590q), and the provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 (52 Stat. 31–70) (except the making of payments pursuant to sections 303 and 381 and the provisions of titles IV and V), including the employment of persons and means in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; rent in the District of Columbia; not to exceed $50,000 for the preparation and display of exhibits, including such displays at State, interstate, and international fairs within the United States; purchase of lawbooks, books of reference, periodicals, and newspapers, $429,560,000, together with not to exceed $70,000,000 of the unobligated balance of the appropriation made under this head by the Department of Agriculture Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1938, in all, not to exceed $499,560,000, to remain available until June 30, 1941, for compliances under said Act of February 29, 1936, as amended, pursuant to the provisions of the 1939 programs carried out during the period October 1, 1938, to December 31, 1939, inclusive: Provided, That no part of such amount shall be available for carrying out the provisions of section 202 (f) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 96, after line 12, to insert:

PARITY PAYMENTS

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to make parity payments to producers of wheat, cotton, corn (in the commercial corn-producing area), rice, and tobacco pursuant to the provisions of section 303 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, $225,000,000: Provided, however, That in expending the appropriation in this paragraph the rate of payment with respect to any commodity shall not exceed the amount by which the average farm price of the commodity is less than 75 percent of the parity price: Provided further, That such payments with respect to any such commodity shall be made with respect to a farm only in the event that the acreage planted to the commodity for harvest on the farm in 1940 is not in excess of the farm acreage allotment established for the commodity under the agricultural conservation program.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, in the belief that a few plain words and some fundamental logic might conceivably be of benefit at this time, I wish to discuss briefly, during this deliberation over America's agricultural problem and the debate concerning what course should be followed by the Congress, some events which have occurred behind the scenes in recent weeks and which have had a profound effect in the shaping of the proposed legislation.

In the first place, it has been apparent for at least the last 20 years that until some basis of prosperity is restored to agriculture and to the purchasing power of the American farmer there can be no prosperity for industry or commerce. In other words, the welfare of our entire Nation rests upon and is firmly linked with the welfare of agriculture. Note that I do not say, nor would I ever contend, that agriculture should be given preferential treatment. My argument is only that one major phase of our national economy cannot be neglected, or the entire economic structure will be weakened.

A few nights ago, in a radio address during which I discussd this problem with three of my distinguished colleagues, I drew a word picture which I think it is pertinent to repeat at this time.

What a lovely scene is unfolded before our eyes when we think of golden fields of wheat waving restlessly under a summer sun, and of lowing herds of dairy cattle grazing peacefully in the North Central and New England States, and of tassel-topped stalks of corn towering above the prairie land of my own Illinois and of other parts of the Middle West, and of seemingly endless rows of cotton in the South.

My comment was that this was a pleasant, pastoral scene to contemplate in an abstract sort of way. But I pointed out that there was a discordant note in this lovely picture. Behind those scenes of bounteous abundance and pastoral contentment and apparently inexhaustible fertility lies something ominous and disturbing.

The ugly, blunt economic fact is that the wheat which waves so beautifully in the summer sun is translated into an unpleasant reality of overabundance and low prices, and the farmer who grows it has difficulty in maintaining a balanced economy. The milk and cheese and butter which are produced from herds of dairy cattle flow into the market in such tremendous quantities that today we have an unmarketable surplus, and the dairy farmer is faced with actual want. Likewise there is tragedy in the overproduction of cotton, and economic danger in the high yields of corn.

Until some genius, statesman, or economist rectifies the flaw in our system of distribution there will ever be a necessity for agricultural legislation which controls the chronic surpluses of our basic commodities. And until domestic consumption increases and export sales are steadied so that the farmer may receive a fair return, there will be a necessity for remedial legislation which will enable him to keep on farming.

We are dealing with the world as it is and not the world as we would like to have it. Therefore, we must face facts as they are; and the facts are that the men who produce not only our corn and cotton and wheat and rice and tobacco, but the farmers who produce our dairy products, our fruits, and vegetables, and the thousand and one other component parts of American agriculture, are direly in need of financial aid at the present time to tide them over during this period of unsettled world and domestic conditions.

Those of us who come from States and from districts largely agricultural are only too well aware of conditions that now exist on the farm. It is not my purpose to be a prophet of gloom. I would be the last to attempt to declare that the problems of the American farmer are not possible of solution. It is my firm conviction that under the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938—strengthened as it was by the recent Supreme Court decision—we have made greater strides toward an eventual solution of the farm problem than has been made heretofore in the history of our Nation.

Nevertheless, a vast and complicated problem still lies before us, and it is to that we must turn our immediate attention. The Supreme Court recently dispelled the cloud of fear under which those interested in the farm problem have labored during the past decade, yet it is obvious that emergency farm legislation will be necessary for some years to come.

I call the attention of the Senate to this particular point that during the last 20 years farm legislation has been before Congress in one form or another. Senators will recall that farm legislation advocated by both Democrats and Republicans in a nonpartisan way in years gone by upon three different occasions met the fate of a Presidential veto, and that during the early part of the present administration we found farm legislation, created and passed under the present administration, crippled temporarily at least by the Supreme Court decision in the A. A. A. case, the Supreme Court holding in that case that agriculture was a local rather than a national problem. So during all these years the farmer has been operating under a cloud of fear, a little here and a little there, wondering just what the executive or the judicial branch of the Government might do to this piece of legislation or that in the event we should pass it. I say that today we are on firmer ground from the standpoint of legislation than we have ever been before because of the recent Supreme Court decision, realizing that this decision will be helpful to the farmer in the future from the standpoint of legislation, yet it is not a panacea for the evils which exist, and emergency legislation is necessary now and will be necessary for a good many years to come.

Having had some experience as a member of the Agricultural Committee of the House of Representatives I was naturally interested in the bill when it was before the House. I saw many items stricken from the bill, because there was no unified program for all agriculture.

With that thought in mind I took somewhat the initiative in the Senate by calling a group of Senators from the Western and Midwestern States into conference to discuss the various aspects of the farm problem, not from the standpoint of any particular section or any particular commodity, but from the standpoint of a unified broad-scale program for all agriculture throughout America. After conferences with a number of distinguished Senators from the North and the West, representing dairying, wheat, and corn districts, it was the consensus of that group that some sort of farm parity and export subsidy payments must be appropriated during this session of Congress to aid the farmer in his problems.

It further was the opinion of the group that unless some bill was introduced which placed all phases of agriculture under a single protective measure, affecting all agricultural commodities and all sections of the Nation alike, that the chances for passage of any farm legislation at this session of the Congress would be slim indeed.

A subcommittee was appointed by the group, consisting of myself, as chairman, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] as members, to meet with a similar group of Senators from the cotton South in an attempt to agree upon some sort of unified legislation. The primary objective of both groups was to bring an understanding of agricultural needs to all Members of the Senate and to agricultural leaders in the House so that the program would not be jeopardized by lack of information or sectional prejudice.

This series of conferences resulted in two proposals being placed before the agricultural subcommittee of the Senate Appropriations Committee. The sum of $250,000,000 was established for farm parity payments, while a figure of $150,000,000 was tentatively set for addition to the customs receipts for export subsidy and domestic aid to farmers in a multitude of occupations.

Among both groups there were those who thought that the figures thus tentatively set were perhaps too great. It was agreed, however, to throw both proposals before the agricultural subcommittee and to await the holding of hearings and the giving of testimony by experts in agricultural economics before any commitments were made as to what sums might merit support. Senators are all aware of what happened, as the bills are now before us for debate. The final figure for farm parity came out as $225,000,000, while the subcommittee reported out $113,000,000 for financial aid to section 32 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938.

I now wish to digress for a moment and go back to something that transpired in the Senate a few days ago while I was absent, when the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] made some remarks upon the floor of the Senate which I deem it advisable just briefly to answer, because in these remarks it seems to me there is some intimation that the good faith on the part of those who are involved in this matter is somewhat questioned. I asked the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] to be present today in the Senate Chamber, but I understand he is out of the city and cannot be on the floor.

In his remarks on May 2, page 5026 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, among other things—and I would not discuss the entire speech and attempt to analyze it if it were not for a remark or two that the Senator made in connection with the farm program—the Senator from Wisconsin said:

> It is very easy for us to forget that the $60,000,000,000 American farm investment totters on the brink of financial annihilation. In Washington it is perilously simple for us to ignore the gaunt tanned man who swaps his toil in a losing barter, in which his rightful wage is lost in the shifting sands of commodity price levels.
> In Washington it is too easy and too politic for us to become so engrossed in conciliating various pressure groups that we lose sight of the great basic industry of the country.

The distinguished Senator further said:

> In Washington it is sometimes too expedient to play the farm interest "against the middle"; to stall one bill while another is introduced; to consider one isolated, completely unintegrated part of a program, independent from a coordinated program; and to stir the cauldron of farm cross-interest for political purposes rather than to settle the problem.

If the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] has a solution of the farm problem he should present that solution to the United States Senate. I do not know of any bill that has been introduced by him since he has been in the Senate which seeks to solve the greatest problem of all before the United States Senate or in the House at the present time.

So far as stirring the cauldron for political purposes, if anyone will read the Senator's speech and not reach the conclusion that the Senator from Wisconsin was making a political speech for that very purpose, then he would reach a different conclusion from that reached by the senior Senator from Illinois.

The Senator from Wisconsin further said in his speech:

> Several months ago, because every sector of our farm group had individual bills introduced, I suggested the need of a coordinated bill wherein every farm section would be represented. Nothing came of that suggestion.

If the Senator wanted to carry out the suggestion that he made to someone, prudence dictated that he introduce a bill to that effect. He is a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. Hearings could have been held upon this all-unified, so-called coordinated bill that he told someone, somewhere, at some time, something about.

The Senator further said:

> Nothing came of that suggestion, so on the 28th of March I introduced an amendment to House bill 5269, calling for an appropriation of $100,000,000, $50,000,000 of which was to be used under section 32 of the A. A. A. Act to buy surplus butter.

He says, after his bill was introduced:

> A conference was called, and some of the dairy and wheat farmers met in the office of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS]. In view of the fact that there has been some talk among Senators as to what went on, I am glad to state that the purpose of the meeting apparently was to see if a coordinated bill could not be worked out. As a result—

I want to assure the Senator his bill had nothing to do with the calling of the conference.

The Senator further says:

> The Senator from Illinois was appointed chairman of a subcommittee, and he appointed the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CLARK] as members of the subcommittee.

In this he confused Senator CLARK of Idaho with Senator CLARK of Missouri.

He further states in the speech that he made in May:

> I want to say that when meetings were held by it, apparently the subcommittee was to report back to the general committee. We have had no report so far as I know.

And he also stated in that speech that no Republican was appointed upon this particular committee.

Mr. President, when the committee was appointed, and when those from the Wheat, the Dairy, and the Corn Belts were called to the office of the senior Senator from Illinois, there was no thought of Democratic or Republican politics in connection with the unified, so-called broad program for all agriculture. There was only one thought in the mind of every man who was there, whether he was a Democrat, Progressive, or Republican, and that was, What can we do best at this particular time to aid the desperate situation in which agriculture finds itself at this very hour?

So far as reporting back to the Members who were present originally, and who represented the States in the North and the West, I think the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] is probably the only one who will say that we did not have at least two subsequent meetings, at which what was done by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], and myself was reported in detail to the other Members, and they were asked for instructions as to what we should do further in connection with attempting to agree with the Senators from the South who represented the great Cotton Belt.

In conclusion upon that point, I will say that the Senator was wholly unfair in making the insinuation which he did that he was not being let in on the program. He was invited to every meeting along with all other Senators. He is the only one who has complained. In selecting the committee of three, I conferred with Senators of long experience and finally

I asked the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] to be one of the members, because I thought he knew something about the dairy situation in his section of the country. I know that he has been in the Senate for a long time. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], and myself, without any thought of partisan politics whatsoever, attempted to work out a program which would satisfy the great majority of the Members of the Senate, in order that a bill having the full support of the great majority of the Members of the United States Senate might go back to the House of Representatives.

Leaving that question for a moment, I wish to discuss briefly for the RECORD what I understand the parity feature payment really does for the basic commodities which it affects. It will be recalled that last year a similar bill was passed by the Congress of the United States providing that the sum of $212,000,000 should be used as parity payments. That bill provided that one-half the sum was to be distributed under section 303 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and one-half under section 501 of the Price Adjustment Act of 1938. It was the unanimous thought of those meeting in the group that whatever appropriation was made at this particular time for parity payments, the distribution following the appropriation should be made upon the same basis as it was made last year.

At this point I should like to direct the attention of the Members of the Senate to what happened in the House of Representatives when a similar bill was being considered a few weeks ago. The very same language of the present act was introduced as an amendment to the present bill by a distinguished Member of the House, Mr. CANNON of Missouri. On a point of order it was held to be legislation upon an appropriation bill, and Mr. CANNON of Missouri conceded the point of order. Following that, he then offered the same amendment which has been offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] and his committee, and no point of order was made against it, although the amendment was defeated by the House on a yea-and-nay vote.

I merely mention that fact for the reason that it makes a difference, on the question of payments, as to whether distribution is made strictly under section 303 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act or whether one-half the amount be distributed under section 303 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act and one-half under section 501 of the Price Adjustment Act of 1938. I wish to put these figures into the RECORD so that if any people in the Corn Belt district of Illinois read my statement they will understand why it was impossible to use the same language in this bill as was used last year. However, the payments are practically the same, to all intents and purposes. For example, I have taken $212,000,000, which was appropriated last year, and have had the Agricultural Department tell me what amount of the $212,000,000 went in parity payments to producers of the five basic commodities.

Last year the actual amount received by corn producers in the commercial corn-producing area was $61,613,000. Cotton producers received $84,578,000; wheat producers received $64,113,000; rice producers $1,696,000; and tobacco producers nothing, because tobacco was bringing very nearly parity prices.

If the present formula should become law, in the distribution of the $212,000,000—and I use $212,000,000 merely because it is elemental and the change can be easily understood—under the parity payments, wheat would suffer more than any other commodity. I think the wheat farmer is entitled to know just how the amount would be broken down by the Agricultural Department. That is the reason why I am making this explanation at this particular time. Corn producers would receive $64,143,000, which is about $3,000,000 more than they received last year. Cotton producers would receive $88,000,000, which is about three and a half million dollars more than they received last year. Wheat producers would receive $57,447,000, which is about $6,500,000 less than the wheat producers received last year. Rice producers would receive $2,307,000, making a total of $212,000,000.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GURNEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. FRAZIER. As I understood the figures, wheat producers would receive a little less than they received last year.

Mr. LUCAS. Wheat producers would receive a little less than they received last year, under the break-down of the Agricultural Department, when we consider the $212,000,000. Perhaps they will not receive less, but figuring it on the basis of $212,000,000, which we had last year, they would receive less.

Mr. FRAZIER. The trouble last year was that the loan value was practically the same as the price of wheat last fall. With the parity payments and the loan value, wheat producers are still far below their so-called parity price. The parity price is generally conceded to be below the cost of production. The trouble is that the appropriation is altogether too small. If the farmer is to make a profit or receive any income, he must receive at least the parity price, or in excess of the parity price. If he does not make a profit, he will go broke. So it seems to me that the appropriation should be higher than it is by a considerable amount.

Mr. LUCAS. I appreciate the force of the remarks of the distinguished Senator from North Dakota. However, the question of cost was considered in the program, and while it is absolutely desirable from the standpoint of every basic commodity that ultimately we reach a parity payment for all commodities, I should like to direct the attention of the Senator from North Dakota to the fact that the wheat farmer is in a very little different position from that of other farmers so far as what he is receiving at the present time is concerned, as compared with the parity price. In my section there are wheat farmers as well as corn farmers. However, corn is selling today at 44 cents a bushel, which is 55 percent of parity. Cotton is selling at 8.3 cents per pound, which is 53 percent of parity. Wheat is selling at 56.7 cents a bushel, which is 51 percent of parity. Rice is selling at 63 cents a bushel, which is 62 percent of parity.

There is not a great discrepancy between those four basic commodities, and especially between wheat and corn and cotton. As of March 1939 there is only a 4-percent difference between the market prices and the parity prices of those products.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. I think, though, the Senator will agree that corn received considerably better consideration than did wheat or even cotton in regard to loans on those commodities last year.

Mr. LUCAS. I would not agree to that, and I will tell the Senator why. True it is, we got 56 cents a bushel for corn this year; but the great trouble with so many Senators, as with many other persons, is they forget that 85 percent of the corn raised in the corn commercial-producing area in this country is fed to cattle and hogs. From the one and a half billion bushels raised in the corn commercial-producing area there is just a little over 200,000,000 bushels of corn under seal at the present time. Of course, for this corn in the crib the owner obtained 56 cents per bushel plus the adjustment price.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. How much more is to be paid this year in the form of subsidies than was paid under the bill of last year?

Mr. LUCAS. In last year's bill we paid in parity payments $212,000,000. This year we have increased the amount to $225,000,000, and in a moment or two I am going to submit figures showing about what that will produce in the way of parity payments for the different commodities.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I mean all payments, including the conservation payments—the total subsidies.

Mr. LUCAS. Of course, last year, I will say to the Senator from Minnesota, we appropriated $500,000,000 for soil-conservation payments. It is my understanding that we only expended approximately $300,000,000 of that $500,000,000 on soil-conservation payments. In other words, while we appropriated $500,000,000, the farmers only obtained some $300,000,000 from the Department. Thereby we saved $200,000,000 under the soil-conservation program of last year. That is one of the reasons why the Senator from Illinois is willing to do what he is doing in connection with the appropriations covered by the pending bill. I realize that is an increase for the farmer, but I also realize that, while we appropriated half a billion dollars last year, we actually paid out to the farmer only $300,000,000, thereby saving $200,000,000.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Are the $200,000,000 in the Treasury?

Mr. LUCAS. No. As I understand it, that amount lapses.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. What was the total expenditure, then, for subsidies—$300,000,000 and $212,000,000, or $512,000,000 in all? Was that it?

Mr. LUCAS. I think that is practically all. Insofar as the parity payments feature is concerned, and insofar as the payments made to cooperating farmers under the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, we paid out just $512,000,000 last year. How much these other items that we are discussing here today total on recapitulation of the whole, I cannot tell the Senator.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Does the Senator mean the total this year?

Mr. LUCAS. No; I mean last year.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Do the two items make the total of $512,000,000? Was there any other subsidy paid last year?

Mr. LUCAS. I cannot tell the Senator, but I do not think so.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. We paid in subsidies last year 34 percent more than we paid in 1937, according to the records I have, and yet the farmers had 11 percent less income than they had in 1937 on the basis of present prices and benefits and conservation payments. Can the committee give us an estimate as to what the total income of the farmer will be this year, based on present prices?

Mr. LUCAS. No; I have no figures at hand, I will say to the Senator, which would enable me to answer that question?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I believe the record shows that in 1937 the farmers of the United States got $3,000,000,000 less than they were entitled to under the theory of benefit and parity payments.

Mr. LUCAS. I cannot agree with the Senator as to that; I do not think it was $3,000,000,000; it may be so; but we are going just a little far afield of the question I had in mind, and I would not care to be drawn into a debate of that kind.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I am asking the question for the purpose of estimating, if we can, what will be the condition of the farmer at the end of this crop year when he shall have marketed his crops.

Mr. LUCAS. Of course the Senator's guess is, perhaps, just as good as mine, but I will say to the Senator from Minnesota that unless we enact this proposed legislation the condition of the farmer will be much worse in the final analysis. Whether or not there ought to be more legislation for him is something that I am not going to discuss here today. I know that there are other farm bills pending at the present time; certain phases of those bills have some merit, indeed, much merit; but that is a separate proposition that should come up later. However, so far as the Senator from Illinois is concerned, I want to see the Triple A have a fair chance before it is repealed or before some other farm act takes its place. Those who advocate today the repeal of the Triple A—and some are doing it now in speeches throughout the country—are going to meet a serious challenge at the hands of some of the best agricultural minds of the country unless they can give them a constructive program as a substitute for the Triple A and not merely words or platitudes for selfish and political reasons. The Triple A has only been on the statute books since February a year ago, and last year in my State only 50 percent of the farmers cooperated. I am happy to say to the Senate and especially to the Senator from Minnesota, who has brought up this discussion, that in Illinois this year at least 85 percent or perhaps 90 percent of the farmers are cooperating with the Triple A. On May 1 approximately 170,000 farmers in my State had signed up with the program, indicating that at least they have given the Triple A very close and serious consideration. I undertake to say that the farm program is not so unpopular as many people ask us to believe it to be. It is not perfect, by any means; but it is a good start.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. LUCAS. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I was not criticizing the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. I know the Senator was not.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I asked the questions for information, because I am anxious to know if we can have some hope that the farmer will be better off at the end of this year than he has been at the end of every other year since 1929?

Mr. LUCAS. Of course, legislation alone is not going to tell the story for the farmer. Many things can happen and many things have happened in the past because, in my opinion, of the lack of proper legislation.

What is the cause of the cotton situation today? Back in 1934 the Supreme Court, in my humble opinion, tortured the Constitution in order to invalidate the first farm program under this administration. For 2 years thereafter we had no control. I am one of those who believe we must control chronic surpluses of the basic commodities of this country until some genius, some statesman, some economist comes along and finds a method of distribution. It irks me to say that we ought to control the acreage of corn and wheat and cotton when I see so many people suffering in this country, but, as a farm owner in Illinois and one who has been vitally interested in this program since I was a boy, I saw in 1932 ruin and misery and suffering and sorrow brought to thousands upon thousands of farmers in my State because of chronic surpluses. The Triple A, in my opinion, was the answer, and just as it was doing constructive work for the farmers of America and constructive work for society as a whole it was invalidated by the Supreme Court, and then for 2 years we had just the soil-conservation program, with no control. That is when the cotton South produced so many bales of cotton; that is when 80,000,000 acres were planted to wheat in Kansas, as well as in my own State and other States, and drove wheat down to the price where it then was. I am a firm believer in proper control. I am honest in my adherence to that philosophy. I may be wrong, but no one yet, either in the Senate or House, has convinced me that the program of control is wrong.

Mr. President, I move on just a little further in the discussion. I want to put into the RECORD another set of figures dealing with the same $212,000,000. This set of figures is based on an estimate of production and prices that may or may not happen. In other words, using the 1938 production for cotton, corn, rice, and tobacco and the 1938 season average prices through July 31, 1939, for rice and tobacco, a wheat production of 750,000,000 bushels, cotton priced at 8 cents a pound, a wheat price of 60 cents per bushel, a corn price of 40 cents per bushel, and taking $225,000,000 in this example as an illustration of what might happen in the way of more or less income from such an amount in the event the price of any of these commodities rose and fell, I am taking cotton at a price that will bring $86,818,000; taking corn at a price that will bring $75,000,000; wheat, $58,000,000; rice, $2,000,000, and tobacco, $1,501,000.

Assuming for the sake of argument that corn selling at 40 cents a bushel produces $75,834,000 under the parity payment feature, if corn is selling at 50 cents a bushel instead of getting $75,834,000 the corn farmer will get only $59,206,000, and the difference between $75,834,000 and $59,206,000 will be distributed throughout the other basic commodities, and they will advance. Cotton will go from $86,000,000 to $96,000,000; wheat, from $58,000,000 to $65,000,000; rice, from $2,194,000 to $2,438,000, and tobacco from $1,500,000 to $1,600,000.

In the event corn is selling for 55 cents a bushel, corn will further take a decrease on parity payments of $10,000,000, which will give corn $49,000,000 under the program, and give cotton $102,000,000; wheat, $69,000,000; rice, $2,500,000, and tobacco, $1,700,000. Any other commodity that either falls or rises in price will be reflected in the same manner as the example I have given of corn; and in the event corn reaches 60 cents a bushel the corn farmer and the corn commercial producing area will not get a single dime of the $225,000,000, because the farmer will be getting 75 percent of the parity price, and the other commodities which have not reached 75 percent will get the benefit of the amount corn did not get because of its market price. If all commodities should reach 75 percent of parity the program would cost the Government nothing.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to place these two tables i nthe RECORD as a part of my remarks, in order that I may give the Senate the benefit of them.

There being no objection, the tables were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Distribution of $212,000,000 based on 1938 production and prices

	Actual distribution under the Price Adjustment Act of 1938	Distribution that would have been made under Price Adjustment Act of 1938 if that act had provided for using sec. 303 alone instead of secs. 104 and 303
Corn, commercial	$61,613,000	$64,143,000
Cotton	84,578,000	88,040,000
Wheat	64,113,000	57,447,000
Rice	1,696,000	2,370,000
Total	212,000,000	212,000,000

Distribution of $225,000,000 among basic commodities under sec. 303

[Based on assumed production and prices as described below]

Commodity	A	B	C
Cotton	$86,818,000	$96,494,000	$102,190,000
Corn, commercial	75,834,000	59,206,000	49,421,000
Wheat	58,653,000	65,192,000	69,039,000
Rice	2,194,000	2,438,000	2,581,000
Tobacco	1,501,000	1,670,000	1,769,000
Total	225,000,000	225,000,000	225,000,000

A: Using 1938 production for cotton, corn, rice, and tobacco and 1938 season average prices through Jan. 31, 1939, for rice and tobacco; wheat production 750,000,000 bushels; cotton price 8 cents per pound; wheat price 60 cents per bushel; corn price 40 cents per bushel.

B: Same as A except corn price at 50 cents per bushel.

C: Same as A except corn price at 55 cents per bushel.

NOTE.—With 75 percent of parity as a maximum limitation and tobacco prices as high as in 1938, the funds shown above for tobacco would be redistributed to the other commodity, or commodities, for which 1939 prices are the lowest in relation to parity.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I now desire to discuss, just briefly, the $113,000,000 which I hope will be appropriated by the Senate, which under the language of the pending bill is to be distributed under the provisions of section 32 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

There is a very good reason for this additional appropriation. In fact, there are a number of reasons; but No. 1 is that the customs receipts coming in under section 32, under the 30-percent clause, are the lowest that they have been for many, many years. I am advised that all we shall get from customs receipts to use under section 32 this year is around $90,000,000, and if this bill passes and we appropriate another $113,000,000 the Agricultural Department will have a total of $203,000,000 to allocate under section 32.

I have here a rough guess as to how that amount will be broken down. This is based upon the testimony which was given before the committee, as well as some statements which were made before the committee consisting of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], and myself. There is nothing binding about this estimate, but I thought the Senate and the country should know in close proximity what each particular commodity probably would get.

Under section 32 no commodity could get more than 25 percent of the total amount that comes from the customs receipts and the total amount that is appropriated under this bill. Therefore, dairy products, for instance, under the domestic-consumption phase of the problem, would receive perhaps $50,000,000; meats, primarily hogs, would get around $18,000,000; poultry and eggs would get around $6,000,000; fruits and vegetables would get around $35,000,000; making a total of $109,000,000. Under the export-subsidy theory of section 32, cotton would get around $50,000,000; wheat around $26,000,000; lard around $16,000,000; and pecans and walnuts around $2,000,000; making a grand total of $203,000,000. There might be a slight change here or there; but that break-down is close to being correct, if I correctly analyze the testimony, and take it into consideration with the statements which have been heretofore made to the committee.

Mr. President, in conclusion, no one realizes better than I that a tremendous sum of money is involved in this appropriation; and yet day after day I have seen the Appropriations Committee come in with this bill or that, calling for billions upon billions of dollars for practically every conceivable thing in this country.

We voted billions for national defense, and I went along with that program and was glad to do it. No one ever raised the question as to where the money was coming from to pay the billions of dollars. As a Member of the House of Representatives, I voted for every dollar that was ever requested for every W. P. A. appropriation year after year, and I voted for some appropriations in the Senate this year; and yet because I dared vote against an additional $150,000,000 in the original vote on W. P. A., I have been considered by some persons out in my section of the country as one who has no heart; as an individual who was attempting to trample down into the dust the rights of those who may be suffering for want of the necessities of life.

It is a strange thing how quickly people forget. It is a strange thing that no one ever thought of all the money I had voted for up to that time and said, "Well, LUCAS deserves just a little consideration at least for going along on all of those appropriations"; but that one thing stands out in the minds of those who want more and more all the time.

Yes, this is a large appropriation; and the question is frequently asked upon the floor of the Senate and in the lobbies, "Where are we going with all of these appropriations? When are we to stop, if ever?" I am frank to say that I have not the answer, and I do not know whether any Senator upon the floor has an answer. Sometimes, as we deliberate over the boxcar figures involved in appropriations in the Senate, I find that it does me good to hark back to the days when one dollar—one three hundred and thirty-eight millionth part of the sum involved in this bill—represented to me perhaps several hours of back-breaking toil and represented also food and sustenance for several days.

So when we discuss these sums with strings of zeros stretching out ad infinitum I try to remember two fundamental principles which, to my knowledge, have not been repealed. Admitting my shortcomings as an economist—I scarcely ever agree with the economists, because they cannot agree among themselves—but, admitting my shortcomings as an economist, the first is that a dollar is not a figment of the imagination nor something that can be wished into existence; it must be created through labor or productivity or natural wealth. The second is that you cannot spend what you do not have, at least not after your creditors catch up with you.

Easy, indeed, would it be, and perhaps expedient, to say to the farmers of America, "Here is the money we have appropriated for you to aid you in your present troubles. Just come and get it, and don't worry about a thing." My approach is slightly different. While I do not desire to be unpleasant, I must remind the farmers of America that this money is being appropriated in their behalf, but that in some way, somehow, a method must be found of raising it. Therefore, at the earliest opportunity, if this bill becomes a law, I may introduce a measure which will provide for a means of financing this appropriation.

The tax collector is never a popular fellow, but I believe the time has come when it must be impressed upon the persons who are the recipients of Federal munificence that the appropriations which are voted in their behalf are not just manufactured out of thin air. I believe that the same principle which I learned in my youth as an individual, that you cannot spend what you do not have or what you have not a reasonable expectancy of getting, applies equally well to corporations and to governments and to individuals.

It is not that I believe that the farmer is not fully as deserving of Federal aid as are the destitute and hungry residents of the cities and industrial centers. Certainly, too, the importance of American agriculture in our economic system justifies appropriating funds for the American farmer just as funds have been appropriated for the aid of industry and commerce.

But if, after having lived among farm folk all my life, I am any judge of the temper of agricultural thought, the American farmer does not seek, and would not want, a so-called hand-out. As a class, he is jealous of his economic and social integrity, and all he asks is for temporary aid to pull him through a situation that was not of his making.

Finally, I think the proposed legislation will go far to avert more drastic, and perhaps less feasible, measures which might be hatched and nurtured unless the economic needs of the American farmer are at least partially satisfied at this particular time. As between the alternatives of ignoring the farm problem completely or following some visionary course which might prove economically disastrous, I prefer to follow this sound middle pathway, which I believe to be just and well considered.

My plea is to pass these proposed appropriations so that, aided by the legislative machinery which already has been set up in his behalf, the American farmer may work out his own salvation, under the necessary protection of crop control, and with as few other restrictions as are compatible with sound economic sense.

It is not a question, gentlemen, which can be determined if partisan or sectional considerations are allowed to creep into the debates. The broad scope of American agriculture provides a huge, all-inclusive panorama of complicated problems and needs and, as I see our duty here today, it is to vote these funds so that agriculture may move forward with, and neither retard nor be retarded by, labor and industry and government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 97, after line 4, to insert:

DISPOSAL OF SURPLUS COMMODITIES

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to further carry out the provisions of section 32, as amended, of the act entitled "An act to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes," approved August 24, 1935, and subject to all provisions of law relating to the expenditure of funds appropriated by such section, $113,000,000. Such sum shall be immediately available and shall be in addition to, and not in substitution for, other appropriations made by such section or for the purpose of such section: Provided, That not in excess of 25 percent of the funds herein made available may be devoted to any one agricultural commodity.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I wish to inquire of the Senator from Georgia whether or not I received a correct impression as to this matter earlier in the day. The pending amendment provides an appropriation for the disposal of surplus commodities of $113,000,000. I understand that for this same purpose there is available 30 percent of the customs revenues under the provisions of section 32 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act. A year ago section 32 produced $144,000,000, and it is anticipated that this year it will produce only $90,000,000. Last year there was no appropriation for this purpose other than the money provided by section 32. Am I correct?

Mr. RUSSELL. The understanding of the Senator from Colorado is correct. It might be stated that this is the first time Congress has considered an appropriation of any amount over and above the 30 percent that is permanently allocated from the customs receipts. Of course, the allocation does not run with the fiscal year, it runs with the calendar year, so at the time this matter is under consideration Congress knows the amount which will be available under the permanent legislation which makes this allocation. The calendar year from January 1 to December 31 is used in determining the amount which will be available for expenditure under section 32. Therefore we know now that the sum will be approximately $90,000,000 in round figures.

Mr. ADAMS. Last year the $144,000,000 was adequate for these purposes?

Mr. RUSSELL. I will not say it was wholly adequate, but no great harm has resulted from lack of funds.

Mr. ADAMS. So that if the same demand existed this year, and the $144,000,000 were substantially just enough, there would be a shortage of $54,000,000 this year, and the necessity of equalizing?

Mr. RUSSELL. It would require an appropriation of $54,000,000 to bring the section 32 funds up to the exact amount available during the current year. However, the Department pointed out that there would be more demand for section 32 funds in the coming fiscal year than has been made upon them for the current fiscal year.

Mr. ADAMS. Of course, there are almost always endless demands. Every group of producers, when the price of their commodity declines, is anxious to have the Surplus Commodities Corporation take over the surplus in order to reduce the amount on the market. That is a normal situation. I have seen it in my own State and elsewhere.

The point I was reaching was that it seems that under conditions this year, which are certainly no less favorable than the conditions of last year, we are providing $59,000,000 more than was available last year. Why could we not reduce the $113,000,000 to the amount which would equalize last year's situation and make the appropriation $59,000,000 instead of $113,000,000?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, several reasons were assigned by the witnesses who appeared before the subcommittee as to why adding the amount of $59,000,000, making a total of $144,000,000 available under section 32, would not be adequate.

This year the Department has had in operation what was known as a wheat export program, whereby 100,000,000 bushels of wheat have been shipped abroad and subsidized out of Department of Agriculture funds. Those funds were taken from the soil-conservation appropriation, approximately $23,000,000 from the soil-conservation program appropriation. This year, due to the fact that the percentage of cooperators under the soil-conservation program has increased tremendously, there will be no funds available from the soil-conservation funds. There was another item of some $4,000,000 which had been used from soil-conservation funds for carrying on a peanut program, which will not be available this year, thereby making it necessary to finance the peanut program from section 32 funds.

Perhaps overshadowing those two items, which make about $25,000,000 of funds which will be added to the expenditures under section 32, there is a situation of extreme gravity in the dairy industry. I am not sure that I thoroughly understand all of the details of the dairy program, but a large amount of money has been loaned by the Commodity Credit Corporation on butter, and that butter is now in storage.

The section 32 funds, up until the time they were exhausted, were used to purchase this butter and distribute it among those on the relief rolls. Section 32 funds having become exhausted, the Department estimates that it will require something like $15,000,000 between now and the beginning of the next fiscal year to clear up the butter situation.

Mr. ADAMS. That is, for one agency of the Government to buy it from another agency of the Government?

Mr. RUSSELL. No; because the Commodity Credit Corporation makes loans to cooperatives. They borrow on the butter, and another bureau of the Department of Agriculture, the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation, purchases it from the cooperators, who are holding it under a Government loan. It is not a direct purchase from another agency of government.

I am sure that the diligent Senator from Colorado, with his usual care, has examined the hearings. He will find in them that the Surplus Commodity Corporation has pointed out that a very critical situation will exist in the poultry industry, both as regards the marketing of poultry and of eggs. In addition, a considerable surplus in lard is anticipated for the coming year, and that it is proposed to inaugurate an export program on a small amount of lard for which money is not available, and will not be available unless the funds applied to section 32 are increased.

In addition to that, if a cotton export subsidy program is adopted, additional funds will be required to carry on that program. If the comprehensive program outlined by the Department of Agriculture is to go into effect $113,000,000, in addition to the $90,000,000 permanently allocated, is necessary. The Department felt that it would need that much to reach all of these phases of agriculture, many of which are not covered by the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

The situation in the fruit and vegetable production is very unfavorable. It was anticipated it would be necessary to buy a considerable amount of apples and grapefruit and oranges to avoid a glut in the market and disastrous prices to the producer.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the Senator then feels that the Department of Agriculture has imposed upon it the duty to say that wherever there is a surplus of any agricultural product the Government should step in and take the surplus off the market?

Mr. RUSSELL. I would not go that far, but I would say that there is a very definite obligation on the Congress of the United States to endeavor to protect, as far as possible, the prices received by the producers of any kind of agricultural commodity in the United States.

Mr. ADAMS. Would the Senator go so far on the other side as to say that whenever there is a shortage in commodities so that the consumer is forced to pay more than a reasonable price that the Government should step in and see that the prices are brought down to a reasonable level?

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator from Colorado is getting out in rather deep water. I do not know how the Government could embark on any such program under normal circumstances. If I recall correctly, during the period of the World War, however, the Government did undertake to establish a level above which prices for wheat, corn, and other agricultural products should not mount.

Mr. ADAMS. I am not speaking entirely off the book, because there is one agricultural product which is raised in the State of the Senator from Louisiana and the State of the Senator from Colorado with respect to which Congress, through the activities of the Secretary of Agriculture, is endeavoring to keep the price down. I refer to sugar. Congress has placed in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture a power which he has exercised with great liberality—to keep the price down for the benefit of the consumer. So when I make the inquiry, I wonder why the same power and the same objective might not be instituted in connection with other products which the consumer has to purchase.

Mr. RUSSELL. When Senators representing the sugar-producing regions stated to the Senate that that was the case the Senate immediately, forthwith, passed a bill to remedy the situation and to protect the American producer. The pending bill seeks the same objective—to protect the American producer of agricultural commodities against disastrously low prices. When the Senate has done all within its power to aid the American farmer, we have discharged our responsibility.

Mr. ADAMS. In view of the Senator's explanation I will not offer the amendment I had in mind to offer.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question of the chairman of the subcommittee. Will the $113,000,000 be the fund from which the Department of Agriculture would furnish groceries under the provisions for the stamp method of providing lower-price commodities to people on the relief rolls?

Mr. RUSSELL. It will be. That will be the source from which that program will be financed. The Senator from Oklahoma understands, of course, that during the coming year we do not propose to try out that program except on an experimental basis.

Mr. LEE. I understand that. I should like somewhere to amend the plan so that all those who are certified for relief can enjoy it, as well as those who are actually on the rolls. For instance, in Oklahoma we have 30,000 persons who are certified for the relief rolls, but not enough money to employ them. We have only enough to employ 65,000 persons. There are 30,000 who are certified as being in a similar condition as the 65,000. The 65,000 get jobs, but the 30,000 do not get jobs nor the stamps. I am wondering if there is a place in the bill where we could provide that all those who are certified for relief could enjoy this lower price.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, may I interrupt at that point?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes.

Mr. ADAMS. I think perhaps there is a little confusion in the mind of the Senator from Oklahoma, if I understood him correctly. As I understand, the surplus commodities are not given to those on Federal relief rolls. They are given to the States. They are distributed by the States to those who are upon the direct relief rolls. The direct relief rolls may include a part or all those to whom the Senator from Oklahoma refers as certified, but not upon the Federal rolls. The Federal roll is made up of those who are receiving the security wage. The surplus commodities are given to the State for distribution to those to whom it extends direct relief, which may be the unemployable, it may be the disabled, or may be those who are employable but not able to get employment.

Mr. LEE. That is correct. I thank the Senator from Colorado. The point I had in mind, however, is the experiment the Department is making with different colored stamps. "All I know is what I read in the papers." In the papers it said that those on relief would be given these stamps, which would exclude those who have been certified for relief but not been put on relief. As this experiment is carried out I should like to see it extended to include those who have been certified for relief, because they need it worse than those who get the jobs and also the tickets.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, in the proposed plan I do not think there is any discrimination against a man who is certified for relief and who is unable to get upon the W. P. A. rolls. Of course, that is not a matter upon which we can legislate in the pending bill. But if I understand the stamp program, it will not necessarily interfere with the distribution of surplus commodities. It merely means that when those who are on the relief rolls are paid, if they will accept their compensation in stamps they will receive more payment in stamps than they would in money. That is done to encourage the consumption of those surplus commodities. But in the meanwhile, where purchases have been made, those commodities will be distributed as they have been heretofore.

Of course, it will be very unfair to the man who is on direct relief and unable to get on the W. P. A. rolls to deny him any benefits in the distribution of surplus commodities, merely because he has no stamps, and if the Department of Agriculture has not given any attention to that phase of the program it certainly should do so at the very earliest date; otherwise there would be a very unfair discrimination against the man on direct relief. He would be denied not only an opportunity to work on the W. P. A. but would be denied sharing in the distribution of these surplus commodities.

Mr. ADAMS. I think there is one thing regarding the surplus commodities which is a little difficult to work out. There may be a surplus of onions raised in a valley in a State, and the Surplus Commodities Corporation then has on hand a great supply of onions. It may be the only surplus, so those on relief there are supplied with onions. In California the surplus may be prunes. In Florida and in the South there may be a great surplus of grapefruit, as we had one year. In other words, there is a difficulty in the matter of distribution of surplus commodities, because in one place it is one particular commodity and in another place another commodity. I assume that the Surplus Commodity Corporation endeavors to work it out, but I do not know what the answer is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 96, line 14.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Farm Tenant Act, farm tenancy", on page 99, line 14, after the word "Act", to strike out "$24,984,500" and insert "$49,984,500", and in line 15, before the word "together", to insert "reimbursable", so as to read:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out the provisions of title I of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, approved July 22, 1937 (7 U. S. C. 1000–1006), including the employment of persons and means in the District of Columbia, and elsewhere, exclusive of printing and binding, as authorized by said act, $49,984,500 reimbursable, together with the unexpended balance of the appropriation made under said act for the fiscal year 1939.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 100, after line 10, to insert:

Total, Farm Tenant Act, $56,950,230.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Water facilities, arid and semiarid areas," on page 100, line 23, after the word "elsewhere," to strike out "$250,000" and insert "$500,000," so as to read:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the act entitled "An act to promote conservation in the arid and semiarid areas of the United States by aiding in the development of facilities for water storage and utilization, and for other purposes," approved August 28, 1937 (16 U. S. C. 590r–590x), including the employment of persons and means in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; printing and binding; the purchase, exchange, operation, and maintenance of passenger-carrying vehicles; and rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, $500,000, of which not to exceed $25,000 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Beltsville Research Center," on page 101, line 13, after the word "expenses," to strike out "$85,000" and insert "$90,000," so as to read:

For general administrative purposes, including maintenance, operation, repairs, and other expenses, $90,000; and, in addition thereto, this appropriation may be augmented, by transfer of funds or by reimbursement, from applicable appropriations, to cover the cost, including handling and other related charges, of services and supplies, equipment and materials furnished, stores of which may be maintained at the center, and to cover the cost of building construction, alteration, and repair performed by the center in carrying out the purposes of such applicable appropriations and the applicable appropriations may also be charged their proportionate share of the necessary general expenses of the center not covered by this appropriation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Cooperative farm forestry", on page 102, line 10, after the word "improvements", to strike out "$300,000" and insert "$400,000", so as to read:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the Cooperative Farm Forestry Act, approved May 18, 1937 (16 U. S. C. 568b), including the employment of persons and means in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; printing and binding; not to exceed $7,700 for the purchase of passenger-carrying vehicles; the purchase of reference books and technical journals; not to exceed $30,000 for the construction or purchase of necessary buildings, and other improvements, $400,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Forest roads and trails", on page 102, line 24, after the name "District of Columbia", to strike out "$10,000,000" and insert "$14,000,000"; on page 103, line 2, before the word "Stat.", to insert "49"; in line 3, before the word "of", to strike out "$3,000,000" and insert "$7,000,000"; in line 7, after the word "rental", to insert a comma and "purchase, or construction"; and in line 10, after the word "maintenance", to insert a comma and "but the total cost of any such building purchased or constructed under this authorization shall not exceed $7,500", so as to read:

For carrying out the provisions of section 23 of the Federal Highway Act approved November 9, 1921 (23 U. S. C. 23), including not to exceed $59,500 for departmental personal services in the District of Columbia, $14,000,000, which sum consists of the balance of the amount authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year 1939 by the act approved June 16, 1936 (49 Stat. 1520), and $7,000,000 of the amount authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year 1940 by the act approved June 8, 1938 (52 Stat. 635), to be immediately available and to remain available until expended: Provided, That this appropriation shall be available for the rental, purchase, or construction of buildings necessary for the storage of equipment and supplies used for road and trail construction and maintenance, but the total cost of any such building purchased or constructed under this authorization shall not exceed $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Title II—Farm Credit Administration, salaries and expenses", on page 107, line 23, before the word "together", to strike out "$3,600,000" and insert "$3,700,000", so as to read:

For salaries and expenses of the Farm Credit Administration in the District of Columbia and the field; traveling expenses of officers and employees including not to exceed $5,000 for travel incurred under proper authority attending meetings or conventions of members of organizations at which matters of importance to the work of the Farm Credit Administration are to be discussed or transacted; printing and binding; contingent and miscellaneous expenses, including law books, books of reference, and not to exceed $1,000 for periodicals, newspapers, and maps; contract stenographic reporting services, and expert services for the preparation of amortization tables; library membership fees or dues in organizations which issue publications to members only or to members at a lower price than to others, payment for which may be made in advance; purchase of manuscripts, data, and special reports by personal service without regard to the provisions of any other act; procurement of supplies and services without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (41 U. S. from the funds made available to the Farm Credit Administration under the acts of January 29, 1937 (50 Stat. 5), February 9, 1937 (50 Stat. 8, 11), and February 4, 1938 (52 Stat. 26).

The amendment was agreed to.

That concludes the committee amendments.

Mr. RUSSELL. I desire to offer from the floor a legislative amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 108, line 15, before the period, it is proposed to insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no employee of the United States on whose certificate or approval loans under said act of January 29, 1937, as amended, or other acts of the same general character, are or have been made, shall be held personally liable for any loss or deficiency occasioned by the fraud or misrepresentation of applicants or borrowers, if the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration shall determine that such employee has exercised reasonable care in the circumstances, and has complied with the regulations of the Farm Credit Administration in executing such certificate or giving such approval."

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, this amendment grew out of a ruling by the Comptroller General that a representative of the Crop Production Loan Agency, commonly called the Seed Loan Agency, was personally liable for any fraud or misrepresentation on the part of the borrower. We are familiar with the set-up of the Crop Production Loan Agency. A local committee in each county passes on the loans. The representative of the Farm Credit Administration merely handles the mechanics of making the loan after it has been approved by the local committee. The Comptroller General's ruling would make the representative of the Government liable for fraud or misrepresentation on the part of a borrower whom the agent had never seen. The Farm Credit Administration has asked to have this language inserted, which leaves to the determination of the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration the question whether or not the agent of the Government should be held liable in cases of fraud on the part of the borrower.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] on behalf of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, that concludes all the amendments which have been approved by the committee, or which the committee has requested me to offer from the floor. If the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] has no objection, I suggest that the remainder of the bill might go over until tomorrow. Many other amendments remain to be offered from the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is agreeable.

Mr. RUSSELL. I thank the Senator.

PARITY PRICES AND PARITY INCOME—ADDRESS BY REPRESENTATIVE CANNON OF MISSOURI

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, one of the best statements I have heard or read on the subject of parity—parity prices and parity income—was recently made by Representative CLARENCE CANNON, of Missouri, in a radio address delivered on April 8, last. Mr. CANNON is the ranking majority member of the House Committee on Appropriations and is chairman of the Subcommittee on Appropriations for the Department of Agriculture.

I ask unanimous consent that the address be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

When in the closing days of the Fifty-fifth Congress it was announced that for the first time in the history of the United States appropriations for all departments of the Government for 2 years had reached a grand total of a billion dollars, head lines flashed the news from coast to coast and editorials in every metropolitan newspaper in the Nation commented apprehensively on a billion-dollar Congress.

This session of Congress the Committee on Appropriations reported out a bill carrying an appropriation in excess of a billion dollars for 1 year only and for one department of the Government alone—the Department of Agriculture. And the newspapers had very little to say about it.

A billion dollars for agriculture, but perhaps that is the explanation of the lack of editorial interest. For when you come to examine this long bill with its hundreds of items and millions of dollars you discover that the term "agricultural appropriation bill" is largely a misnomer and highly misleading and that while it is known as the agricultural appropriation bill, as a matter of fact a large part of the money it appropriates is for other than agricultural purposes.

For example, the bill carries $6,000,000 for the Weather Bureau, of only incidental service to agriculture, and now maintained chiefly for the benefit of the civil and military air service. Seven million dollars for the eradication of tuberculosis and kindred stock diseases, primarily for the protection of the health of consumers; $5,000,000 for meat inspection, a service for the exclusive benefit of the packers and middlemen, through its guaranty of quality and wholesomeness to the general public. Approximately $20,000,000 for the forestry service, not even a branch of agriculture, consumed principally in the protection and development of national forests and national resources. Four million dollars for the Bureau of Biological Survey, the conservation of wildlife, a national interest, demand for which comes in greater volume and insistence from the city than the country. Nearly $200,000,000 for the Bureau of Public Roads, a most laudable activity, but one in which the farmer is no more interested than any other citizen—in fact, out of this amount a wholly inadequate sum is provided for farm-to-market roads—connecting the farm with the great system of interurban highways for which most of this money is spent. Two and a half million dollars for the Food and Drug Administration which deals with food as it leaves the processors and not as it leaves the farm, and with cosmetics, etc., of secondary importance on the farm, and at most of no more benefit to the farmer than to any other industry. Ten million dollars for forest roads and trails, spent largely in the national forests and of practically no agricultural benefit whatever. And similar items throughout the bill—too numerous to mention.

So, when prompted to comment on the size of the agricultural appropriation bill, and the amount it carries, it is well to remember, that a large part of it is far from being agricultural, and is to be charged, neither to the farmer nor the farm.

But such items serve to make the bill, already of surpassing importance, probably the most widely discussed of all the supply bills, affecting directly and immediately every congressional district, directly or indirectly every interest and industry in the Nation, urban and rural, field and factory, farm and city.

In this connection, there is sometimes a tendency to confuse the jurisdiction and functions of two great committees of the House, the Committee on Agriculture, a legislative committee which cannot report appropriations, and the Committee on Appropriations, exclusively an appropriating committee which cannot report legislation. In other words, the Committee on Agriculture writes the farm laws, establishes the farm programs. And the Committee on Appropriations furnishes the money to operate those laws and put these farm programs into effect. Without money to run them farm programs are like guns without ammunition or automobiles without gas. And the Committee on Appropriations, in the agricultural appropriation bill, furnishes the ammunition and the gas, supplies the money, to make the mare go.

Let us take a concrete instance. The Seventy-fifth Congress passed the Farm Act of 1938, directing that the farmers of the country be paid parity prices for their products. But the law meant nothing—and the farmer's prices were not affected—until the Committee on Appropriations put through an appropriation providing the money to make the law operative.

What is a parity price? I suppose so much has been written and said about parity prices, and there has been such exhaustive debate in Congress on farm parity for the last 20 years, that everybody understands that a parity price for wheat, corn, cotton, eggs, and other farm products is a price which will make the farmer's wheat, corn, cotton, and eggs today buy as much as the same wheat, corn, cotton, and eggs would have bought before the war.

Everybody will remember that before the war the price of farm products and the price of manufactured products, wages for farm labor and wages for union labor were fairly adjusted, and, under the price schedules of that day, agriculture was on a plane of economic equality with labor and industry. Then came the war, and all prices advanced. Farm prices went up. Industrial prices went up. Wage scales went up, went up together, to the highest peak in the economic history of the country. And everybody was satisfied, everybody had purchasing power, everybody had enough and to spare, everybody was prosperous—on the farm and in the city.

But with the close of the war a surprising thing happened, a thing as unfair and unjust and inequitable as it was surprising. The bottom fell out of farm prices, while the prices of everything the farmer had to buy remained at wartime levels. Hogs fell from $28 to $2. Wheat went down from $2.40 to 30 cents. Eggs dropped from 60 cents to 8 cents. And everything else in proportion. Now, that would not have been so bad if the price of everything that went up with farm prices had come down with farm prices. But, incredible as it may seem, while agriculture was falling labor and industry not only maintained wartile levels but advanced, until today it costs more to ship 45-cent corn than it cost to ship $1.50 corn in 1920, costs more to ship 9-cent cotton than it cost to ship 35-cent cotton during the war, takes more to buy a binder to cut 60-cent wheat than it took to buy a binder to cut $2.40 wheat. And today, when pork is $7 and eggs are 20 cents, the union wage scale is higher than when pork was $28 and eggs were 60 cents. Do our friends who wear cotton clothing and who eat ham and eggs approve of that discrepancy?

Now, do not misunderstand us. The farmer does not object to increases in either wages or prices. The farmer believes in high wages and high prices. But he submits to all fair-minded Americans that if he pays high wages for the products of labor and high prices for the output of industry he is entitled to an honest wage for his labor and a fair price for his products. That is what a parity is—as fair a price for what the farmer sells as the farmer must pay for what he buys.

And the justice of that contention is so obvious that all political parties have promised parity in their national platforms. And the Seventy-fifth Congress at last wrote into law a provision to pay parity prices.

But such laws are of no effect until money is provided to make them operative. They are, as has been said, like guns without ammunition or automobiles without gas. So the Committee on Appropriations last year provided $212,000,000 and this year reported out $250,000,000 for parity prices. These amounts are not sufficient to give the farmer full parity, but they are steps in the right direction.

From the $212,000,000 appropriated last year the farmers of the Nation will receive 11 cents a bushel more for wheat than they have already been paid, 6 cents a bushel more for corn, and nearly 2 cents a pound more for cotton on their 1938 crop, payable this coming September and October. And if the $250,000,000 appropriation is made they will receive as much or more for their 1939 crop, payable in 1940. We had a hard fight on parity in the House and lost by a vote of 191 to 204. Six votes would have changed it. But if the Senate adds it to the bill—and the country supports us—we have enough votes to pass it when it comes back to the House in conference, and to spare.

And industry and labor will profit as well as agriculture. The day these checks reach the farm the cash registers will begin to ring in every business in the community, orders will start flowing to the factories, and labor will be called back on the job. On the other hand, by inverse ratio, when farm prices fall, farm buying power drops, factories close, and labor is out of a job. Agriculture and labor and industry are all in the same boat. We must sink or swim together.

And let it never be forgotten that when hogs were $28 and eggs were 60 cents, there was not a single hungry child in America; and when hogs were $2 and eggs were 8 cents, famine stalked like a grim specter through alley and lane, and bread lines formed and soup kitchens opened in every city in the Nation.

My friends, farm parity means business parity. A square deal for agriculture is a square deal for labor and industry. And inevitably, irrevocably, inexorably farm prosperity is national prosperity.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GURNEY in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received see the end of Senate proceedings.)

CONFIRMATION OF NOMINATIONS OF GRADUATING MIDSHIPMEN

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the President of the United States today sent to the Senate the nominations of the members of the graduating class at the Naval Academy to be ensigns in the Navy. Since the list of nominations, if printed in the RECORD, would require three full pages, and would have to appear twice in the RECORD and once in the calendar, while if the Senate confirms the nominations now they will appear once in the RECORD as having been confirmed, as a formal matter I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of the midshipmen of the graduating class at the Naval Academy to be ensigns in the Navy be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts? The Chair hears none, and the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

Mr. DANAHER (for Mr. CONNALLY), from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Stephen J. Doyle, of North Dakota, to be United States marshal for the district of North Dakota.

Mr. HUGHES, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of George L. Grobe, of New York, to be United States attorney for the western district of New York.

Mr. HATCH, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of John G. Utterback, of Maine, to be United States marshal for the district of Maine.

Mr. MILLER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Harry J. Lemley, of Arkansas, to be United States district judge for the eastern and western districts of Arkansas, to fill a position created by the act of Congress of May 31, 1938.

Mr. KING, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the following nominations:

Simon Hellenthal to be United States district judge, division No. 3, District of Alaska; and Charles J. Clasby, of Alaska, to be United States attorney, division No. 2, District of Alaska.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the following nominations:

Loomis E. Cranor to be United States marshal for the western district of Kentucky;

Eli H. Brown, 3d, of Kentucky, to be United States attorney for the western district of Kentucky, vice Bunk Gardner, resigned; and John M. Moore, of Kentucky, to be United States marshal for the eastern district of Kentucky.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will proceed to state the nominations on the calendar.

TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Harcourt Alexander Morgan to be a member of the Board of Directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTER

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Sarah Brown to be postmaster at Lorman, Miss.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

That completes the calendar.

THE JUDICIARY—HARRY J. LEMLEY

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, the Committee on the Judiciary has favorably reported the nomination of Harry J. Lemley to be United States district judge for the eastern and western districts of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent that his nomination be now confirmed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the nomination?

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

MINISTER TO CANADA—DANIEL C. ROPER

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, the Committee on Foreign Relations has favorably reported the nomination of Mr. Daniel C. Roper to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Canada. I ask unanimous consent that the nomination be now confirmed.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, is the request for immediate consideration of the nomination of Mr. Roper to be Minister to Canada?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. I have conferred with the majority leader [Mr. BARKLEY] and the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee [Mr. PITTMAN], and, under the circumstances, I have no objection to the present consideration of the nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 51 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Tuesday, May 9, 1939, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate May 8, 1939

POSTMASTER

MISSISSIPPI

Sarah Brown, Lorman.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, MAY 8, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

This is our Father's world; God reigns; let the earth be glad. O God, we look toward Thee as men look for the morning. Thou art our Sun; Thou art our Light; Thou art our Life; let us feel the heavenly touches of our blessed Saviour. No longer is there need for us to turn toward Jerusalem; our offering and our sacrifice are here. We pray Thee to clothe us with the garments of good will and poise; may we resolve to allow no man to degrade our souls by making us hate; remind us that the remedy against it is love. God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ, unto whom be eternal praises world without end. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, May 5, was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address delivered at the University of Richmond last Friday by my colleague the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DARDEN].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mrs. O'DAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial from the Nassau Daily Review.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New York?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a brief statement by the agricultural director of extension in Missouri.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, today marks the silver jubilee of a great agricultural event. Twenty-five years ago today, May 8, 1914, Congress passed the Smith-Lever bill. In a speech here in the House of Representatives, June 1, 1920, and in which reference was made to agricultural legislation under the first 7 years of the forward-looking administration of President Woodrow Wilson, I said:

Early in the period of the 7 good years, years of the well-favored kine and the seven ears of corn upon one stalk, rank and good, came the passage of the Agricultural Cooperative Extension Act of May 8, 1914. This act, frequently referred to as the Smith-Lever Act, represents the most important movement ever attempted in direct popular education along a given line. Providing as it does a method of itinerant agricultural teaching of home economics and agriculture, it is perhaps not too much to say of the Smith-Lever Act that it is the greatest single contribution to the cause of farming anywhere in the world.

Designed to help solve the problems of the farm as they developed in peacetimes, the Smith-Lever Act yet proved the most effective piece of war machinery in the entire Government when America threw her strength into the great struggle. Three days after war was declared Hon. David F. Houston, then Secretary of Agriculture and a Missourian, participated in a great conference in St. Louis, where there was worked out a far-reaching program of food production and conservation. So under this act, which represented agricultural preparedness, there were mobilized the tremendous resources which in the months that followed made of the farmer an effective fighting force second only to that on the front.

In the quarter century since May 8, 1914, great progress has been made. True, some mistakes have been made, made in leadership, personnel, and program, but never has there been a great pioneer movement that was perfect.

As a whole the history of agricultural extension is the story of work well done, and it is with pride that, as one whose life has largely been spent in the farm cause, including 10 years as assistant secretary of agriculture for Missouri, I call attention to the early work done there. Of this, Mr. J. W. Burch, present director of the agricultural extension service in Missouri, writes as follows, under date of May 5, 1939:

The Agricultural Extension Service, the largest system of adult education in the world, celebrates its twenty-fifth anniversary next Monday, May 8. On May 8, 1914, the Congress passed the Smith-Lever Act, giving official sanction to the plan whereby the Federal and State Governments cooperate with local people in planning, financing, and carrying on educational activities on the farms and in rural homes.

In Missouri 10 county "farm advisers" were at work prior to the passage of the Smith-Lever Act. The counties in which these men were employed, the dates on which their appointments with the university became effective, and the names of these first 10 county extension workers in Missouri are, as follows:

Cape Girardeau, August 1, 1912, C. M. McWilliams; Pettis, January 1, 1913, S. M. Jordan; Buchanan, March 1, 1913, F. W. Faurot; Johnson, March 7, 1913, C. M. Long; Dade, April 1, 1913, E. J. Rodekohr; Audrain, April 1, 1913, E. W. Rusk; Jackson, April 20, 1913, E. A. Ikenberry; Marion, April 21, 1913, H. H. Laude; Scott, September 13, 1913, H. B. Derr; Cooper, September 24, 1913, J. D. Wilson.

Just a month after the passage of the Smith-Lever bill the University of Missouri established the Missouri Agricultural Extension Service as an administrative organization within the College of Agriculture, and the first Federal appropriation for extension work in Missouri became available July 1, 1914, in the sum of $10,000 for the fiscal year beginning on that date.

Missouri's General Assembly first officially sanctioned the appropriation of State and county funds for the purpose of carrying on extension work under Federal, State, and local cooperation early in 1913 with an appropriation of $25,000 to be used during the succeeding biennium. At the same time county courts were authorized "to appropriate funds for a county farm adviser to act in cooperation with the Missouri College of Agriculture, in aiding and encouraging the agricultural development of the country."

Even prior to the passage of this law, the first county court appropriation for extension work had been made by the county court of Cape Girardeau County, which on June 15, 1912, in response to a petition signed by 1,000 persons, appropriated $1,500 a year for a period of 3 years. C. M. McWilliams was employed as county agent August 1, 1912, the first man to do extension work under a cooperative set-up involving county, State, and Federal funds.

Some months earlier (April 12, 1912) Pettis County, having organized a bureau of agriculture, employed S. M. Jordan as farm agent for the county. Cooperative relations between the Pettis County organization, the Missouri College of Agriculture, and the United States Department of Agriculture were established January 1, 1913.

The first step in the plan used from 1912 to 1914 was the organization of a county farm bureau, with supporting groups, to improve agricultural and home farm bureaus. D. H. Doane, first State leader of county agent work in Missouri, in his first annual report said: "The best results have been accomplished in these small organized groups. In these organizations farmers meet for the purpose of discussing subjects of local significance. Each farm adviser, with this type of organization behind him, has found it possible to carry his work to all parts of the county through the cooperation of local leaders who can be counted on for effective service in the cause of better farms and farm homes."

Anti-hog-cholera vaccination, poultry production, and egg marketing, the organization of cow-testing associations, and the holding of 1-week movable schools of home economics were the chief projects in which work was carried on.

Following the passage of the Smith-Lever Act in 1914, there was rapid expansion in the scope of extension teaching. Carroll, Butler, Knox, and St. Charles employed county agents during the year.

Women's home-economics extension clubs were organized in considerable numbers in 1915 and a list of 30 subjects was compiled in which special helps were available through the extension service.

By 1924 Missouri had 54 counties in which county-extension agents were employed and 10 in which home demonstration agents were at work, and 86 organized subject matter subprojects had been developed, including work planned for boys' and girls' cubs. Much assistance was given in organizing shipping associations and cooperative elevators and warehouses. More than 180,000 farm men and women in 1923 voluntarily joined with extension forces "to improve agricultural and home practices in rural America."

By the end of 1928, 458 women's neighborhood clubs had been organized, with an active membership of 8,169. By the end of 1927 boys' and girls' club work had been extended to 99 counties and 18,694 members were enrolled, but this number fell to 12,643 by 1929, to rise again through ensuing years to its present 26,573. Women's club membership in 1938 was 38,371. At the present time all counties of the State are served by county extension agents and there are 61 home-demonstration agents.

The farm people of Missouri appreciate the Extension Service and support its efforts wholeheartedly, as is attested by the fact that county and home demonstration agents last year had the cooperation of 45,007 local leaders in connection with the items of its ever-widening program.

Director Burch refers to S. M. Jordan—"Sam" to the thousands of farm folk in Missouri and other States who have heard him in his homey philosophy and helpful agricultural talks. It was under the agricultural experiment station law, which I was able to get through the Missouri State Legislature, when a member of that body, that Mr. Jordan, a few years later, pioneered in the work in Pettis County and afterward, under the changed system, served elsewhere in Missouri.

Today, with R. W. Brown as president of the Missouri Farm Bureau Federation, and with others closely cooperating with the College of Agriculture, of which Dr. M. F. Miller is dean, agricultural extension work in Missouri, where trained and earnest men and women are at work in the counties, is, despite the pressure of dozens of new duties which require much of the time and thought of the workers, making commendable progress.

So, Mr. Speaker, on this twenty-fifth anniversary of agricultural extension, I congratulate not only Missouri but the Nation.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BOEHNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including therein an address delivered by Mr. Louis Ruthenburg, president of Servel, Inc., delivered before the congressional delegation from Indiana at the Indiana group meeting of the chamber of commerce last week.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. IZAC. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein two brief editorials on the P. W. A.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a short paper on price levels by Mr. Fred A. Blethen, and my own comments thereon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein two addresses delivered before the National Press Club on Friday last.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, in 1929 we collected from corporations $1,235,000,000 in taxes to defray expense of Government. In 1939 it is estimated we will collect from corporations in corporate income taxes $826,000,000 and in payroll taxes $1,198,175,000, making a total of $2,124,175,000, an increase of $889,000,000 in the taxes collected from corporations.

The greater part of this money in 1939 was collected for the purpose of paying old-age pensions in 1941, but we have spent the money. According to the Treasury statement of May 3, we are $2,970,000,000 in the red for this year and over $41,000,000,000 in debt. I ask you, where are you going to get the money to pay old-age pensions?

When 1941 rolls around, how will you pay old-age pensions with the money you are now collecting for that purpose? You are spending it now for Government operation, with the enormous sums being collected from these corporations, which amounted last year to $1,200,000,000. It is unbelievable to think that a government would so betray its people in letting them believe that the money would be available for pensions when it is spent now for the operation of the Government. A terrible travesty to justice. No greater misappropriation of funds could be made by any nation or any individuals or any corporation. When will it stop? O America, wake up and place men of responsibility in responsible positions of trust before it is too late.

COMMITTEE ON RIVERS AND HARBORS

Mr. DERouen. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors may be permitted to sit during the session of the House this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by including therein a short statement or announcement signed by myself and other Members of Congress and former Members of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address delivered by myself over the radio last Friday night.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. SECCOMBE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a radio address by the Honorable Frank T. Bow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. EATON of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a brief editorial appearing in the Press-Telegram of Long Beach, Calif., on May 3, on the subject of peace.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point, dealing with problems of today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, there is nothing new in governments, and anyone who believes that he has something better than the government we have had for the past 145 years will some day awaken to find himself a victim of his own folly. Socialism and socialistic governments are not new, nor their companions, poverty and strife. It is, however, unfortunate that these conditions exist in the United States, for it can only end in the destruction of our own Government as promulgated in the Constitution.

My discussion today is not to convince Members of the House who differ with me that they are wrong or that I am right, for no one recognizes better than I how futile such attempts at conversion might be. Neither is this discussion for the purpose of impressing the Members with their indifference to constitutional responsibility nor with their failure to protect the people's rights, for no one is more cognizant of congressional apathy to such responsibility than myself. My sole purpose for speaking today is to inform the people at home that Congress alone is responsible for changes which may end in the destruction of our Government.

It is, however, my desire to direct public attention upon those in the administration through whom the invisible government has found such powerful expression the past 7 years. These petty rulers have carried sufficient weight so that the majority in Congress in abject acquiescence and servitude to them have forgotten their greater duty to the people who elected them to office.

It is not too late to adjust or to correct the prevailing industrial collapse, nor is it too late to set the Federal Government right in its departure from constitutional principles. It is, however, important that Congress recognize danger now, for failure to provide sound and corrective measures is bound to terminate in complete collapse and centralize Federal control of industries and business under the supervision of our greatest enemy, a dictator in Washington. In order to bring about this transition in the Government it is only necessary that the present administration retain control, for the stage is set for a coup d'etat when convenient.

The greatest obstacle the administration is facing in its attempt for dictatorship is peace in Europe and peace at home. Peace in Europe will bring about an unfavorable trade balance to the United States, and peace at home will leave our military forces in their barracks. The greatest aid one could have who looks toward the chair of the dictator is mobilization or declaration of war, for this will allow Federal conscription and control of industries and wealth. This, in my opinion, is a cherished but unexpressed desire of someone whose greatest ambition is supreme dictatorial power.

The present reorganization and shifting of personnel in the many branches of the Federal Government is not to provide economy or decrease in Federal administrative cost. It is instead to place those who can be trusted by the administration in key positions so that they will not fail in the hour of need. This is a logical procedure and about the only one which may prove successful in conversion of government in the United States. It is, of course, a "long shot," in which the leaders of the movement take much for granted, yet it is possible if the people do not bestir themselves into action and save the Republic.

In the event we do not mobilize, the next procedure will be to appropriate sufficient money to assure the election in 1940. This may be accomplished, first, by allowing Federal monetary aid to industry, agriculture, and business for the sole purpose of wielding control of such industries and for regulation of prices on commodities, so that the money now in use will retain a reasonable purchasing value; second, to provide Federal works projects, so that the majority so employed will be reasonably satisfied with the wages they receive and with the commodities such wages will buy; third, to provide free or semifree medical and hospital aid for those most susceptible to such gift and appreciative of such aid; fourth, to provide public-health centers to advise and conduct health campaigns in public gatherings and in private homes—not for the promotion of better health but for more votes in 1940.

To aid in this movement we may expect a deluge of subversive propaganda, which will spread dissension and class hatred among all social groups. Industries and business may expect to be flayed and skinned, their hides nailed to the wall to please those with socialism in their hearts instead of Americanism. We may expect further ingress in the field of private industry by the administration, directed by those in the Federal employ who subscribe to socialistic philosophy. Note, however, that the international bankers, brokers, and others engaged in certain special businesses are left unmolested and free to carry on. A true picture may be had when one observes those in the Federal employ, who although in minority outnumber those in the majority—not only in important positions but in comparative percentage as to population.

After 1940, if no corrective measures are adopted, we may expect national bankruptcy, repudiation of currency, and wild inflation. This, no doubt, will result in the complete collapse of the Government and internal strife. So, Mr. Speaker, as I said in the beginning of my discourse, those who follow the leaders instead of the Constitution and the wishes of the people become victims of their own folly.

The foregoing statements may appear exaggerated, yet I shall ask you not to be fooled, for governments are never destroyed by the majority, but are, instead, destroyed by a vindictive and selfish minority. Minorities have destroyed all free governments in the past, and whether you believe it or not, it might happen in the United States. Minorities with socialistic and communistic principles have bored within our Government for many years at the expense of a tolerant majority, for no other purpose except to create a haven of refuge for themselves and their kin. We have worked for them for a long time, and we should now begin to clean house and restore constitutional government in sincere respect to those who have preceded us and for the protection of those who are to follow us.

Subversive activities which are now threatening the security of our Nation have gained momentum since the World War and are still imprinted in the words, "Save the world for democracy." We did; and we have a democracy here today, the direct offspring of the seventeenth amendment, which was adopted in 1913 during President Wilson's administration. A democracy, as I have said before, cannot survive as such, for it is doomed to terminate in some form of totalitarian government, and we are well on the road toward such government if we fail to take action now. If I were to reply to criticism, I would feel free to say that every move which has been made by the head of the Democratic Party has been for no other purpose than for greater consolidation of power in Washington.

No expense has been spared to establish centralized Federal control, and this is particularly true in the field of publicity. Millions upon millions have been expended on all forms of printed matter, over the air, and in thousands of feet of film, and for what purpose? Only to sell the administration to the public, to the people, if you please, who are paying all the expenses for this ballyhoo. Are such procedures sensible or necessary? Of course not, for there is hardly anyone who is not aware that the Government is a miserable failure. This publicity campaign has often appeared to be a family prerogative, yet this is not entirely true, for many admirers have been allowed free expression up to the point where recognition may hurt their masters' popularity.

The important point to bear in mind is that all expenses for this publicity are not paid by the Federal Government, but are, instead, paid by the earnings of industries and business still solvent. This is not easy to laugh off, for we, the people, the underdogs, pay for all Government expenses, including all this publicity.

All activities have been conducted along dramatic lines such as displayed by the bank holiday in March 1933, or, in a lighter mood, when administration leaders advise the world in behavior. At any rate, all activities have gone hand in hand with good and bad showmanship, but do not forget the final drama is yet to be played.

The invisible government first showed its hand in 1933, when the Gold Reserve Act was enacted. The administration's determination to obtain totalitarian government is further evidenced in the control and ownership of the Nation's gold and in alinement with international monetary power. In this coalition the administration not only deprived the American people of secured savings but, in addition, deprived them of their constitutional right.

I often wonder if the people realize our insecurity or dependence upon those who control our monetary wealth. If the Federal Government confined us strictly to the value of our money, no one could leave the borders of the United States, because our money is devoid of negotiable value in foreign countries. Fortunately, our commodity money is still redeemable in gold credit when held by foreign governments.

Congress could correct this if its membership were composed of statesmen instead of tweedledees and tweedledums, which, if you please, were so labeled by the President himself. I marvel that my colleagues can go along with the President after such disparaging remarks.

During this period private industries have been forced to suspend and business to close its doors because of Federal competition in private industry. This competition is extremely unfair, because not even one of the many Federal corporations recently created has earned one cent in revenue, but, instead, relies upon appropriations by Congress. I only mention this to show that the Federal Government is not operating to aid business, but is, instead, bent upon the destruction of business.

Federal finance corporations which are operating on money appropriated by Congress are holding notes, securities, and mortgages for money loaned to farmers, home owners, and to some industries. It is only reasonable to assume that the recipients of these favors are to a certain extent obligated to the Government, and therefore restricted in free expression. This in itself leads to Federal control of the recipient.

In 1937, when the Supreme Court had denied the President favorable decisions on some of the administration's "pet" measures, he, to correct this, so as to receive more favorable treatment by the Court, accused its members of senile degeneracy and held that a cause for resignation. The people generally opposed this change, because they held that adherence to the Constitution is not a sign of senile degeneracy. The President's worry is now over, because he has appointed a sufficient number to the Supreme Court to assure little or no opposition to his measures.

At this time it is not my desire to discuss the duties of the Supreme Court, but it is well to bear in mind that such duties are definitely set forth in article III of the Constitution, and it is well for its members to acquaint themselves with article III. Personally I am not even sure that there is a copy of the Constitution in the white-marbled edifice on Capitol Hill. If there is, there is little evidence of it in some of the decisions.

The first attempt at reorganization failed, but it passed this Congress by overwhelming majority. The majority has now approved the first plan, which is for no other purpose than for greater Federal control. It can be seen from this that every move has been made with one purpose in mind, and that is for complete control of the Nation.

Every piece of legislation enacted by Congress deprives it of power and bestows greater power upon the President and his appointees. This in itself is clearly unconstitutional, but nothing can be done to stop it in the present Congress, for there are simply too many Members who blindly follow leaders who are not concerned with the Constitution.

I shall now quote a resolution published in one of our daily papers, which is well worth serious consideration because it might prove a boomerang:

Without dissent, the Senate Military Affairs Committee yesterday reported favorably to the Senate a bill granting the President authority to "draft" the Nation's wealth on a loan basis in time of war.

Sponsored by Senator LEE (Democrat), Oklahoma, the measure provides that the President could "draft the use of money according to ability to lend to the Government."

Under the measure the President would be authorized to take a "wealth census," and citizens would be required to purchase bonds on a percentage of their wealth in return for 50-year 1-per-cent-interest Treasury bonds.

If individuals could not put up cash, the Government would be authorized to accept their services, or their notes, secured by property.

In the case of net wealth of $1,000, but not in excess of $10,000, a person would be required to loan 5 percent of the excess. The scale is then graduated upward to where a person having $100,000,000 would be required to lend $64,456,950.

This is one of the most contemptible and stupid resolutions I have ever read. It is really not worthy of discussion, yet I cannot fail to call attention to this paragraph:

If individuals could not put up cash, the Government would be authorized to accept their services, or their notes, secured by property.

If anything like this should pass, it would place dictatorial power in the hands of the President, by which he may require those who have no cash to put up securities and sign notes, which, of course, leaves them open to foreclosure and loss of property, if they fail to meet their obligation. In view of this, I am constrained to believe that an attempt is now being made to involve us in internal strife, so that the Federal Government may assume control in furtherance of dictatorship.

Mr. Speaker, this is a brief compilation of factors which are gradually destroying our republican form of government and paving the road for the dictator. I realize it is useless to expect correction by the Members of the Seventy-sixth Congress, particularly when I review legislation now enacted. It is, indeed, deplorable that so few recognize their obligation "to preserve, to protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States." This is not only true of Congress but it also concerns the Supreme Court and the President, for all of us assume the same obligation. I now appeal to each and every State in the Union that they arouse themselves from the lethargy in which they have been enshrouded for many years and boldly come forth and declare themselves before it is too late. If the States and the people are interested in preserving the Union and constitutional government, it is necessary that they take steps now and recall such of their representatives who are incompatible to a republican form of government. The final and deciding power rests in the governments of the several States and in their citizens, and it is now time for them to act.

PEMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I take this time to bring to the attention of the House a memorial adopted by the Legislature of the State of Ohio, supporting a bill which I introduced in this Congress for the payment to Ohio of the sum of $1,388,160, which in all equity and honesty is due the State of Ohio from the Social Security Board by reason of the misunderstanding which kept the people of Ohio from getting the contribution they deserved from the Social Security Board. By reason of a misunderstanding between the Governor of Ohio and the Social Security Board, just before the election of 1938, the Board refused to come forward with its portion of the October installment. The Governor of Ohio, in order to provide the payments to the old-age pensioners, secured the funds by a transfer of money from one fund to another. To my mind, there was no satisfactory reason for the failure of the Board to pay its installment. Negotiations are still pending between the State authorities in Ohio and the Social Security Board. It is hoped that they can reach a satisfactory adjustment. Should they fail, this bill should be passed by Congress, for the claim is meritorious.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include therein a copy of this resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The resolution referred to follows:

Resolution memorializing Congress to adopt H. R. 5118, now pending, providing for the payment of old-age pension funds due the State of Ohio as the Federal Government's share under the provisions of the Social Security Act

Whereas there is now pending in the Congress of the United States H. R. No. 5118, providing for the payment to the State of Ohio of the Federal Government's quota of funds due this State for old-age pensions under the provisions of the Social Security Act; and

Whereas it is just and equitable that the Federal Government should meet its fixed quota of contributions to this State for old-age pensions in strict conformity to the spirit and letter of the Social Security Act: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States should speedily adopt H. R. No. 5118, under the provisions of which the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay out of any money in the Treasury to the State of Ohio the sum of $1,338,160.93, being the amount of payments with respect to old-age assistance under title I of the Social Security Act for the month of October 1938, not paid on account of the refusal of the Social Security Board to certify such amount for payment to the State of Ohio; be it further

Resolved, That properly authenticated copies of the resolution be forwarded by the clerk of the house of representatives to the United States Senators and the Members of Congress from Ohio.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a copy of an editorial from the Worth Street Forecast, of New York, on British Textile Competition.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPRINGER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. LORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. LORD. Mr. Speaker, from time to time I am receiving letters from home workers, women in families who work in their homes at knitting and crocheting. They tell me that the wage-hour law prevents them from continuing their work. They have their home work to do and it would not be practical to keep a timekeeper in each home or a time clock to check in and out as they have a few minutes or a half hour to take up their knitting. Many are of such age that they cannot get work in a factory and could not stand the work if they could get the job. They want to be exempted from this legislation.

I have a letter here I received from Mrs. Jones, of South Valley, N. Y., and I ask unanimous consent that I may extend this letter in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The letter referred to follows:

SOUTH VALLEY, N. Y., April 25, 1939.

Mr. BERT LORD,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. LORD: Of course we women have nothing to do with affairs at Washington but I for one—speaking for several hundred about this small rural area—am going to speak my piece. You already know the wage-hour law is the minimum wage of 25 cents per hour; well, we housewives have been trying to keep our families off town charge by getting work such as hand crocheting and handsewn gloves and have been making from $8 to $20 per month. You understand this is done after our weekly washing and ironing and baking is done and most all of us have earned a washer, a dress, coat, and so forth, and we women are willing to work for less than 25 cents an hour. About a month ago the Labor Department (through the Wage Hour Division) sent lady investigators from house to house (costing an immense figure) asking information such as:

"How do you do, lady. I'm from the Labor Department, trying to get you more money for your glove work."

"Do you own your home?" "Yes."

"Do you farm it?" "Yes."

"What kind?" "Dairy."
"What's that?" "Cows."
"Hens?" "Yes."
"Do you raise oats, potatoes, corn?" "Yes."
"How much?" "Oh, hum! I can't recall."
"How much a month do you have off farm?" "Around $60 per month."
"Do you have any other income, and from where?" "This varies among our women folks."
"How much?"
"Any children?" "Yeh."
"How many?" "Two (up to eight anyway)."
"Have you paid your taxes?"

Now this is none of their business because they didn't ask how much it cost to keep those cows, how much did the corn cost to put in the silo, oats in the granary, potatoes in the cellar, or roofing and repair on our homes besides taxes. By this time you were told by them you didn't need glove work.

"How much do you get for gloves?" "Forty cents and 42 cents per pair."
"What do you do for that?" "Silk, hem, and make."
"Is thread furnished and needles too?" "Yes."
"How long does it take to do a pair?" "Well if I sit right down and keep working I can do a pair in 1½ hours, but can't really tell because I have housework between stitchings."
"Who do you get your work from?" "Mrs. Jones."
"Do you like her?"
"Does she owe you any money—and how much?" "Yeh! Maybe 84 cents to $2, and so forth."
"How long did it take you to earn it?" And I figure again.
"My! you are a fast worker. Good-bye."
And so on until she goes the rounds to every worker.

Now, in the first place, we housewives pay (or help pay) our own taxes, and see no reason why any person can tell us "You can't work unless you earn 25 cents an hour." A home worker is a good worker if they earn more than $200 a year, so I feel as if we should be exempted from the regular wage-hour law. I am the "Mrs." Jones who gives out the glove work, getting it already cut from Gloversville shops. Last year I had 75 workers. This year only 26 can really earn the 25 cents per hour on the price of gloves. Every farmer needs sympathy from the "big fellers" because being a farmer's wife, I can use every extra nickel to good advantage. I understand the hand-sewn gloves are going to Puerto Rico, where this wage-hour isn't a law; that they earn as low as 3 cents an hour, and where the social security tax and unemployment insurance isn't in effect. Would you personally advise me if Puerto Rico does carry those laws? We are charged 1 percent on all our wages, and when we get to be 65 (on social-security law) none of us can get a cent back because we haven't earned the required amount to get benefits, and just the same with unemployment insurance—no home worker in rural sections is eligible for benefits; "hain't" that something? So why should we be told how much we got to earn, even if we are willing to work for just what we can get?

You can use this letter anywhere if you care to help us ladies, and we will appreciate anything you may do. I do hope you'll read this letter and give it your personal attention, because we mean business and stand for—

Exemption from wage-hour law to all home workers earning $200 per year or less.

If I can be of any help personally, I would be glad to do so.

Thank you.

EDITH F. JONES.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, in the morning Post is found this editorial headed "An Arbitrary Proposal."

The House heard a great deal of impassioned and excellent oratory in denunciation of the Hobbs bill before approving it by a huge majority vote on Friday. That measure provides for the detention of certain classes of undesirable aliens subject to deportation but unable to obtain passports from the countries whence they came.

Only a very small number of persons would be affected by enactment of this bill—probably 50 each year. Moreover, the aliens concerned are those who advocate forcible overthrow of the Government and persons who have been convicted of crimes involving moral turpitude, white slavery, or violation of the antinarcotic laws.

Certainly there are excellent reason for wishing to be rid of these former criminals and troublemakers. But there are even more compelling reasons for objecting to the methods of elimination provided in the Hobbs bill. The constitutionality of the suggested procedure is open to question. But even if no such issue arose, forcible and indeterminate detention of persons not being tried for crime would be an imitation of Nazi concentration camps.

It is quite likely that no very serious abuses would result from passage of the bill, since the Secretary of Labor would be given large discretionary powers to release detained aliens for good cause. Nevertheless, legislation of this type has dangerous implications. As Representative MURDOCK of Utah said: "If the criminal may be condemned without a trial today, perhaps tomorrow the innocent man may be condemned." Similarly, if we condone the imprisonment of aliens, not as punishment for crime but because we wish to be rid of them, may we not find excuses for detaining undesirable groups of our own citizens?

The troubled state of the world is largely responsible for the presence in this country of aliens who have no homeland to which they can return. It is a situation which prevents the effective enforcement of our deportation laws and creates serious problems for the authorities. However, aliens who break our laws are punishable for the specific offenses they commit. Under the American system of government no man is subject to imprisonment merely because his past record makes him suspect.

Supporters of the Hobbs bill contend that it merely provides for a civil procedure and has nothing to do with crime and punishment. But since detention might continue indefinitely, it cannot be justified as merely incidental to deportation proceedings. This bill has been justly denounced as un-American and undemocratic—a negation of the policies and principles which we associate with liberal political institutions.

The editor may denounce this bill as un-American, as he does; he may denounce it as undemocratic, as he does. He may denounce it as a denial of those policies and principles which we associate with liberal political institutions, as he does.

If he had read the report which accompanied the bill, he would have learned that it applies to those criminal aliens, some of whom are prostitutes and some of whom are procurers, some of whom are purveyors of narcotics, who are in this country; who are criminals who cannot, because their native lands refuse to receive them, be deported to those lands.

Just what course would the writer of this editorial advise that America take with these alien criminals? Is it his suggestion—and apparently it is—that they be permitted to circulate freely among the decent citizens of our land and there ply their avocation? Just how many of these prostitutes and procurers, these sellers of narcotics, does he desire to harbor in his neighborhood, in his home?

Let me repeat, just what would he do with them?

One of the pastimes of editorial writers is the finding of fault with congressional enactments, but seldom do they point out a definite solution of any of the troubles which confront us as lawmakers.

Here is an opportunity for the editorial writer of the Post to make a suggestion, a practical suggestion, a suggestion which is in accord with American policy and which at the same time will protect our own people and solve this very perplexing problem which now confronts us.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, it was the plan to take up tomorrow the bill making appropriations for nonmilitary activities. I am informed that the committee cannot have its work printed by that time and therefore the bill will have to go over.

I have just conferred with the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, which has the call on Wednesday. They will not be ready at that time and it is agreeable to the chairman of the committee that follows the Rivers and Harbors Committee on the call of the calendar, for the business on the calendar for this week to be dispensed with.

So I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the business in order on Wednesday next may be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. I may say, Mr. Speaker, in lieu of that, the nonmilitary appropriations bill will be in the House on Wednesday.

This leaves us without any program for tomorrow and all the orators who desire to be heard may get unanimous consent to speak on that day.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, immediately following the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN], I may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I would like to announce that I shall not speak on the subject you might expect, as I am to follow the gentleman, Mr. DICKSTEIN, but rather on the subject of the T. V. A.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the legislative business for tomorrow has been disposed of, and after previous special orders have been concluded, I may be permitted to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA DAY

The SPEAKER. This is District of Columbia day, and the Chair recognizes the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH].

MILK INVESTIGATION

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the subcommittee handling the investigation of milk in the District of Columbia be allowed to sit during the session of the House this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

OPERATION OF CERTAIN GOVERNMENT-OWNED VEHICLES IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 5987) to amend the District of Columbia Traffic Act of 1925 (43 Stat. 1119), and ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subdivision (e) of section 7 of the District of Columbia Traffic Act, approved March 3, 1925 (43 Stat. 1119), is amended by changing the period to a colon after the words "under the provisions of this act" and adding the following: "Provided, That operators of Federal Government-owned vehicles stationed outside of the District of Columbia shall not be required to have or obtain the operators' permits referred to above while operating such vehicles within the limits of the District of Columbia on transient or temporary official business of the Federal Government."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, a number of Federal agencies are just outside the District of Columbia, and their activities at certain times require the use of cars going in and out of the District. This bill simply permits the drivers of those vehicles to operate such vehicles without obtaining a District permit.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

UNDERGROUND CONDUIT, DOCTORS' HOSPITAL, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 5801) to grant permission for the construction, maintenance, and use of a certain underground conduit for electrical lines in the District of Columbia, and ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia calls up the bill H. R. 5801 and asks unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to grant permission to the Doctors' Hospital, Inc., its successors and assigns, to lay down, construct, maintain, and use an underground conduit for electrical lines in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, from the building located at and known as 1815 Eye Street NW., directly south to the building located at and known as 1816 Eye Street NW.

SEC. 2. That all the construction and use provided for herein shall be under such regulations and rentals as the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may make and establish in connection therewith and all plans and specifications for such construction shall be subject to their approval. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall have full authority to designate the location and to cause such repairs or relocation of such conduit as the public necessity may require, any such repairs or relocation to be at the expense of the Doctors' Hospital, Inc., its successors or assigns.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, this measure merely grants authority for the construction of an underground conduit for electrical lines between 1815 and 1816 Eye Street, Washington, the two buildings to be occupied by the Doctors' Hospital, Inc.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

BENEFIT ASSESSMENTS FROM CONDEMNATION PROCEEDINGS

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 4745) relating to benefit assessments from condemnation proceedings for the opening, extension, widening, or straightening of alleys or minor streets, and ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia calls up the bill H. R. 4745, and asks unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in all condemnation proceedings instituted by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia in accordance with the provisions of sections 1608 to 1610 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia for the acquisition of land for the opening, extension, widening, or straightening of alleys or minor streets, all or any part of the entire amount found to be due and awarded by the jury in said proceedings as damages for, and in respect of, the land condemned, plus all or any part of the costs and expenses of said proceedings, may be assessed by the jury as benefits: Provided, however, That if the total amount of damages awarded by the jury in any such proceedings, plus the costs and expenses of said proceedings, be in excess of the total amount of benefits, it shall be optional with the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to abide by the verdict of the jury, or, at any time before the final ratification and confirmation of the verdict, to enter a voluntary dismissal of the cause: Provided, further, That if the total amount of damages awarded by the jury in any such proceedings, plus the costs and expenses of said proceedings, be in excess of the total amount of the assessment for benefits, any such excess in any verdict for the acquisition of land for minor streets or alleys shall be paid out of the appropriation available for the payment of damages awarded and costs incurred under said verdict.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, this bill relates to condemnation proceedings in the District of Columbia. Under existing law it is necessary that damages be awarded, plus all costs and expenses to be assessed by the jury as benefits. Under this measure benefits would continue to be assessed but it would not be necessary for the benefits to equal the damages plus the costs and expenses. The bill has the approval of the Commissioners and of the Bureau of the Budget.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

CHARLOTTE E. HUNTER

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 5516) for the relief of Charlotte E. Hunter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia calls up the bill H. R. 5516, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions and limitations of the act entitled "An act for the retirement of public-school teachers in the District of Columbia," approved January 15, 1920, as amended, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to place on the retirement list of teachers retired under the provisions of such act the name of Charlotte E. Hunter, formerly a teacher in the public schools of the District of Columbia, and to pay, out of the fund established by such act, to the said Charlotte E. Hunter an annuity computed as provided in such act, as amended; and the said Charlotte E. Hunter shall be accredited with and entitled to count, for such purposes, in addition to all other periods of service to which she may be lawfully entitled, the period of her employment as such school teacher from February 5, 1895, to April 12, 1919, both dates inclusive. Payment of such annuity shall begin from the date of enactment of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SALE OF PISTOLS, ETC., IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 4653) to amend an act entitled "An act to control the possession, sale, transfer, and use of pistols and other dangerous weapons in the District of Columbia, to provide penalties, to prescribe rules of evidence, and for other purposes," approved July 8, 1932, and ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia calls up the bill H. R. 4653, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act of Congress entitled "An act to control the possession, sale, transfer, and use of pistols and other dangerous weapons in the District of Columbia, to provide penalties, to prescribe rules of evidence, and for other purposes," approved July 8, 1932, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. If any person shall commit a crime of violence in the District of Columbia when armed with or having readily available any firearm, knife, razor, or other dangerous weapon of any kind, he shall, for a first conviction for a crime so committed, in addition to the punishment provided for the crime, be punished by imprisonment for a term of 5 years; and for a second or subsequent conviction for a crime of violence so committed, he shall, in addition to the punishment provided for the crime, be punished by imprisonment for a term of 10 years."

SEC. 2. Section 8 of said act of Congress, approved July 8, 1932, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 8. Except in the case of sales to marshals, sheriffs, prison wardens, or their deputies, policemen, or other duly appointed law-enforcement officers, no seller shall within the District of Columbia deliver a pistol to the purchaser thereof, nor shall any purchaser accept the delivery of any pistol within the District of Columbia until such purchaser has secured from the major and superintendent of police for the District of Columbia a permit authorizing such purchaser to purchase said pistol, and when delivered said pistol shall be securely wrapped and shall be unloaded. At the time of applying for such permit the purchaser shall deliver to the major and superintendent of police a statement under oath in such form as the major and superintendent of police shall prescribe, containing the purchaser's full name, address, occupation, color, and place of birth, the seller's full name, address, and occupation, the caliber, make, model, and manufacturer's number of the pistol to be purchased, and a statement that the purchaser has never been convicted in the District of Columbia or elsewhere of a crime of violence. No permit shall be issued by the major and superintendent of police for the purchase of any pistol until he is satisfied that the purchaser is a suitable person to possess the same. No machine gun, sawed-off shotgun, or blackjack shall be sold to any person other than the persons designated in section 14 hereof as entitled to possess the same, and then only after permission to make such sale has been obtained from the superintendent of police of the District of Columbia. This section shall not apply to sales by wholesale to licensed dealers.

"Every person possessing a pistol in the District of Columbia at the time of the passage and approval of this act shall, within 60 days after the passage and approval of this act, present such pistol to the major and superintendent of police to be registered by the major and superintendent of police in a manner satisfactory to him. Every person purchasing or bringing into the District of Columbia a pistol after the passage and approval of this act shall, within 10 days after the purchase of such pistol or the bringing of such pistol into the District of Columbia, present the same to the major and superintendent of police to be registered by him as above provided. Every person possessing a pistol in the District of Columbia shall present the same to the major and superintendent of police for inspection and ballistic tests whenever called upon by said major and superintendent of police so to do."

SEC. 3. Section 11 of said act approved July 8, 1932, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 11. No person shall, in applying for a license to purchase a pistol or to carry the same, and no person shall in purchasing a machine gun, sawed-off shotgun, or blackjack within the District of Columbia, give false information or offer false evidence of his identity."

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 3, insert after the word "knife" the words "with a blade over 3 inches".

Page 2, lines 4 and 5, after the word "shall", in line 4, strike out the words "for a first conviction for a crime so committed."

Page 2, line 6, insert after the word "of" the words "not more than."

Page 2, line 7, strike out the words "and for a second or subsequent" and insert in lieu thereof the words "upon a second".

Page 2, line 10, strike out the words "10 years" and insert in lieu thereof "not more than 10 years; upon a third conviction for a crime of violence so committed he shall, in addition to the punishment provided for the crime, be punished by imprisonment for a term of not more than 15 years; upon a fourth or subsequent conviction for a crime of violence so committed he shall, in addition to the punishment provided for the crime, be punished by imprisonment for an additional period of not more than 30 years."

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I think it is due the membership of the House in connection with a measure of this kind to report that the Committee on the District of Columbia gave very careful consideration to the measure which was presented to us for consideration by our colleague the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SCHULTE], a member of the committee. The bill requires the securing of a permit before a pistol can be purchased in the District of Columbia and requires the registering of all of the pistols that are already owned. The bill further makes mandatory a prison sentence for any person committing a crime of violence while armed with a dangerous weapon.

I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the committee amendments will be agreed to.

There was no objection; and the committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ESTABLISHMENT OF PROBATION SYSTEM FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 4654) to amend an act entitled "An act for the establishment of a probation system for the District of Columbia," approved June 25, 1910, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act of Congress entitled "An act for the establishment of a probation system for the District of Columbia," approved June 25, 1910, be, and the same hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That said District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia shall have power in any case, except those involving treason, homicide, rape, arson, kidnaping, violation of section 2 of the Firearms Act for the District of Columbia, approved July 8, 1932, or a second conviction of a felony, after conviction or after a plea of guilty of a felony or misdemeanor and after the imposition of a sentence thereon but before commitment, and the said police court shall have like power, after a conviction or a plea of guilty in any case of misdemeanor, to place the defendant upon probation: Provided, That it shall appear to the satisfaction of the court that the ends of justice and the best interests of the public as well as of the defendant would be subserved thereby, and may suspend the imposition or execution of the sentence, as the case may be, for such time and upon such terms as it may deem best and place the defendant in charge of a probation officer. The probationer shall be provided by the clerk of the court with a written statement of the terms and conditions of his probation at the time when he is placed thereon. He shall observe the rules prescribed for his conduct by the court and report to the probation officer as directed. No person shall be put on probation except with his or her consent."

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the House Calendar. Does the gentleman desire recognition?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Just for a moment, Mr. Speaker.

I may say to the membership, Mr. Speaker, that this is rather a companion measure to the one we have just passed. The bill prevents the placing on probation of those who have committed a crime of violence in the District of Columbia while armed, or having readily available a dangerous weapon.

I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, that concludes the bills which the Committee on the District of Columbia had to present this morning.

NATIONAL PRESS CLUB OUTING

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one moment.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, as a former president of the National Press Club, I have been asked by my colleagues in the press gallery to announce that the National Press Club invites all Members of the House to attend its outing, to be held on the grounds of the Charles Town Jockey Club at Charles Town, W. Va., on next Saturday, May 13.

Many of you no doubt have heard of the elaborate program that has been arranged, including special trains to leave Union Station shortly after noon. Tickets may be obtained from the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives. I am sure it will be a most enjoyable occasion, and I join in an expression of hope that as many Members will attend as possible.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I just want to add to the announcement made by our colleague from Indiana that the outing is to be held at Charles Town, Jefferson County, W. Va., which is in the congressional district which I have the pleasure and the responsibility to represent. I can assure you that all Members who accompany the press to West Virginia on that day will be given a royal, wholehearted welcome.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague [Mr. HOFFMAN] may have permission to revise and extend his remarks in connection with the editorial which he received permission to insert in the RECORD earlier in the day.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

EXPLANATION

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask that I be recorded in favor of the Hobbs bill in connection with the detention camps, which was passed last Friday.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman seeking a correction of the RECORD?

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. No, sir. I want the RECORD to show that were I present I would have voted for the bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSON TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, following other special orders heretofore entered, I may address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include therein an editorial from the Portland Oregonian, by Mr. Calvert, which received the Pulitzer award in 1938; also an additional editorial from the same paper commenting thereon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RECESS

The SPEAKER. In order that the House may, in a few moments, receive His Excellency the President of Nicaragua, under previous order of the House, the Speaker declares the House in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

At 12:30 o'clock p. m. the House stood in recess, subject to the call of the Speaker.

During the recess the following occurred:

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the acting chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM], and the ranking minority member, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], as a committee to escort our distinguished visitor to the rostrum.

The committee escorted into the Chamber, His Excellency General Anastasio Somoza, President of Nicaragua, accompanied by the following: Dr. Manuel Cordero Reyes, Minister of Foreign Affairs of Nicaragua; First Lt. Octavio Sacasa, aide; Second Lt. Pedro Nolasco Romero, aide; Col. Charles B. Elliott, American military aide to President Somoza; Capt. Ernest L. Gunther, American naval aide to President Somoza; the Honorable George T. Summerlin, the Chief of Protocol, Department of State; the Honorable León De Bayle, Minister of Nicaragua at Washington.

The SPEAKER. I have the honor of presenting to the Members of the House our distinguished guest, His Excellency General Anastasio Somoza, President of Nicaragua. [Applause, the Members rising.]

His Excellency the President of Nicaragua.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT OF NICARAGUA. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House of Representatives, permit me to express my extreme gratification over being present at this session of the House of Representatives of the United States, where I have been so warmly welcomed.

You may be assured that the people of Nicaragua will duly appreciate this act, which in itself demonstrates the existence of a robust international democracy among the nations of this hemisphere.

In fact, the conversations I have just had with President Roosevelt, in an atmosphere of perfect cordiality and frankness, and the reception accorded me today by both Houses of Congress, show the effective practice of the principles the American nations have enunciated on various occasions to guide their conduct in the development of their mutual relations.

Actually at this time we are offering the light of a consoling hope to a world in turmoil, for it is encouraging to witness the friendly meeting of the Chief Executives of two countries, so unequal in size and material resources, to discuss the coordination of their common interests on a basis of equity and reciprocal understanding. This can only be explained by a triumph of the principles of mutual respect and cooperation which constitute the one firm basis for peace, prosperity, and security among nations. [Applause.]

In the formation of this American spirit, not only human forces capable of making history have intervened, but also the inevitable influence of natural factors, such as the continuity of territory, its isolation by the two greatest oceans, and other factors which contribute to give the Americas the characteristics of a well-defined entity.

Under the influence of these forces and other contributory circumstances a certain consciousness of international solidarity became manifest when the American peoples began their struggle for independence and liberty. This found its emotional and theoretical expression in the desires and principles formulated by just and far-sighted statesmen—desires and principles instinctively accepted by the people, later put into practice in the great events of our struggle for freedom.

As a consequence, no action, policy, or doctrine of the American peoples could be in the past, nor can be in the future, absolutely individualistic or isolating. In this sense the substance of your Monroe Doctrine is the binding of the security of the United States to that of the other American nations. It is true that you proclaimed this doctrine for your own protection, but it is also true that it has rendered meritorious service to your neighbors of the south. [Applause.]

It is undeniable that the lofty spirit which has guided inter-American relations, has at times been discouraged or ignored; but these episodes, natural in every important human process, have been transitory and do not diminish the nobility of the general picture of progress.

Outstanding in this picture are: The adoption by the American nations of a cooperative and liberal commercial policy; the acknowledgment, in existing treaties, of the principle of nonintervention; the recognition of the solidarity of the American states, made by the Resolution of Buenos Aires in 1936, and the Declaration of Lima in 1938; the determination to make this solidarity effective in defending the material and spiritual integrity of the Americas; and the declaration that inter-American cooperation is an indispensable condition for the maintenance of the aforementioned principles in this hemisphere.

When the panorama of such an international order is contemplated, pride on our part is fully justified.

The question now arises of discovering how can we perfect that order of relationship which is so essential and suitable to the needs of each and every one of our countries. Solidarity—which, in the Americas is a result of circumstances rather than an artificial creation—compels us to consider the misfortune of one of our nations as the misfortune of all. But solidarity also means that the material and spiritual well-being of each of us is of interest and of benefit to all. Active cooperation thus becomes the fruitful corollary of interdependence. It is therefore in an effective cooperation and not merely in the romantic expression of sentiments of solidarity that we should look for the practical sense and true value of pan-Americanism.

And now, may I take this opportunity to remind you that Nicaragua made a valuable contribution to the security of the Americas a long time ago. That was when she determined to share the advantages of her geographical configuration offering a transit route between both oceans, only in collaboration with the nations of this continent. [Applause.] It is fitting to note also that in the development of this policy of effective cooperation, Nicaragua—more than a quarter of a century ago—signed a treaty with the United States, for the purpose of ceding optional rights to the construction of an interoceanic canal across her territory; and for other objectives relating to your defense, which is likewise our own.

I hope that the importance of this contribution of Nicaragua to the security of the Americas will be duly considered and appreciated in a readjustment of our relations so that the benefits and advantages of the most valuable natural resource of my country—precisely the one that can exercise the greatest influence on her development and progress—may not be nullified. [Applause.]

The strongest basis for these hopes rests upon President Roosevelt's good-neighbor policy. Inspired by a profound sense of fitness, this policy not only embodies the elements proper to any honorable relationship but also the most effective means of solving, in peaceful and cordial collaboration, the great problems of common interest. And in its practical application, shows that our countries—whether they be large or small—can be considered today as an association of free nations, organized under a system that insures to each of them due attention to the needs of their existence and of their progress. If further proof were needed, my visit to this country, and the warm reception you have given me, supplies it. [Applause.]

These happy circumstances therefore lead us to believe that perhaps the high mission of the Americas is to offer to mankind an example of the feasibility of a life based on freedom and humanitarianism. Your Nation has already undertaken the leading role which belongs to you in this common task. Without forgetting that Nicaragua's material possibilities are limited, you may be sure that my country will omit no effort or sacrifice in order to contribute her share in the wide field of spiritual action. [Applause.]

And so, with my heart filled with confidence in the nobility of human destiny, let me salute, through their representatives, the people of this great Nation. [Applause, the Members rising.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair may say that His Excellency will stand in the Well of the House and will be delighted to meet the Members of the House of Representatives as they are presented by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM], the acting chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

His Excellency the President of Nicaragua stood in the Well of the House and was presented to the Members individually by Mr. BLOOM.

AFTER THE RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker at 1:15 o'clock p. m.

PRINTING OF PROCEEDINGS

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the proceedings held during the recess will be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a resolution passed by the Legislature of Texas.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BARRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech by Mr. James A. Roe, the Democratic leader of Queens County, N. Y., on the future of the Democratic Party.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HILL asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, after the completion of the legislative program for the day and the other special orders, that I may address the House for 20 minutes on the subject The Only Way to Peace.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

NAVY DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL, 1940

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6149) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 6149, the Navy Department appropriation bill, 1940, with Mr. Cox in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

STATE MARINE SCHOOLS, ACT OF MARCH 4, 1911

To reimburse the State of California, $25,000; the State of Massachusetts, $25,000; the State of New York, $25,000; and the State of Pennsylvania, $25,000, for expenses incurred in the maintenance and support of marine schools in such States as provided in the act authorizing the establishment of marine schools, etc., approved March 4, 1911 (34 U. S. C. 1121), and for the maintenance and repair of the particular vessels loaned by the United States to the said States on the date of the approval of this act for use in connection with such State marine schools, $90,000, and no other vessels shall be furnished by or through the Navy Department; in all, $190,000.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the paragraph just read is the first of many we shall pass upon this afternoon in the consideration of this all time high annual naval appropriation bill. It provides for an expenditure of $770,473,241. In that amount is $254,-204,712 for the shipbuilding program, under way and proposed. We are told that next year there will be needed for the shipbuilding program, not taking into account any new units to be laid down in the fiscal year 1941, $370,489,000. Think of it. That amount alone is more than was appropriated for the entire Navy in an annual appropriation bill over the period 1923 to 1935, both inclusive, with the exception of 1931, and the bill for that year carried $380,000,000 plus. But that is not all.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLEOD. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. I assume the gentleman attended all the hearings on this bill. Was the committee at any time told against whom we were arming?

Mr. McLEOD. We were not.

Mr. KNUTSON. We must be arming against the world, judging by the size of this bill and what is to follow.

Mr. McLEOD. I thank the gentleman for his observation and will discuss that point in just a moment.

This bill carries contractural authority, which will need to be met next year, amounting to $50,708,050. Therefore, what will the approval of this bill mean? It will mean laying the foundation for the next succeeding bill to carry the staggering total of $937,465,579; and mark you, that does not allow a single dollar for expansion in a single direction but shipbuilding, and in that direction only as to units heretofore laid down and to be laid down, under this bill, during 1940.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McLEOD. I yield.

Mr. TABER. The gentleman means that if this bill is approved as presented, that next year's bill will be at least $937,000,000?

Mr. McLEOD. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. TABER. That is almost three times what it was in 1923.

Mr. McLEOD. The gentleman is correct.

Why should we now commit ourselves to such a program? Is there a threat to our security? What did Admiral Leahy say in response to my question as to whether or not the new shipbuilding program was influenced by conditions in Europe or other situations which dictated a better measure of preparation? This is what he said, on page 886 of the hearings:

> The present building program of the United States is based upon the building programs of other naval powers and not upon the imminence of war in the near future.

Mr. Chairman, nobody will vote a dollar quicker than I for building up our land, sea, and air forces to dimensions which will assure our security, or for accelerating such expansion if the reasons for so doing are convincing. The record, however, is not convincing. The more one studies the record the more one is forced to the view that the administration does not anticipate our becoming involved in war; that it envisions no immediate threat to America or to the Americas.

In the first place, if war were considered to be imminent, would the administration be advocating building 45,000-ton battleships and other large units which will take many years to build? Owing to inadequate facilities the actual building of one of these battleships cannot be commenced for more than a year and it will take 5 years after that before it could take its place in the battle line. Does that sound like a need prevails for immediate preparation? If war were imminent, would we be clogging up our limited shipbuilding facilities with construction which we would have to abandon? Would we be tying up industry, skilled craftsmen, transportation facilities, and what not, in directions which would sorely hamper us should there be a call to arms? The answer is obvious. We would not.

I invite your attention to another consideration. The Navy is the first line of defense. Last year Congress increased the strength of the naval air arm from 2,050 to not less than 3,000 useful airplanes. Congress this year raised to 6,000 the airplane strength of the Army. Now get this: Estimates have been presented for the procurement of the Army's entire new quota, which will mean an annual expense of more than $200,000,000 to maintain, and what is the plan as to the Navy's new quota—the force supposed to contact the enemy first? On page 666 of our hearings, Admiral Cook says, "The procurement will be spread over a period of 5 years," meaning for Navy airplanes. Does that sound like war is thought to be imminent?

Consider then, if you please, the matter of personnel. It takes many months to train a raw recruit for duty aboard ship. It takes much time, as many of us here know by actual experience, to train a soldier for modern warfare. The Navy is supposed to afford some leeway for qualifying the gob. But what does this bill before you provide for? Except as to vessels on the Asiatic station and submarines, it provides for manning aircraft carriers with 90 percent of their full complements and all other vessels with approximately 85 percent. For Reserves of the seagoing branch you will not find in this bill provision for active duty training for a single man above the number currently provided for to be given such training, and yet it is to the Reserve force we should look for filling the gaps in the crews of vessels presently commissioned and for supplying crews for the many decommissioned vessels which would need to be placed in commission just as rapidly as they could be gotten ready.

What is the answer, gentlemen? Do not the facts I have presented raise a doubt in your minds that we are being stampeded into laying unnecessarily large burdens upon the present and generations to come upon the false premise of a war threat?

I maintain, Mr. Chairman, that if there be such a threat, this bill should be returned to the committee with instructions to provide for its shortcomings. On other other hand, if this be merely a part of a spending orgy, prompted by veiled influences, then I say let us lift the mask and go forward with our defense programs in an orderly and sensible way.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, it was said on the floor the other day in general debate on the Navy bill by two or three speakers that they were in favor of this bill because they were Americans. I am opposed to the bill and I am going to vote against it if I get a chance because I am just an American.

This is not a defense measure. We would not be spending this money if we were thinking only of protecting our own shores. I will not go into detail with reference to that because I want to speak of some other influences that present themselves at this time in connection with the passage of the pending bill. There are about 50 Members of the House on the floor and there will not be any more unless there is a roll call demanded, but, of course, there will be an effort to prevent that. Nobody is paying any attention to it. As a matter of fact, it passed out of the whole Appropriations Committee in about 20 minutes without a question being raised with reference to a single amendment. That is how we spend money under the color of national defense. These $93,000,000 battleships would not be voted by anybody on a referendum; however, there are two of them provided in this bill.

I want to emphasize one particular thing. Today another body is considering an agricultural appropriation bill, which was raised about $400,000,000 over the amount provided by the House. It will be back here for our consideration shortly on certain conference items. W. P. A. hearings are being held to investigate the W. P. A. and how much money should be spent for next year. They are going to say this is the big spending week; if you can spend it for the Navy, you can spend it for the farmers, you can spend it for the W. P. A., you can spend it for anything. There is no defense left against wild spending when you appropriate $93,000,000 for a battleship and an unlimited Navy.

I want to emphasize this psychology. They will break us down in our efforts for economy in holding the farm bill down, the W. P. A. down, everything down, when, without any consideration, we pass a Navy bill providing for three-quarters of a billion dollars, which is not merely for national defense either.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, we are considering an appropriation bill this afternoon for the Navy providing for the sum of $770,473,241. When we do this we should make a comparison, it seems to me, with the amount appropriated for the Navy last year, which was approximately $576,000,000. In other words, the increase this year over the amount appropriated last year is something like $224,606,748. Next year it will increase two hundred and fifty million over this year and by 1945, at the rate we are going, the naval bill will run to the enormous sum of a billion and a half. In this appropriation bill there is included three and a half million dollars for the laying down of the keels of two great 45,000-ton battleships—the largest battleships afloat. It is reported that each of these battleships will cost $93,000,000. That is the statement by the chairman of the Subcommittee on Appropriations, but there are other members of the subcommittee who have made statements in the full Appropriations Committee to the effect that the cost of these battleships will run near $115,000,000 each.

May I ask some of the members of the subcommittee, if we make this appropriation for the laying down of these two keels, how much more will the naval appropriation be next year than this appropriation bill? How many more hundreds of millions of dollars will the Navy appropriation bill for 1941 be over and above what it is for 1940? Can anybody answer that question?

Mr. McLEOD. I will answer the question. It will be $938,000,000.

Mr. RICH. There is a member of the subcommittee who says that in 1941 the naval appropriation bill will be $938,000,000, which will increase the naval appropriations for that year practically $170,000,000 more than this year's appropriation—a great increase.

Mr. Chairman, we are just pyramiding and pyramiding each of our appropriation bills as they come before the Congress. There seems to be no concern among the leaders of Members of the Congress with reference to where we are going to get the money to pay the bill.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, if a tailor wants to make a suit of clothes for an individual, he will first take the measurements of that individual, then cut the cloth to fit. When a person wants to spend money he figures out how much he has to spend and then he only spends what he has. What do we do here in Congress? We come in here and appropriate, appropriate, and appropriate. There is no one here who cares a tinker's hoot where we are going to get the money to take care of these spendings, this enormous debt we are creating. Your children and my children and children yet unborn are going to have to pay for the foolishness this administration is heaping upon the heads of our future generations. Here we have men who are supposed to be intelligent, men of ability who do not have that degree of business-like aptitude to go ahead and try to figure out if it is possible for us to secure the funds before we make the appropriation.

The leaders of the Democratic Party have not made any attempt whatever to even come close to a balanced Budget. You have not heard any of them say a word about it at this session of this Congress. Why? Why do not they assume any responsibility to balance the income with the outgo?

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. Is it the policy of the Committee on Appropriations to give every department that comes up here everything they ask for?

Mr. RICH. I will say that we have a lot of men on the Appropriations Committee who are honest and hard-working, and they try to cut down appropriations, but not the majority. I cannot blame all the men on the Appropriations Committee, but I do wish to say that the Appropriations Committee should not permit the various bureaus to have everything they want. It ought to be the desire of the Appropriations Committee to say, "Gentlemen, we do not have the money. You are not trying to raise the money, and we can only give you so much"; but we do not do that in the Appropriations Committee, I am sorry to say. I have not heard the chairman of the committee say one word about economy in appropriations during this session.

Mr. KNUTSON. It would seem that these "rubber stamp" Congresses are coming pretty high.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman said a minute ago there is not a Member in the House who gives a tinker's hoot where the money is coming from. The gentleman is generally quite accurate and at times conservative. Does not the gentleman believe he has slightly overreached himself in that statement?

Mr. RICH. I will say that applies to the majority of the Members in power on the Democratic side who have positions of responsibility. I believe all the Members have some idea that they would like to have this country a solvent nation, but we do not put the teeth into it that we could, when we have these various departments of government with these bureaucrats who are intrenching themselves so they think they can get anything out of the Members of Congress because they are all good fellows. I am for national defense, but I am not for the great waste that is going on here in our Congress; it is appalling; it is just disastrous. We must have a little more backbone and not be so wishy-washy in making our disbursements to the various bureaus. [Applause.]

Mr. MILLER. What good will our Navy be to us, if we crash due to the wild spending of the past 6 years?

Mr. RICH. If we keep on for 6 years more as we have in our spending and creating our great national deficit, we will surely sink the country, and the Navy will sink with us, then what will it accomplish for our American people? Nothing but disaster. That is what is ahead of us unless we do differently than we have the past 6 years.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pay of naval personnel: For pay and allowances prescribed by law of officers on sea duty and other duty, and officers on waiting orders, pay $37,037,664, including not to exceed $1,887,045 for increased pay for making aerial flights, no part of which shall be available for increased pay for making aerial flights by more than five officers above the rank of captain, nor by nonflying officers or observers at rates in excess of those prescribed by law for the Army, which shall be the legal maximum rates as to such nonflying officers or observers; rental allowance, $7,698,476; subsistence allowance, $4,657,071; in all, $49,393,211; officers on the retired list, $9,801,590; for hire of quarters for officers serving with troops where there are no public quarters belonging to the Government, and where there are not sufficient quarters possessed by the United States to accommodate them, and hire of quarters for officers and enlisted men on sea duty at such times as they may be deprived of their quarters on board ship due to repairs or other conditions which may render them uninhabitable, $7,865; pay of enlisted men on the retired list, $9,452,619; interest on deposits by men, $8,400; pay of petty officers (not to exceed an average of 9,044 chief petty officers, of which number those with a permanent appointment as chief petty officer shall not exceed an average of 7,900), seamen, landsmen, and apprentice seamen, including men in the engineer's force and men detailed for duty with the Bureau of Fisheries, enlisted men, men in trade schools, pay of enlisted men of the Hospital Corps, extra pay for men as authorized by law, and cash prizes (not to exceed $113,050) for men for excellence in gunnery, target practice, communication, and engineering competitions, $96,252,950; outfits for all enlisted men and apprentice seamen of the Navy on first enlistment, civilian clothing not to exceed $15 per man to men given discharges for bad conduct of undesirability or inaptitude, reimbursement in kind of clothing to persons in the Navy for losses in cases of marine or aircraft disasters or in the operation of water- or air-borne craft, and the authorized issue of clothing and equipment to the members of the Nurse Corps, $2,195,222; pay of enlisted men undergoing sentence of court martial, $35,445, and as many machinists as the President may from time to time deem necessary to appoint; pay and allowances of the Nurse Corps, including assistant superintendents, directors, and assistant directors—pay, $545,740; rental allowance, $38,400; subsistence allowance, $24,156; pay retired list, $315,333; in all, $923,629; rent of quarters for members of the Nurse Corps; pay and allowances of transferred and assigned men of the Fleet Naval Reserve, $15,144,575; reimbursement for losses of property as provided in the act approved October 6, 1917 (34 U. S. C. 981, 982), as amended by the act of March 3, 1927 (34 U. S. C. 983), $10,000; payment of 6 months' death gratuity, $230,039; in all, $183,455,545; and, except during war or national emergency declared by the President to exist, no part of such sum shall be available to pay active-duty pay and allowances to officers on the retired list, except 9 for assignments filed on September 30, 1937, 3 for duty with the Maritime Commission, and 1 additional, and except retired officers temporarily ordered to active duty as members of retiring and selection boards as authorized by law: Provided, That, except for the public quarters occupied by the Chief of Office of Naval Operations, the Superintendent of the Naval Academy, and the Commandant of the Marine Corps, and messes temporarily set up on shore for officers attached to seagoing vessels, to aviation units based on seagoing vessels including officers' messes at the fleet air bases, and to landing forces and expeditions, and in addition not to exceed 40 in number at such places as shall be designated by the Secretary of the Navy, no appropriation contained in this act shall be available for the pay, allowances, or other expenses of any enlisted man or civil employee performing service in the residence or quarters of an officer or officers on shore as a cook, waiter, or other work of a character performed by a household servant, but nothing herein shall be construed as preventing the voluntary employment in any such capacity of a retired enlisted man or a transferred member of the Fleet Naval Reserve without additional expense to the Government, nor the sale of meals to officers by general messes on shore as regulated by detailed instructions from the Navy Department.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. SCRUGHAM: On page 25, line 14, commencing with the word "except", strike out all matter down to the word "and", at the end of line 16 of such page, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "except eight for assignments filled on September 30, 1937, exclusive of the assignment at the naval mine depot, Yorktown, Va., three for duty exclusively with the Maritime Commission, two for duty exclusively on the naval petroleum reserves, and one for duty at the Naval Gun Factory, Washington, D. C."

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the amendment is to permit of the transfer of a retired officer from the naval mine depot to the Naval Gun Factory, and to permit of the employment of three retired officers with the Maritime Commission and two retired officers upon duty in connection with the naval petroleum reserves.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EATON of California. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the Subcommittee on Appropriations handling this bill to page 25, line 16, and to the words "and one additional." I understand that at the present time the Navy Department has nine retired Navy officers who are now on the active list on various assignments to certain committees and to other places.

In lines 15 and 16, three more retired Navy officers will be placed on active duty with the Maritime Commission, and the one additional officer, I am informed, is to be assigned as field representative in charge of the western area of the Navy Petroleum Division to take the place now held by Commander William G. Greenman, who goes to sea next month. The Navy Petroleum Division is now headed by Capt. Harry A. Stuart here in Washington.

I should like to read to the Committee about some of the activities of Commander Greenman, whose place this retired officer may take, and I read this article appearing in the Long Beach Independent of May 1, 1939. The heading is this: "Chamber Protests Navy Man's Nye Bill Stand."

The article goes on to state:

The aggressive activities of Commander William G. Greenman in advocating federalization of submerged oil lands of the Pacific coast, which were first called to public attention recently by the Independent, has brought a sharp protest from the local chamber of commerce.

In a resolution adopted last week by directors of the chamber an appeal is made to the Navy Department in Washington, urging that Commander Greenman be induced to cease his "political activity" in the matter.

Commander Greenman, Naval Reserve officer, is field representative in charge of the western area of the Navy Petroleum Division, under Capt. Harry A. Stuart.

Then I should like to read just a part of a letter received from Charles S. Henderson, who is chairman of the official committee of the city of Long Beach:

Hon. THOMAS M. EATON,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR TOM: We are constantly being presented with reactions from the work of Commander William G. Greenman, whom we are informed is a representative of the Navy Department of the United States Government, and we cannot believe that his activities can be a part of the program of the Navy Department. We find that Mr. Greenman is spending a great portion of his time addressing various political organizations, as well as other groups, in an attempt to have them pass resolutions that we feel are detrimental to the interests of our city and our State.

Then I should like to read just a brief excerpt from the report of a meeting held in Sacramento, Calif., of the American Legion:

In presentation of the Navy Department's attitude on this important matter, Commander Tennyson went over the same grounds covered by Commander William G. Greenman—

These are the words I want you to get—in whose official car he came to Sacramento.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to call your attention to these particular words, "by Commander William G. Greenman, in whose official car he came to Sacramento."

I ask you, Since when have Navy officers been permitted to ride all over the State of California for the purpose of lobbying at Legion conventions for or against any bill pending in Congress? I want to know whether when Commander Greenman goes to sea next month his successor is going to carry on the same political activities as did Greenman, his predecessor.

As I condemn the activities of this one Navy officer I wish to say I have the highest respect for Navy officers generally. As a former mayor of the city of Long Beach, Calif., I have met with many, many officers of the Navy from the commanders in chief down for the last 5 years. Without exception, these officers have made it a rule never to mix in city, county, or State affairs, and I ask you, Why should the Navy Department at this time permit Greenman or his successor to be an exception to this rule?

I am asking the members of the Appropriations Committee and the members of my own committee, the Committee on Naval Affairs, to use their influence with the Navy Department to see that such political activities on the part of a Navy officer such as the one to whom I have referred be stopped and stopped now. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

PUBLIC WORKS, BUREAU OF YARDS AND DOCKS

For public works and public utilities, Bureau of Yards and Docks, $52,381,550, which, together with the unexpended balances of appropriations heretofore made under this head, shall be disbursed and accounted for in accordance with existing law and shall constitute one fund, which fund shall be available for the payment of obligations incurred under the provisions of sections 3 and 4 of the act approved April 25, 1939 (Public, No. 43, 76th Cong.), insofar as they relate to naval public works and utilities projects and for part-time and intermittent employment by contract of scientists, technicists, and other personnel, and payment of travel expenses of members of the Naval Reserve ordered to active duty: Provided, That of the amount herein appropriated under this head $10,000,000 shall be immediately available: Provided further, That not to exceed 2½ percent of the aggregate amount available on July 1, 1939, shall be available for the employment of classified personal services in the Bureau of Yards and Docks and in the field service to be engaged upon such work and to be in addition to employees otherwise provided for: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to commence, continue, or complete the construction of, or make provision for, by contract or otherwise, projects heretofore authorized and appropriated for under this head, and, in addition, the following-named public works and public utilities projects at a limit of cost not to exceed the amount stated for each project enumerated, respectively:

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer three amendments, one relating to the paragraph just read and two relating to the next succeeding paragraph, but all relating to a single proposition, and I ask unanimous consent that they may be read and the three amendments considered together.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nevada?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendments offered by Mr. SCRUGHAM: On page 39, line 7, strike out "$52,381,550" and insert in lieu thereof "$55,328,550."

On page 40, line 13, after the words "Kaneohe Bay, Hawaii" insert the words "Midway Island, Johnston Island, Palmyra Island."

On page 40, line 18, strike out "$55,400,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$63,000,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Navy Yard, Norfolk, Va.: Storehouse and accessories for battleship materials and equipment, $225,000; subassembly building and accessories for new ship construction, $600,000; additional power generation and distribution for new ship construction, $1,025,000; railroad cars for handling shipbuilding materials, $80,000.

Mr. DARDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I listened with great interest several days ago to the general debate on this bill, which carries appropriations for the naval establishments of the United States.

My primary interest arose out of provisions being made for the navy yard located in Portsmouth, Va., and the naval operating base on Hampton Roads at Norfolk, Va.

As the Members of the House know, this area has since colonial days been the scene of naval operations. The great navy yard located on the Elizabeth River was started long before the Revolution. For many years it has been one of the most important bases of our fleet, and we now have there a great industrial establishment capable of serving our modern fleet.

The improvements provided for the yard in this bill are of great importance in that they are necessary to carry on the shipbuilding program which has been in progress at the yard since 1934. In that year it was our hope that we should by modest increases of our fleet be able to meet the needs of this arm of national defense. Unfortunately, such has not been the case, and we are faced today with the greatest naval building program ever undertaken by this country.

This program is necessary. We cannot do otherwise. We live today in an era of international anarchy, and only those will survive who are able to protect themselves. Tyranny and oppression stalk across the world. Only one thing can guarantee for the time being the safety of our people, and that is the ability of our armed forces to defend us. These forces must be strong—strong beyond the point of question—because weakness there means destruction for us.

Among other great improvements being authorized by this bill is the doubling in size of the area of the naval-operation base referred to earlier. This strategically located base was constructed on Hampton Roads before and during the World War. It was one of the first of our air stations. The work about to be done there will insure its adequacy and availability.

While, as I have said, my first interest lay in these items, I was, however, impressed with the observations of several of our friends on the other side of the House, who professed to be greatly alarmed by what they seem to feel to be a disposition of the administration to urge us along the path leading to war.

Such observations seem to me to be utterly without foundation. Nor are they, I fear, despite the protests of the speakers, unbiased and nonpartisan expressions.

On the contrary, this bill, with the huge sums carried by it, is being used as a means of calling into question the foreign policy of the country and the intentions of the President.

It is unfortunate that an attempt should be made, particularly at this time, to embarrass a Chief Executive whom I believe to be as genuinely concerned about preserving peace both here and abroad as any Member of this House.

The ships and other facilities carried in this bill are necessary for our own protection. The measure deserves our support on this alone.

It is, I think, most unwise to attempt to discredit it by inferring that it is in fact but part and parcel of a general scheme to involve us in Europe. Particularly is this true when we consider that the battleships here appropriated for will not be able to join the fleet for 5 years, and when 3 years will be required for the building and equipping of most of the other ships.

There is no indication that this administration is departing in the least from that course which is known to be the desire of the great majority of our people, namely, such a course as will tend to forward the cause of peace abroad and, if humanly possible, to guarantee peace as far as the United States is concerned.

From the beginning the President of the United States has devoted himself to this end, and I believe that the great majority of us, regardless of party lines, believe this to be the case.

An attempt here to make the country feel otherwise tends in no way to promote that confidence and security which all of us desire.

In the end the issue of peace or war will rest with the Congress of the United States. It is our obligation. It is a responsibility which we must bear.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF AERONAUTICS

AVIATION, NAVY

For aviation, as follows: For navigational, photographic, aerological, radio, and miscellaneous equipment, including repairs thereto, for use with aircraft built or building on June 30, 1939, $1,500,000; for maintenance, repair, and operation of aircraft factory, air stations, fleet air bases, fleet and all other aviation activities, accident prevention, testing laboratories, overhauling of planes, technical periodicals, and the purchase for aviation purposes only of special clothing, wearing apparel, and special equipment, $24,900,000, including not to exceed $50,000 for the procurement of helium, which sum of $50,000 shall be transferred to and made available to the Bureau of Mines on July 1, 1939, in addition to which sum the Bureau of Mines may use for helium-plant operation in the fiscal year 1940 the unexpended balance of funds transferred to its for such operation in the fiscal year 1939, and the Bureau may lease, after competition, surplus metal cylinders acquired for use as helium containers; for continuing experiments and development work on all types of aircraft, including the payment of part-time or intermittent employment in the District of Columbia or elsewhere of such scientists and technicists as may be contracted for by the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, at a rate of pay not exceeding $20 per diem for any person so employed and payment of the travel expenses of such persons if they be members of the Naval Reserve ordered to active duty, $9,500,000; for new construction and procurement of aircraft and equipment, spare parts and accessories, $46,898,000, of which amount not to exceed $15,000,000 shall be available for the payment of obligations incurred under the contract authorization carried in the Navy Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1939; for continuing the construction of a rigid airship as provided in the act approved May 17, 1938 (52 Stat. 401–403), $500,000, and the appropriation of $500,000 on account of such airship, contained in the Second Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1938, is hereby continued available until June 30, 1940; in all, $83,298,000, and the money herein specifically appropriated for "Aviation" shall be disbursed and accounted for in accordance with existing law and shall constitute one fund: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation for employees assigned to group IV (b) and those performing similar services carried under native and alien schedules in the Schedule of Wages for Civil Employees in the Field Service of the Navy Department shall not exceed $1,966,500: Provided further, That in addition to the amount herein appropriated, the Secretary of the Navy may, prior to July 1, 1941, enter into contracts for the production and purchase of new airplanes and their equipment, spare parts and accessories, to an amount not in excess of $20,000,000: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed, upon the request of the Secretary of the Navy, to transfer not to exceed in the aggregate $50,000 from this appropriation to the appropriations "Pay, subsistence, and transportation, Navy" and "Pay, Marine Corps" to cover authorized traveling expenses of officers and enlisted men in connection with flying new airplanes from contractor's works to assigned station or ship, including travel to contractor's works and return of personnel to stations of duty, and the amount so transferred shall be in addition to any limitations contained in the appropriations "Pay, subsistence, and transportation, Navy" and "Pay, Marine Corps": Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the construction of a factory for the manufacture of airplanes: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to consider, ascertain, adjust, determine, and pay out of this appropriation the amounts due on claims for damages which have occurred or may occur to private property growing out of the operations of naval aircraft where such claim does not exceed the sum of $500.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 3 for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all of the amendments which relate to the same subject matter be considered at the same time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendments, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendments offered by Mr. HOBBS: Page 30, line 1, strike out "January 30, 1939" and insert "January 30, 1940"; page 30, line 2, strike out "4" and insert "3"; page 30, line 5, strike out "4" and insert "3"; page 30, line 7, strike out "4" and insert "3."

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, during general debate on this bill the other day I informed the House that these amendments would be offered, and therefore I take it that most of you are familiar with the amendments and are more or less familiar with the arguments in favor of them.

For the last 4 years, to my certain knowledge, we have been considering reduction of the Naval Academy appointments from four to three. That is to say, each Representative, Senator, and Delegate now, during one quadrennium, has four appointments to Annapolis. This year there will go into the academy from this source 662 fine young boys, who have been selected as the best and most outstanding boys interested in that career. Yet, because of our legislation, we know before they go in that more than half of them will be kicked out in the prime of their youth and usefulness at about the age of 40 to 41 years, with no hope at that late date of being able to go back into civil life with any success. We know that we will have ordered spent upon each of them some $24,000 to $35,000 of the taxpayers' money, and we know that they will inevitably go out and go upon the retirement pay rolls, which have nearly doubled in the last 4 years. It is costing the taxpayers supporting this Government nearly $10,000,000 a year, and this year that amount will be exceeded for retirement pay for these comparatively young men whom we are forcing out of the Navy. I say that that is economically unjustifiable, and that that part is nothing compared with the detriment it is working in the morale of the manhood of the naval forces.

No man can be kicked out in the prime of his usefulness at 40 or 41 years of age and not have everlastingly upon him the stigma of disgrace because of being expelled, when any member of the selection board will tell you that the only reason in God's world that he is not selected for promotion is not because he is unfit but because there is no room at the top of the pyramid, so that inevitably they must go out. I submit to you as fair-minded American citizens, without passion or prejudice, that that is wrong.

The practice has been repeatedly condemned by the reports of your Committee on Appropriations. There is not a hearing before the Committee on Appropriations on this bill that does not speak in terms of condemnation of this foolish practice; and so I submit that these amendments, which are single in purpose, merely reducing the number of our appointees to Annapolis from four to three, should be adopted. It will have no effect this year. It will begin to take effect next year, and the saving of a half million dollars a year will be the least of all of the benefits.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I have deep respect for the opinions of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] who is earnest and sincere in the proposal that he has set forth, that the adoption of his amendments would be of benefit to the Navy. Nevertheless, the figures I have give a somewhat different conclusion.

Decrease of the congressional appointments from four to three would affect the class entering this spring and graduating in 1943. Obviously a reduction from four to three appointments would preclude any appointment this spring being made by any Congressman or Senator unless he has more than one vacancy existing or accruing on the next graduation. This is because one vacancy would be used to take up the slack between the four and the three. Since by no means all of the Congressmen and Senators will, under existing law, have more than one vacancy it appears that the contemplated reduction will substantially reduce congressional appointments to the Naval Academy this year.

With regard to the strength of the Navy, the reduction contemplated would not, as stated, take effect until 1943. At that time, however, the Bureau of Navigation figures indicate there will be 7,750 regular line billets needed in the fleet and shore stations, without allowing for any increase in present figures for the shore stations. Under existing law it is estimated that there will be 7,050 officers on the active list available for these billets—a shortage of 700. If a modification of the law requiring the retention on active duty of all officers adjudged fitted is enacted, as carried in the pending personnel bill, H. R. 4929, the number of officers available will be increased to approximately 7,250, leaving a shortage still of 500.

The reduction of appointments from 4 to 3 would result in a reduction this year in the entering congressional group from 662 to 290, with the consequent reduction in 1943 of 220 officers—assuming 60 percent commissioned—for the line of the Navy and therefore would have the effect of increasing the above shortages to 920 and 720, respectively.

Similarly for each successive year beyond 1943 the reduction of appointments from 4 to 3 would result in approximately 100 less graduates available for commission, in a normal average of 450, and would thereby very materially retard the growth of the strength of the line of the Navy toward the needs of the fleet. These, for instance, increase from the 7,750 cited for 1943 to 7,925 in 1944 and 8,118 in 1945, but under conditions as can be at present foreseen do not increase substantially thereafter. It will be some years, however, before, with the 4 appointments, we can hope to reach this latter figure, possibly even well beyond 1950, and the reduction of appointments as contemplated will so far delay our attaining this figure that we may in fact never reach it.

Aside from the total strength of the Navy, however, the question of naval aviators is of particular importance. These are obtained from successive Naval Academy classes, and approximately 30 percent or slightly less may be expected from each class. Obviously, a reduction of 100 in the number of each graduating class will result in the loss of some 25 to 30 aviators who might otherwise be expected from each class, with an ultimate serious detriment to the efficiency of naval aviation. The actual pilots can be supplied, it is true, by additional aviation cadets, but the maintenance in naval aviation of a considerable number of Naval Academy graduates is obviously desirable.

For purposes of regularity of promotion, a standard basis for a number of appointments from year to year, to permit of regular graduating classes of approximately the same size, is highly desirable. Variation of appointments allowed from year to year produces a much greater effect than would be assumed. For instance, it has just been indicated that a drop from 4 to 3 appointments will, by reason of the marked reduction for 1 year in congressional appointments, result in a reduction in the anticipated commissions from the graduating class of 220; that is, from a present expectation of 543 to 320. Similarly, an increase from 3 to 4 in the future, or to 5 in case it becomes necessary to make up accumulated deficiencies in the strength of the line of the Navy, would represent an overlarge class because of the sudden availability of the new appointments. In recent years the appointments to the academy have varied as follows: 1918–23, 5 appointments; 1924–27, 3; 1928–31, 4; 1932–34, 3; 1935 to date, 4; and the size of the classes have consequently changed from an extreme of 579 in 1927 to 173 in 1928. The promotion problems, the "humps," occasioned by these varying classes are most disadvantageous to the Navy, and the Department has in fact been willing to accept the slower rate of growth toward fulfilling the needs of the Navy, as indicated above on the 4-appointment basis, rather than to urge the 5-appointment basis, in order to stabilize for some years on the 4-appointment system and thus to produce a normal average graduating class from the Naval Academy and to avoid promotion humps in the future.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Yes.

Mr. HOBBS. Do the figures which the gentleman has just given include the aviation cadets?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Yes; they do.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Is it not true that that would give us a reserve of Reserve officers, finely trained men, who would be of great service to the country in time of war?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendments offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The question was taken, and the amendments were rejected.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I do this for the purpose of asking some questions relative to lines 24 and 25, on page 45, and the first few lines on page 46, having to do with the construction of a rigid airship.

I notice in the report of the committee it says:

> The committee feels that new bids should be invited for a ship of this character or the project abandoned.

I certainly agree with the committee.

The first question I want to ask is whether the language of the bill will specifically and definitely require that new bids shall be called for?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. No; that is an administrative matter.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Does the committee have any assurance that in the construction of this airship it really will be one in which American design and construction are required and followed?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. That is required under the law.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I understand that, too, but when this was being debated a year ago in 1938, the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. O'CONNELL] made the following remarks:

> When I speak of American airships I refer to those which shall be designed and constructed by American engineers upon American engineering principles, and not to airships constructed with Government funds on the principle of German Zeppelins or airships built in Germany.

That seems clear enough as to the intent of Congress, and I want to be as careful as I can that we do not get another Zeppelin type ship. For I would like to point out that we have had some very serious experiences with ships of that type. We have had five ships of the ZRN type. The Shenandoah, one that was built in England, the Los Angeles, the Akron, and the Macon. Every one of those except the Los Angeles has been destroyed, broken in midair. The Los Angeles is grounded for obvious reasons. One hundred and thirty-five lives have been lost in these disasters. All of those ships are of the German Zeppelin design, and I want to be sure that we are not to build another ship like that. I want to be sure that real competitive bids are called for, and somebody besides the people who build ships of that character will have a chance to give us a ship of real American design and construction. I wonder, also, whether or not the same people who approved the designs for these five ships are still in that responsible position in the Navy Department. That is the only purpose in my asking for this time.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. The Naval Expansion Act, approved May 17, 1938, authorized the appropriation of $3,000,000 to be expended at the direction of the President for the construction of a rigid airship of American design and construction, the capacity not to exceed 3,000,000 cubic feet, either fabric or metal covering, to be used in training, experimental, and development purposes. I think that should answer the question.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. That is true, but I would like to have the gentleman's assurance, which will be entirely adequate for me, that there are going to be new bids called for on this airship, and that all bids will be fully considered.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Well, that is an administrative matter. I have every confidence, however, that new bids will be called for.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

> In all, $9,117,755, to be accounted for as one fund: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation for employees assigned to group IV (b) and those performing similar services carried under native and alien schedules in the Schedule of Wages for Civil Employees in the Field Service of the Navy Department shall not exceed $85,000.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking one or two questions of the chairman of the subcommittee.

I should like to inquire in connection with this bill how much of the money under subcontracts would be allocated to the purchase of metal furniture?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. I am without information as to that detail.

Mr. ANDREWS. The information I have received at this time would indicate that practically all metal furniture for the Navy is made by the Government in Virginia. Is that correct?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. The gentleman may be correct. I do not know.

Mr. ANDREWS. Does the gentleman feel that all metal furniture which may be ordered through subcontracts should be Government made, or does he not feel that it would be wise to allocate 50 percent of that to private industry, which is well equipped to supply the needs?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. As a general rule, I should say that would be advisable, although there might be some particular reason in this case for having it made in a Government yard.

Mr. ANDREWS. I thank the gentleman.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

> No part of the appropriations made in this act shall be available for the salary or pay of any officer, manager, superintendent, foreman, or other person or persons having charge of the work of any employee of the United States Government while making or causing to be made with a stop watch or other time-measuring device a time study of any job of any such employee between the starting and completion thereof, or of the movements of any such employee while engaged upon such work; nor shall any part of the appropriations made in this act be available to pay any premiums or bonus or cash reward to any employee in addition to his regular wages, except for suggestions resulting in improvements or economy in the operation of any Government plant; and no part of the moneys herein appropriated for the Naval Establishment or herein made available therefor shall be used or expended under contracts hereafter made for the repair, purchase, or acquirement, by or from any private contractor, of any naval vessel, machinery, article, or articles that at the time of the proposed repair, purchase, or acquirement can be repaired, manufactured, or produced in each or any of the Government navy yards or arsenals of the United States, when time and facilities permit, and when, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy, such repair, purchase, acquirement, or production would not involve an appreciable increase in cost to the Government, except when the repair, purchase, or acquirement, by or from any private contractor, would, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Navy, be advantageous to the national defense: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed as altering or repealing the provisos contained in the acts to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels, approved February 13, 1929, and March 27, 1934, which provide that the first and succeeding alternate vessels in each category, except the 15,000-ton aircraft carrier, upon which work is undertaken, together with the main engines, armor, and armament, shall be constructed or manufactured in the Government navy yards, naval gun factories, naval ordnance plants, or arsenals of the United States, except such material or parts as are not customarily manufactured in such Government plants.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VORYS of Ohio: On page 56, beginning in line 21, after the word "available", strike out down to the word "available" in line 4 on page 57.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, my amendment is directed to the clause which apparently forbids a foreman or officer to look at his watch while any employee is working, to see whether the employee is doing anything or not doing anything. I have inquired of the committee where this language came from, and I understand it has stood in this form for about 21 years; that it has no practical value; that probably nobody pays any attention to it, but in the interest of bringing our naval appropriation bills up to date, and having the language looked over at least every 10 years, say, I submit it might be a good thing to strike out this language, which is either meaningless or, if taken literally, would prevent ordinary supervision by officers or foremen, over people who are working, or not working while they are supposed to be working, as the case may be.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. This item has been carried in the bill for more than 20 years. No difficulties have been encountered and no complaints have been made. It is intended as a protection for labor.

I ask that the amendment be defeated.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order for 7 minutes.

Mr. CHURCH. I am very sorry, but I shall have to object to the request to speak out of order. We have sacrificed a number of speeches that we might expedite the passage of the bill. A number of Members want to get away.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. CHURCH. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, it is rather remarkable that a South American dictator who is asking for a hand-out of millions of dollars from the American Treasury was allowed to address the House for about an hour today, but a Member of Congress is not allowed to address the House for 7 minutes.

I therefore make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and eighteen Members are present, a quorum.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Cox, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 6149, the Navy Department appropriation bill, 1940, instructed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HULL) there were—ayes 123, noes 17.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present, and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and forty-seven Members are present, not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 297, nays 58, not voting 75, as follows:

Mr. Murdock of Utah with Mr. Sweeney.

On motion of Mr. SCRUGHAM, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The doors were opened.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who have spoken on the bill may have 5 legislative days in which to extend their own remarks on the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nevada?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday next, after the disposition of the legislative program for the day, I may address the House for 20 minutes.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I will not, will the gentlewoman from New Jersey, chairman of the Committee on Labor, inform the House whether her committee intends to make any recommendation relative to any changes in the Wagner Act at this session of Congress?

Mrs. NORTON. I may say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that it is quite impossible to answer that question at this time. The Committee on Labor are holding hearings on seven amendments to the National Labor Relations Act. At the conclusion of the hearings we hope to take the matter up and dispose of it as quickly as possible.

Mr. RICH. Then we have some reason to believe that certain changes in the Labor Act will be recommended?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentlewoman from New Jersey state, for the information of the House, if she intends to call up the wage and hour amendments next Monday?

Mrs. NORTON. I may say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the purpose of my requesting time on Thursday afternoon was to talk on this subject. We intend to call the bill up next Monday under suspension of the rules.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. That will not permit of any amendment to be offered that a Member might desire to offer?

Mrs. NORTON. No.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON].

There was no objection.

Mr. MOUTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOUTON. Mr. Speaker, I was absent from the House last Friday afternoon when roll call No. 66 was had for the reason that the members of a certain ladies' club had asked me to deliver an address on Louisiana. Had I been present, I would have voted in the affirmative on that roll call.

ARKANSAS-MISSISSIPPI BRIDGE COMMISSION

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have until midnight tonight to file a conference report on the bill S. 964, creating the Arkansas-Mississippi Bridge Commission; defining the authority, power, and duties of said commission; and authorizing said commission and its successors and assigns to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Friar Point, Miss., and Helena, Ark.; and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CHAPMAN]?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the bill?

Mr. CHAPMAN. It is a bridge bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein memorials 3, 4, and 6 of the Florida Legislature.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GREEN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a brief editorial from the Los Angeles Examiner.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday next, following the statement of the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON] with reference to amendments to the Fair Labor Standards Act, I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes on the same subject with regard to Puerto Rico.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO]?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday next after the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table, and at the conclusion of any special orders heretofore made, I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF]?

There was no objection.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Members will leave here Thursday for New York, may I withdraw my previous request to address the House and to ask unanimous consent that I may address the House for 20 minutes on Wednesday instead?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, may I make the same request, inasmuch as my statement will deal with the same subject the gentlewoman will speak on? I ask unanimous consent that I may address the House on Wednesday, at the conclusion of the address of the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short article appearing in the Milwaukee Sentinel of Saturday, May 6, under the caption "Washington Merry-Go-Round," with reference to the dictator from Nicaragua.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. THILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday next, after the special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under a previous special order, the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE] is recognized for 20 minutes.

UMATILLA DAM ON THE COLUMBIA RIVER

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, the Columbia River is the second largest river in the United States. It carries as much water annually as the Mississippi above the mouth of the Ohio. Umatilla Rapids, the location of the proposed dam, are 292 miles from the ocean, about 150 miles east of Bonneville Dam, and the same distance from Grand Coulee Dam, farther up the Columbia and to the north. More water per annum flows through the Columbia River at Umatilla Rapids than passes down the Mississippi at Keokuk, Iowa. These rapids form the stopper which now blocks full navigation utilization of this great river. The Government has spent millions of dollars on the lower Columbia River and has provided safe navigation for ocean-going vessels across the bar, which has now more than 40 feet of free water at low tide. Navigation for ocean-going vessels extends up as far as Portland, Oreg., and its neighbor, Vancouver, Wash., across the river. Columbia River navigation is our goal; Umatilla Rapids is the obstruction.

Bonneville Dam, recently completed, is about 150 miles from the ocean and the ocean tides extend up to it. It was built for navigation and power. There will ultimately be installed 10 electric generating units, two of which have been completed and are now generating 86,000 kilowatts of electric energy. Two more units are under construction and will be completed in the early summer of 1941. The six additional units have not yet been provided with the necessary appropriations. When completed Bonneville will generate 500,000 kilowatts of electric energy.

UMATILLA DAM THE KEY

Umatilla Rapids is a bottle neck. It is the stopper that must be removed before any great amount of ocean-going commerce can be loaded on ocean-going vessels at the inland port of The Dalles. The stopper must be removed to justify the expenditure of $5,000,000 for the sea locks at Bonneville, and the $2,000,000 for making a 27-foot open channel from Bonneville to Vancouver. The commerce to justify these improvements in the lower river is available in the upper river but it must be able to pass Umatilla Rapids, through locks, before it can safely be sent down the river to the seaport of The Dalles.

RELATION BETWEEN UMATILLA AND BONNEVILLE

The Umatilla Rapids Dam should be constructed now. It is justifiable as part of a going program. It can also be justified as a unit by itself. This dam is a navigation project which will regulate the flow of the Columbia River and will thus materially increase the value of the generating electric plant at Bonneville, 150 miles west. The dam should, at this time, be constructed for navigation only, carrying such foundations as Army engineers find necessary for the ultimate installation of wheels and generators for creating electric energy. The height of the dam, as planned by the Army engineers, will be 56 feet.

The total cost of the dam is estimated by the Army engineers at $23,700,000. It will take 3 years to complete construction. The light, power, and heat necessary for the construction can all be supplied by the Government power plant at Bonneville, as transmission lines have already been provided. The saving by buying the Government-generated power from Bonneville will materially reduce the cost of construction, perhaps as much as a million dollars, covering power, heat, and light, for construction and housing. It was expected that a similar use of Bonneville power would be made during construction at Grand Coulee, that great Public Works project, thus becoming one of the Government's earliest and largest customers. Why a private utility was favored over Bonneville I have not been able to learn.

UMATILLA PROJECT READY FOR LABORERS

The Umatilla Dam project is ready for immediate construction. All surveys are complete; test holes have been dug. From an engineering standpoint it is perfect. It has been passed on and recommended by the Army engineers and by the Army Board in Washington. The climate at the rapids is mild, and the project will furnish year-round employment for 2,500 men directly, and as many more indirectly. It will afford a market for diversified farm products, garden, fruit, poultry, dairy, wheat, and meat from 10,000 farmers within easy trucking distance of Umatilla Dam. It will materially increase the tonnage of long-distance hauls for the railroads.

ARMY ENGINEERS APPROVE PROJECT

Under date of June 7, 1938, the Honorable Harry Woodring, Secretary of War, submitted a report from the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army approving the project, in the following words:

> Accordingly, the Umatilla Dam and the four proposed dams on the Snake River should be constructed before undertaking slackwater improvement of the Columbia River below Umatilla, where a fairly adequate channel already exists. The estimated cost of the Umatilla Dam, without power facilities, is $22,700,000.
> The Board nevertheless recognizes that the proposed coordinated improvement would stimulate development of the natural resources of a large area in the Pacific Northwest and convey to that region and to the Nation as a whole indirect and intangible benefits of sufficient importance to warrant the initiation of construction work in the near future. The Board therefore recommends that the plan presented herein * * * be accepted.

COLUMBIA RIVER DREDGING

The Seventy-fifth Congress approved a $2,000,000 project of the Army engineers to dredge the Columbia River from Vancouver to Bonneville, a distance of about 50 miles. One-third of this work, costing about $700,000, has already been completed, and another third will be finished this year. It is the intention of the Army engineers to complete this dredging in 1940. This will provide 27 feet of water for navigation from Vancouver to Bonneville, where sea locks have been constructed to accommodate oceangoing vessels drawing 27 feet of water.

The dam at Bonneville creates a lake to the city of The Dalles, now a seaport 50 miles east on the Columbia River. Between The Dalles and Umatilla Rapids, about 100 miles, the Government has recently expended $800,000 in removing rocks and obstructions and providing 7 feet of water for the barge navigation, now operating chiefly for wheat and gasoline transportation.

CHANNEL AT UMATILLA RAPIDS

There is included in the War Department budget this year $200,000 additional for channel improvement of the Columbia River above The Dalles. I have asked that a provision be inserted in the Army appropriation bill that none of this $200,000 so appropriated shall be expended in the attempt to clear the channel through Umatilla Rapids. The reason is that the flow through the rapids is so swift all engineers have reported it a waste of money to attempt to make a navigation channel there. The river is fairly on edge at this place, and in a distance of 14,000 feet there is a fall of 24 feet. Between the mouth of the Snake and the foot of Umatilla Rapids there is a total fall of 63 feet. Clearly on account of the swiftness of the water there can be no successful channel improvement except the construction of a dam to drown out the rapids and make a lake to extend to the mouth of the Snake, burying Homly Rapids, another obstruction, under more than 20 feet of water. The money for dredging could better be used for work westward from Umatilla toward The Dalles. It is plain "hooey" to talk about channel work in the Columbia at Umatilla Rapids. A channel 7 by 150 feet through the rapids to the mouth of the Snake would cost at least $5,000,000, and then it would be too swift to navigate. Talking about building boats successfully to navigate that current is nonsense, and this I am stating on the highest of engineering authority.

ENEMIES OF UMATILLA DAM ARE SHORT-SIGHTED

It appears to me that those who advocate such a temporary channel makeshift are not real friends of river navigation, to be made possible only through Umatilla Dam project. Among the most vociferous supporters of the plan to spend $200,000 to blow out the rocks for the channel we expect to cover when Umatilla Dam is built, are spokesmen for the Portland Chamber of Commerce which has, apparently, resorted to its old policy of attempting to throttle the inland empire and to betray eastern Oregon. Their method is to advocate wasteful expenditure of money on a channel of little value to any but Wall Street owners of railroad stocks. The resulting postponement of the dam would please those who are so short-sighted as to think they can hold the right to overcharge on local freight hauls and ruin waterway traffic by delaying the final program.

An article in the Portland Chamber of Commerce Bulletin of April 17, 1939, actually does become abusive of me because I have opposed appropriation of money for waste in useless river dredging, and have advocated the program of permanent value. I have warned my friends of the inland empire to beware of "Greeks bearing gifts." The commercial interests of the lower Columbia will best promote progress for all, including themselves, if they now aid Umatilla Dam project rather than trying to kill it by proposing extravagant and useless substitutes. Public funds should be spent on permanent units of the great river project which will finally provide water transportation from Lewiston, Idaho, to the sea, actually benefiting obstreperous Portland, which now, through its chamber of commerce, tries to injure its tributary country. We of eastern Oregon and Washington feel entirely competent to decide what sort of river improvement is best for the upper river along the banks of which we produce the wealth that feeds Portland business.

I am glad to report that the best sentiment of all Portland is not behind this temporary expedient and that its representative in Congress, our able colleague, Mr. ANGELL, who is a member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, is a strong and powerful advocate of Umatilla Dam.

THE DAM NOT A NEW PROJECT

Fifteen years ago, when I was Governor of the State of Oregon, I recommended to the legislature an appropriation of $10,000 to match funds from the National Government for survey and study of the Umatilla Rapids Dam. The dam has been on the docket for more than 20 years. It has been urged by the Columbia Valley and Inland Waterways Associations, by innumerable numbers of Granges in Oregon, Washington, and Idaho; by the chambers of commerce of cities of Oregon and Washington, yes, including Portland, which is not all greedy. Every public body of that section known as the inland empire has urged undertaking this necessary improvement. The Umatilla Dam project has for years been supported by every Congressman and Senator from the Northwest. Seventy-five percent of the tonnage from the inland empire originates along the Columbia and the Snake Rivers above Umatilla Rapids. A dam at that point is the key to the whole scheme of river transportation and was advocated by engineers and far-sighted men long before Bonneville and Grand Coulee were ever thought of or talked about.

PEOPLE ARE LAND HUNGRY

Umatilla Dam will provide water transportation from old and well-settled portions of the inland empire at Yakima, Walla Walla, Roza irrigation project, the Wenatchee apple kingdom, and the rich and fertile hills of the Umatilla. Ultimately it will be necessary to construct smaller dams in the Snake River as far up as Lewiston. When that is done there will be opened to navigation an immense empire which produces in quantity grain, timber, and minerals. Within a radius of 150 miles of Umatilla Rapids there are now living 600,000 people. In a very short time there will be more than a million inhabitants, as the Northwest is growing in population very rapidly.

Landless millions in our cities are hungry for a few acres upon which they can grow the grass and the feed to care for cows. Thousands want places where they can raise chickens, produce eggs, and grow most of their food. Thousands have already come out of the dust bowl of the Middle West into the far Northwest begging for an opportunity to own a few acres of irrigated land.

Oregon irrigation projects have opened up to settlement for homesteading since I have been in Congress a limited number of units. Every time there is such an opening announced 10 times as many people apply for homesteads as can be supplied. The people are land hungry. The day of the 160-acre plains homestead is gone; the day of the 640-acre stock homestead is gone; but the small irrigated homestead is the unit of the present and of the future.

KEEP IRRIGATION PROJECTS SOLVENT

We who live in the far Northwest know full well it is almost impossible for the ordinary man on the Atlantic border, or even in the Mississippi Valley, to realize the importance and value of irrigation enterprises. A million people will soon live and find their sustenance in the irrigated projects bordering on the Columbia, the Umatilla, and at the Grand Coulee. The lands here are in a perfect climate. They will afford employment, enjoyment, and purchasing power for another million people, thus indirectly affecting all the inhabitants of the United States.

The Seventy-fifth Congress provided for a repayment commission of three men to make a special financial study of irrigation districts. This commission filed a report a little less than a year ago, after a careful survey and study of 70 irrigation projects in the West. In that report it was pointed out that excessive freight charges have been the cause of financial difficulties of many irrigation projects. Especially did they find this true of irrigation districts in the mountan regions of Idaho, Colorado, Montana, and New Mexico, which have projects beyond successful trucking distance from heavily populated centers. The commission found that it often costs more than the value of the marketed commodities to transport those agricultural products 200 or 300 miles.

This study is all important at this time because of the opening to settlement in the near future of Grand Coulee project, which will provide for the irrigation of a million and a quarter acres.

This magnificent body of desert land, which will soon become a garden, lies just north of the Snake and east of the Columbia Rivers, in what is known as the Big Bend. The dam at Umatilla Rapids will provide still and navigable waters to the very edge of this future irrigated empire which will be the largest solid irrigation tract of land in the United States.

The Government has already invested $100,000,000 in this Grand Coulee project. It is the greatest single construction project of our time. Everything within reason must be done to make it a success. There can be no greater boon to the future farmers of Grand Coulee irrigated lands than to have water transportation down the Columbia. Umatilla Dam would be justified in affording water transportation from Grand Coulee area alone.

ADVANTAGES OF RIVER DEVELOPMENT

Ultimately, there will be another quarter of a million acres irrigated, resulting from Umatilla Dam and the pumping plants that will be operated from cheap electric energy there generated. Umatilla Dam is the stopper, it is the key to the full and complete development of the Columbia and Snake Rivers. The future value of the tremendous Government investments at Bonneville, The Dalles, Grand Coulee, and elsewhere on the Columbia River can be only partially realized until this bottle neck has been removed and transportation can move freely through this obstruction which has been staying progress for a half a century.

Umatilla Rapids project is typical of the improvements that must eventually be made in the Columbia and the Snake Rivers. There is but one feasible method of improving these rivers and that is by canalization. The same engineering plan for navigation has been used on the Mississippi. There I saw pool after pool in the upper river affording still water for navigation to the twin cities of the North. There is one great difference from our plan as there has been no attempt to save on the Mississippi River the electric power produced by the dams. On the Columbia and the Snake this valuable asset, electric energy, will pay improvement costs into the Public Treasury many times over. Our people think they have the right to all the advantages of river development.

A PRODUCTIVE COUNTRY AWAITS WATER TRANSPORTATION

Water transportation is the cheapest method of carrying freight known to man. Boats have sailed the seas from the time of the Pharaohs and will continue to ply waterways until the end of time. There should be no adverse regulation of water transportation for the benefit of railroads or truck transportation. A monopoly traffic as desired by Wall Street would be contrary to traditions and customs of man. Producers and shippers are entitled to free choice of the type of transportation most advantageous to them—rail, water, motortruck, or air. Steel rails, asphalt pavements, or concrete boulevards cannot compete with water as a transportation agency under equal conditions.

It has been demonstrated time and time again that you can carry 1,000 bushels of wheat 1,000 miles on lake or ocean for $20, against a railroad charge of $150 to $200. There is simply no substitute for water transportation. Trucks can bring the products to the river banks, where they can be floated down the broad Columbia to the heavily populated centers where people now live and ever in increasing numbers will live, in the mild climate west of the Cascade Range.

During an average year 80,000,000 bushels of wheat, 10 percent of all produced in the United States, are grown in the inland empire; 35 percent of this wheat is grown within 25 miles of the Snake and Columbia Rivers, 60 percent within 50 miles, and 80 percent of this wheat within 100 miles of these navigable streams. Nature provided the easiest method known to man to take this wheat to market, and the people who are raising the wheat now at financial loss await this dam in order to enjoy the advantages of river transportation.

In addition to the wheat grown in the Northwest, there is also annually produced 40,000,000 pounds of wool. The greater part of the standing saw timber of the Nation is to be found in this section. Mineral wealth is enormous. Today we produce 40 percent of the lead mined in our country, large quantities of zinc, silver, gold, quicksilver, and other metals. In our section are immense deposits of clay for porcelain and pottery, also raw materials for aluminum, and large bodies of limestone and phosphates.

The statement is made that if the river is improved for navigation the bulk of the wheat will still be carried by railroads. Perhaps that is true, but if so it will be at a much lower rate so that the producers will save far more than the cost of all the improvements on the river. The locks at Celilo on the Columbia have more than paid for themselves by reducing freight rates from The Dalles and neighboring territory to tidewater. It is true that freight rates will be lowered on short hauls in the inland empire, and they should be, but the increase of business will more than make up to the railroads for the reductions in charges.

FREIGHT RATES

It has been estimated that over ordinary roads by horse and wagon a ton of freight can be transported 4 miles for $1. By gasoline truck, that same ton can be transported 30 miles for $1. On the railroads, that same ton can be transported 200 miles for $1. On the Erie Canal the ton of freight can be transported 333 miles for $1. If we use the rates charged on the Great Lakes, then that ton might be transported 1,500 miles for the dollar. If we use the rates charged for barge navigation on the Ohio and Mississippi, that same ton of freight can be transported 3,000 miles for a dollar.

It is simply astonishing to note the different costs for transporting freight by rail in the different parts of the United States. Gross injustice is done to some communities and undue privileges extended to others through the discriminatory rates charged by the railroads, of course, with the consent and by authority of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

In Congress we hear much discussion of the financial condition of the railroads. Congressmen all recognize they have a real problem, but we do not all believe the problem of rail transportation lines can or will be solved by refusing to aid water transportation. Rivers must be improved for navigation and the interests of the people must be protected. Transportation should not be allowed to become a private monopoly.

From Arlington, Oreg., to Portland it is 153 miles. By railroad it now costs 7.8 cents to ship a bushel of wheat between those places. By water it costs 9.6 cents to transport a bushel of wheat the 1,800 miles from Minneapolis to New Orleans. It can be carried 12 times as far for only 20 percent more cost than on the steel rails from Arlington to Portland. I find that from St. Louis to Memphis there is a distance of 305 miles, and to transport a bushel of wheat that distance by water it costs 7.2 cents. Wheat from Charleston, S. C., to Atlanta, Ga., practically the same distance, 308 miles, costs 17.4 cents. From Pendleton to Portland, Oreg., a trip of 218 miles, freight on a bushel of wheat is 11.4 cents. From Chicago to Boston, 1,000 miles, it costs 10.5 cents. My own farm is situated 300 miles from tidewater, 100 miles from Umatilla Rapids. During the World War I could ship a bushel of wheat from my farm to tidewater for less than 10 cents a bushel. Now it costs more than 20 cents a bushel. From portions of southern Idaho the freight rate to Portland, 400 miles, is often more than the producers get for the wheat at the loading station. It makes no difference whether wheat is $1 or 20 cents a bushel, freight rates must be paid.

It appears that railroad charges on local hauls where there is no competition are often confiscatory.

PUBLIC WORKS THE BEST INVESTMENT

Many of us realize that we are living today in a twilight zone, between the old capitalistic system which received a terrible blow in the strain and stress of the great World War, and its regeneration and adaptation to that new era that lies ahead. We cannot picture today what that future development will be, nor how it will be brought about. We do know, however, that in the period of time that lies just ahead work must be found for the idle millions; yes; through W. P. A., P. W. A., C. C. C., or some kindred organization. What can be more desirable, what can we plan better than enduring public works—not "boondoggling," raking leaves, painting sidewalks, or other forms of temporary diversion from entirely profitless idleness. We must expend the labor and funds in public works that will make something of value for our civilization—something which will make men happier, give them better living conditions, and renew hope and ambition. Can you think of anything better than the improvement of our rivers and the numerous resulting benefits? Such a project is Umatilla Rapids Dam. I am asking this Congress to pull the stopper out of the bottle neck which lies half way between Grand Coulee and Bonneville by accepting this item in the main rivers and harbors authorization bill. I have for some years had before Congress a bill providing for this dam. This will make certain the financial success of all the great public-works improvements of the Northwest in the vicinity of this magnificent river which opens into the Pacific Ocean, on whose farther shores live nearly half the people of the world. This river, the Columbia, flowing idly to the sea through the centuries, was unknown to civilized man until Washington had been President for 3 years. Then Captain Gray sailed his frail bark, the Columbia, over the bar and gave a name and fame to what has proved to be the most valuable stream in all the world for production of electric energy. Fully utilized, it will also remove transportation barriers and overcome the sectional handicap of uncertainties of moisture and rainfall. We of Oregon, Washington, and Idaho look expectantly and hopefully for the action of this House. I am hoping you have caught the vision. Now, I am asking for a vote to authorize the construction of the Umatilla Rapids Dam as recommended by the Army engineers in the report filed 11 months ago by the Secretary of War. [Applause.]

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. I yield to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. In considering the improvement of the Columbia and the Snake Rivers up to Lewiston, is it not a fact that the great resources of the country, such as timber and minerals, lie inland from Lewiston, and would not that benefit Portland?

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Seventy-five percent of all the traffic originates above Umatilla Rapids.

[Here the gavel fell.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RUTHERFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HARTER of Ohio). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter from the Bloomsburg Packing Co.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. Mr. Speaker, the Wages and Hours Act, like all other regulatory measures, in order to be successful, depends upon a sensible interpretation of the provisions of the act. The number of letters that I have received from complaining persons in various parts of my district convinces me that if this act is to be made workable, the interpretations of its provisions must be made more liberal and with some consideration to the necessities of each situation. I am particularly interested in a situation that has arisen in my own district, which relates to the canning or processing of corn, peas, beans, and tomatoes, raised by my farmers. When the Wages and Hours Act was passed every Member of Congress was of the opinion that canners of perishable products were exempt from the provisions of the act during the rush season. However, as in the case of all regulatory laws, it is not what Congress intended but what the Administrator says Congress intended that counts. So when the Administrator made his first ruling upon this exemption the canners of the country found that his ruling would put every last one of them out of business. Naturally they complained and they interviewed the Administrator and finally had hearings upon the matter here in Washington in an endeavor to get a sensible ruling. I attended some of those hearings held before the Administrator and from the testimony produced there by the canners from various parts of the country, I was convinced that they had made out a good case for an exemption as was intended by Congress and that upon reflection the Administrator would modify his previous ruling in this matter and give the canners the exemption as requested. Nothwithstanding the strong case made out by the canners the Administrator in his wisdom failed to give the canners the exemption which they requested and which was fully intended to be given them by Congress when the act was passed and instead made a ruling that the exemption applied to the canning of vegetables, and so forth, produced upon farms in the "immediate locality." He then construed "open country" or "rural community" to be communities of 2,500 or less, and "immediate locality" to be 10 miles or less from the plant or cannery. In view of the testimony produced one could hardly imagine so ridiculous a ruling and it is no wonder that the canners are up in arms and demanding that Congress do something to relieve the situation.

Can you tell me why a farmer living 11 miles from a cannery should be prevented from bringing in his corn, peas, tomatoes, and so forth? Is he to be penalized because the cannery was located at the lower end of the village instead of the upper end? Is the Administrator of the Wages and Hours Act by his rulings going to be able to make one man's farm worth considerable and another man's farm worth very little by reason of his zoning? Who said 10 miles was a reasonable distance? Not the Congress. Ten miles may be reasonable in the opinion of the present Administrator but there is nothing to prevent the next Administrator making it 5 miles or 25 miles as the whim may take him. Again, why should a cannery that happens to have located in a town of 2,700 before this act was passed be compelled to work under entirely different rules and regulations than a cannery that happened to locate in a town of 2,500 or less? It just does not make sense. If the ruling of the Administrator is allowed to stand and Congress does nothing to change it, it will have a very serious effect upon the farmers of Columbia County in my district and will take from the town of Bloomsburg a real industry. I have been privileged to inspect the plant of the Bloomsburg Packing Co. of Bloomsburg, Pa., and have had the opportunity of talking to many of the farmers of the county who bring their produce to the cannery. Most of them live more than 10 miles from town. As I said before are all of these farmers to be deprived of their market simply because they happen to live more than 10 miles from Bloomsburg? If they cannot sell their corn, tomatoes, peas, beans, and so forth, to the Packing Co., where can they sell them? I know of no other market. Is the Administrator going to penalize Bloomsburg for having more than 2,500 inhabitants? Is he by his ruling going to penalize the Bloomsburg Packing Co. because it happened to locate in Bloomsburg before the Wages and Hours Act was passed? Mr. Speaker, I have a letter from the president of the Bloomsburg Packing Co. which I want to insert in the RECORD which will give the Members some idea of what a small canning company is worth to a community. Read it and see the amount of money that this concern pays out to the people of Bloomsburg that work in the plant and to the farmers of the community. The following is the letter:

BLOOMSBURG, PA., April 27, 1939.

HON. ALBERT G. RUTHERFORD,
Congress of the United States,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR COLONEL: Many thanks for your letter of April 22. In accordance with your request, we give you herewith the following information concerning the effects of the present interpretation of the Wage and Hour Act on the canning industry in Columbia County:

The Bloomsburg Packing Co. operates a plant located at Bloomsburg, Columbia County, and has growers located in the neighboring counties of Luzerne, Montour, Lycoming, and Northumberland. Based on our operations of the 1938 season, our growers numbered approximately 300, and we employed during the peak of our season from 350 to 400 persons. Last year the following approximate sums were disbursed in Columbia County and its neighboring counties: Labor, $57,000; vining and hauling lima beans and peas, $17,000; raw products purchased from farmers, $157,000; and for miscellaneous supplies, power, water, drayage and hauling, coal, etc., from $10,000 to $12,000. In addition, purchases of cans, cartons, and labels aggregated more than $116,000.

The restrictions imposed by the Wage and Hour Act force upon us the choice of curtailing our operations to 44 hours per week, which is utterly impossible during our canning season. This would mean a wholesale spoilage of the product, which must be handled immediately after it is harvested, resulting in a very serious loss to the farmers. To operate beyond the 44 hours would necessitate an increase in cost of production that would result in a selling price that would be prohibitive, and finally a complete elimination of our operations. The only place wherein we could offset the increased labor cost would be in the reduction of the price paid to the farmer for his product. This procedure would be impracticable, because we have already contracted with our growers at an agreed price, and any such reduction would result in a withdrawal of growers.

It has always been the policy of the Bloomsburg Packing Co. to pay highest prices for both its labor and raw products. The factors resulting from the present requirements of the Wage and Hour Act would so work against one another that they ultimately would eliminate an industry which is at present a valuable asset to the community, to the extent of approximately a third of a million dollars per year, and the corresponding loss which would largely fall on the farmers.

From the foregoing can readily be seen the urgent need for relief from the present interpretation of the act, such as is offered in the Barden amendment.

With kindest personal regards, I remain,

Yours very truly,

BLOOMSBURG PACKING CO., INC.,
C. B. GRAY, President.

Mr. Speaker, I realize that a third of a million dollars is only chicken feed to this New Deal administration, but to the farmers of Columbia County and vicinity and to the 300 or 400 men and women who work for the Bloomsburg Packing Co. it means a great deal. When will this administration return to sanity in dealing with business? In this instance by a nonsensical ruling three or four hundred men and women may be thrown out of employment, the farmers of the county lose a good market, and the town a growing industry. The situation which obtains in my district no doubt obtains in many communities throughout the country. If the Wages and Hours Act is detrimental to industries in my district it is likewise detrimental to many small industries in other parts of the country. Members, it is time for us to act. If the Administrator does not understand the situation or is not willing to correct it let us by some legislation, such as the Barden bill (H. R. 5375), or some other similar legislation, correct the difficulty. If we are going to save the canning industry in the East we must act now and not wait until next session.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 1694. An act for the relief of Bozzani Motors, Ltd.;

H. R. 2529. An act for the relief of W. F. Towson;

H. R. 3230. An act to amend the statutes providing punishment for transmitting threatening communications;

H. R. 3231. An act to authorize the mailing of pistols, revolvers, and other firearms capable of being concealed on the person, to officers of the Coast Guard;

H. R. 3587. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to exchange obsolete, unsuitable, and unserviceable machines and tools pertaining to the manufacture or repair of ordnance matériel for new machines and tools;

H. R. 3811. An act to provide for the appraisal of the pneumatic-mail-tube systems in New York and Boston;

H. R. 3812. An act granting postal employees credit for Saturday in annual- and sick-leave law, thereby conforming to the 40-hour workweek or 5-day-week law;

H. R. 4087. An act to amend an act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, as amended by the act of June 4, 1920, so as to confer on the commanding general, General Headquarters Air Force, the same retirement privileges now enjoyed by chiefs of branches;

H. R. 4771. An act limiting working hours of pneumatic-tube-system employees to 8 in 10 hours a day;

H. R. 4772. An act to provide time credits for substitutes in the pneumatic-tube service;

H. R. 4785. An act to provide a differential in pay for night work to pneumatic-tube-system employees in the Postal Service;

H. R. 4786. An act to extend the provisions of the 40-hour law to pneumatic-tube-system employees in the Postal Service;

H. R. 4852. An act making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 241. Joint resolution providing for the participation of the United States in the celebration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the establishment of the United States Lighthouse Service.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to an enrolled bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 752. An act to amend section 78 of the Judicial Code, relating to the district of Idaho.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, May 9, 1939, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS

There will be a meeting of the Committee on Naval Affairs at 10: 30 a. m. on Tuesday, May 9, 1939, for the consideration of H. R. 5766, to provide for the acquisition of the Hunters Point drydock, San Francisco Bay, Calif.

COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS

There will be a meeting of the Committee on Indian Affairs on Wednesday next, May 10, 1939, at 10:30 a. m, for the consideration of H. R. 4497, H. R. 4965, H. R. 5506, H. R. 5851, H. J. Res 264, and H. J. Res. 117.

COMMITTEE ON THE POST OFFICE AND POST ROADS

There will be a hearing before Subcommittee No. 5 of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads on Wednesday, May 10, 1939, at 10. a. m., for the consideration of H. R. 4825, the special-delivery messenger bill.

The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads will hold public hearings on Tuesday, May 16, 1939, at 10 a. m., for the consideration of H. R. 3835, a bill to authorize the Post Office Department to cooperate with the several States in the collection of State taxes.

COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries will hold public hearings in room 219, House Office Building, at 10 a. m., on the bills and dates listed below:

On Wednesday, May 10, 1939, at 10 a. m., on H. R. 4051, relating to hiring of seamen on Government vessels.

On Wednesday, May 31, 1939, at 10 a. m., on H. R. 4985, relating to fishery educational service in Bureau of Fisheries (CALDWELL); H. R. 5025, purchase and distribution of fish products (BLAND); and H. R. 5681, purchase and distribution of fish products (CALDWELL).

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

There will be a hearing before Subcommittee No. 2 of the Committee on the Judiciary on Tuesday, May 9, 1939, at 10 a. m., on the bill (H. R. 4587) to give the Supreme Court of the United States authority to prescribe rules of pleading practice, and procedure with respect to proceedings in criminal cases prior to and including verdict or finding or plea of guilty. Room 346, House Office Building.

There will be a public hearing before Subcommittee No. 1 of the Committee on the Judiciary on Wednesday, May 10, 1939, at 10:30 a. m., on House Joint Resolution 190, to make available to the Federal Government the facilities of the Council of State Governments, and for other purposes. Room 346, House Office Building.

COMMITTEE ON PATENTS

A subcommittee of the Committee on Patents will hold hearings in the committee room, 1015 House Office Building, on Tuesday, May 23, 1939, at 10:30 a. m., on H. R. 3605, a bill to provide a permanent force to classify patents, etc., in the Patent Office. Hon. JOHN M. COFFEE (Washington) is chairman of the subcommittee.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

710. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriations for the Department of Labor for the fiscal year 1939 amounting to $150,000 (H. Doc. No. 287); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

711. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting draft of a proposed bill to authorize appropriation for the construction of a Medical School Building at Carlisle Barracks, Pa.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

712. A letter from the Secretary of War transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated April 5, 1939, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers, on a preliminary examination of Owyhee River and tributaries, Oregon, authorized by the Flood Control Act approved August 28, 1937; to the Committee on Flood Control.

713. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated April 5, 1939, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers, reexamination of Great Lakes-Hudson River Waterway, requested by resolution of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, House of Representatives, adopted February 23, 1938; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

714. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated April 5, 1939, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers on reexamination of Chuckatuck River, Va., requested by resolution of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, House of Representatives, adopted February 8, 1938; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

715. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated April 5, 1939, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers, on a preliminary examination of Chetco River and tributaries, Oregon, authorized by the Flood Control Act approved August 28, 1937; to the Committee on Flood Control.

716. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated April 5, 1939, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers, on reexamination of Oldmans Creek, N. J., requested by resolution of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, House of Representatives, adopted May 12, 1938; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

717. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated April 5, 1939, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers, on reexamination of Carquinez Strait, Calif., requested by resolution of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, House of Representatives, adopted November 17, 1937; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

718. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting the draft of a proposed bill to provide for the leasing, development, and production under the act of February 25, 1920 (41 Stat. 437), as amended, of oil, gas, or other minerals in lands owned by the United States; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. WALTER: Committee on the Judiciary. S. 1281. An act to prohibit reproductions of official badges, identification cards, and other insignia; without amendment (Rept. No. 566). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. PATTON: Committee on the Territories. H. R. 4868. A bill to amend the act authorizing the President of the United States to locate, construct, and operate railroads in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes; with amendment (Rept. No. 567). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. WALTER: Committee on the Judiciary. H. R. 5380. A bill to amend an act approved April 26, 1926, entitled "An act fixing the fees of jurors and witnesses in the United States courts, including the District Court of Hawaii, the District Court of Puerto Rico, and the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia"; without amendment (Rept. No. 568). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ANDERSON of California:

H. R. 6216. A bill authorizing an appropriation for the construction and equipment on the military reservation at Sunnyvale, Calif., of research facilities for aeronautical research; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BOLLES:

H. R. 6217. A bill to amend section 4 of the act entitled "An act to regulate within the District of Columbia the sale of milk, cream, and ice cream, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. CARTER:

H. R. 6218. A bill to amend section 36 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, as amended, relating to loans to drainage, levee, and irrigation districts, and other organizations; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. DOUGHTON:

H. R. 6219 (by request). A bill to amend the Federal Alcohol Administration Act of August 29, 1935, as amended; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HARTER of Ohio:

H. R. 6220. A bill to adjust the pay and allowances of warrant officers of the Army, including those of the Army Mine Planter Service; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LEWIS of Ohio:

H. R. 6221. A bill for the allowance of credit for amount of contributions with respect to employment; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

H. R. 6222. A bill to provide a quota for articles made wholly or in chief value of glass imported into the United States; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. MARTIN of Colorado:

H. R. 6223. A bill to provide for adequate lighting facilities of cabooses used in connection with train movement on the railroads of the United States; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. MAAS:

H. R. 6224. A bill to amend Public Law No. 235, Sixty-seventh Congress (H. R. 10972) to permit counting war service for pay purposes in the cases of officers commissioned after July 1, 1922; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MAY:

H. R. 6225 (by request). A bill to authorize appropriation for the construction of a medical-school building at Carlisle Barracks, Pa.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. RAMSPECK:

H. R. 6226 (by request). A bill authorizing cash relief for certain employees of the War and Navy Departments in the Canal Zone not coming within the provisions of the Civil Service Retirement Act; to the Committee on the Civil Service.

By Mr. HAVENNER:

H. R. 6227. A bill to provide for the refund or credit of tax paid on fermented malt liquor lost or rendered unmarketable by reason of nondelivery caused by the Pacific coast maritime strike; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. KELLER:

H. R. 6228. A bill in relation to the construction, maintenance, and regulation within and by the United States of America of a Nation-wide system of durable hard-surfaced post roads and their appurtenances and the provision of means for the payment of the cost thereof; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. LUDLOW:

H. Con. Res. 22. Concurrent resolution fixing the date of adjournment of the first session of the Seventy-sixth Congress; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. VINSON of Georgia:

2944. By Mr. BARRY: Petition of Local No. 90, United Federal Workers of America, favoring House bills Nos. 3529 and 3829; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

2945. Also, petition of the Senate, Legislature of the State of New York, urging Congress to amend the postal laws to provide that henceforth the rates proclaimed shall apply to books in the same manner as it has legislated those rates with reference to newspapers and magazines; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

2946. Also, petition of the Senate, Legislature of the State of New York, favoring the enactment of the Wagner-Rogers bill; to the Committee on Labor.

2947. Also, petition of the Assembly, Legislature of the State of New York, concerning an amendment to the Social Security Act; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

2948. By Mr. HAVENNER: Petition of the San Francisco Bay Area District Council, No. 2, Maritime Federation of the Pacific, urging Congress to institute a congressional probe into the Bureau of Fisheries and the canned-salmon industry, and that such probe be designed to make a thorough scientific analysis of the methods of operating the present Government policies in regard to conservation, labor costs, and marketing methods and conditions so that a degree of uniformity might be brought about in the operation of this industry and the distribution of its products; to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

2949. By Mr. MICHAEL J. KENNEDY: Memorial of the Senate of the State of New York, requesting that Congress should at once amend the postal laws by legislative act to provide that henceforth the rates proclaimed shall apply to books in the same manner as it has legislated those rates with reference to newspapers and magazines; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

2950. Also, memorial of the Assembly of the State of New York, memorializing the Congress to pass sufficient legislation whereby the States, including the State of New York, may avail themselves of their failure to take full advantage of the credit provisions of the social security for the years 1936 or 1937, and that said legislation provide that out of the sums appropriated therefor the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay such amount through the Division of Disbursements of the Treasury Department to each such State unemployment fund, and particularly to the unemployment administration fund of the State of New York; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

2951. Also, memorial of the Senate of the State of New York, requesting the Congress to enact into law with all convenient speed the Wagner-Rogers bill to allow for the entrance into this country in the next 2 years of 20,000 children from persecuted families in Germany; to the Committee on Labor.

SENATE

TUESDAY, MAY 9, 1939

(Legislative day of Monday, May 8, 1939)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock m., on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, whose never-failing providence ordereth all things both in heaven and earth: Absolve, we beseech Thee, Thy people from all their offenses and breathe on us here the spirit of Thy calm ere we undertake the exacting duties of today. We have known the gladness that departs at touch of sorrow; we have seen the light that was swallowed up of darkness and have heard the music that was silenced in sobbing, garments of experience and beautiful for a season; but now we would go to life's very soul and find the joy that can dwell with sorrow, the light that shines in darkness, and the music that is born of pain. Grant that we may look even upon despair with the unveiled eyes of hope that is woven not of dreams but of the imperishable tissue of reality, and discern the master light of all our seeing in the face of the Christ of our daily experience. In His name we ask it. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Monday, May 8, 1939, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] is absent on official business for the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 4653. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to control the possession, sale, transfer, and use of pistols and other dangerous weapons in the District of Columbia, to provide penalties, to prescribe rules of evidence, and for other purposes," approved July 8, 1932;

H. R. 4654. An act to amend an act entitled "An act for the establishment of a probation system for the District of Columbia," approved June 25, 1910;

H. R. 4745. An act relating to benefit assessments from condemnation proceedings for the opening, extension, widening, or straightening of alleys or minor streets;

H. R. 5516. An act for the relief of Charlotte E. Hunter;

H. R. 5801. An act to grant permission for the construction, maintenance, and use of a certain underground conduit for electrical lines in the District of Columbia;

H. R. 6149. An act making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled joint resolutions, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. J. Res. 111. Joint resolution designating August 19 of each year as National Aviation Day; and

H. J. Res. 221. Joint resolution authorizing the President to invite other nations to participate in the Sacramento Golden Empire Centennial commemorating the one hundredth anniversary of the founding of Sacramento by Capt. John A. Sutter.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN OFFICERS OF VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to relieve disbursing officers and certifying officers of the Veterans' Administration from liability for payment where recovery of such payment is waived under existing laws administered by the Veterans' Administration, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Finance.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

Assembly Joint Resolution 7

Joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to appropriate adequate funds for Works Progress Administration projects for relief of the needy, and to prohibit continued diversion of such funds for political purposes

Whereas early in February 1939 the Congress of the United States appropriated for anticipated relief projects to June 30, 1939, a sum of money $150,000,000 less than the $875,000,000 recommended by the President for that purpose; and

Whereas an executive bill is now pending in the Congress for an additional appropriation of $150,000,000 for such purposes; and

Whereas congressional investigations have disclosed that moneys previously appropriated for the express purpose of relieving the needy and distressed were diverted and used in various States to strengthen political alliances and further political ambitions of individuals seeking political office; and

Whereas statisical records show that relief rolls have mounted to a high peak immediately before elections and thereafter sharply declined; and

Whereas it has become a matter of general knowledge that workers on Works Progress Administration projects have been directly or indirectly coerced to vote along political lines; and

Whereas such political activities in connection with the use of Works Progress Administration funds necessarily must have substantially reduced the amount of money available and applied for relief of those actually in need and in distress; and

Whereas such diversion of Works Progress Administration funds undoubtedly has resulted in increased hardship and distress to those for whom such diverted money was intended; and

Whereas this legislature recognizes the obligation to provide for those unfortunate unemployed and needy who have been so shamefully disregarded by the unscrupulous: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That this legislature, protesting against the continued diversion of Works Progress Administration funds for political purposes, respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States to enact effective legislation prohibiting such diversion; and be it further

Resolved, That any additional funds appropriated by the Congress of the United States for Works Progress Administration projects be limited to an amount which is adequate to carry out anticipated relief projects to June 30, 1939, for the relief of the needy and distressed; and be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, to both Houses of the Congress of the United States, and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

Assembly Joint Resolution 40

Joint resolution memorializing Congress to amend the Walsh-Healey Act so as to provide more stringent conditions for the purchase of supplies and the making of contracts by the United States

Whereas the Walsh-Healey Act provides in part that all Government specifications and contracts involving the purchase of $10,000 or more of supplies must contain provisions for the payment of a prevailing rate of wages to be determined by the Secretary of Labor and that employees of contractors must not work more than 8 hours in any day or 40 hours in any week; and

Whereas such act is designed to obtain social benefits from a public policy based on the limitation of expenditure of Government funds to contractors who apply fair labor conditions and that decent and general labor standards may be applied on governmental projects regardless of geographical location; and

Whereas operation under such act indicates that somewhat more than 10 percent of the total Government purchases are made thereunder and that industry has capitulated to the principles thereof; and

Whereas the Walsh-Healey Act by definition has not included manufacturers who now supply the Government through dealers, subcontractors, service contractors, and by its limitations to contracts of $10,000 or more and the indefinite prevailing wage rate has thereby permitted circumvention and evasion of the terms thereof; and

Whereas the differential in wages permitted in various States under the prevailing wage rate has made it both impractical and impossible for the industries of Wisconsin paying a fair wage rate to competitively and successfully bid on Government contracts; and

Whereas it is manifestly unjust that the industry of a State maintaining a respectable wage rate in conformity with the policy of the act should be penalized by losing contracts, thereby creating local unemployment, to industries of other States unscrupulously availing themselves of technical loopholes; and

Whereas Federal Labor Union, Local No. 18456, of Kenosha, Wis., through its committee, has given much time and study to the subject and respectfully urges the Congress of the United States to enact legislation that will place the industry of the entire country on an equal and commensurate wage plane, include the regular dealer in supplies to be manufactured, subcontractors, and service contractors, and define more minutely and rigorously the minimum wages to be paid under the prevailing rate to persons employed in similar work in the particular or similar industries of the country: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That this legislature respectfully petitions and urges the Congress of the United States to enact necessary legislation to impose more stringent and rigorous conditions to prevent evasion and circumvention of the Walsh-Healey Act in the purchase of supplies and the making of contracts by the United States; be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, to both Houses of Congress, and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

Assembly Joint Resolution 49

Joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to adopt H. R. 4723, to correct the military record of Oberlin M. Carter

Whereas James W. Beckman, an overseas veteran of the World War, who was responsible for important court-martial reforms in 1919, made an open, public charge in the press of our country on October 10, 1938, that Capt. Oberlin M. Carter, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, was convicted by court martial on September 29, 1899, of a crime which never existed; and that his conviction by court martial was not justified by any evidence ever adduced before his court martial, but was obtained by means of a secret trial conducted by the then Attorney General of the United States, John W. Griggs, in the absence of Captain Carter and after his court martial had adjourned sine die, where forged and perjured evidence was manufactured and used against him in violation of the sixth amendment of the Constitution; and

Whereas the War Department of the United States has kept silent in the face of the awful charges of Mr. Beckman affecting his integrity; and

Whereas a solicitor general of the United States, in an effort to prevent the disclosure of the truth in this case, has held that when a soldier is deprived of his constitutional rights by a court martial, "the question is not one of general importance"; and has held further, in the United States the civil courts have no power to "set aside and declare void sentences of such courts martial because of * * * fraud in their proceedings"; and

Whereas Col. F. G. Munson, who stated that he represented the Judge Advocate General before the House Military Affairs Committee, testified that he saw "nothing illegal whatever" in using data which "does not appear in the court-martial record" in order to convict an accused on trial before that court martial; and

Whereas it is the sense of this legislature that those who serve in the armed forces of our country should not thereby be deprived of their constitutional rights to a fair trial, of the right to "confront the witnesses against them"; and

Whereas the special committee on the bill of rights of the American Bar Association said on January 17, 1939, of this very case: "As the injustice presented by your statement of this case is likely to recur, it seems to us to be a matter for legislation in the nature of the general bill proposed": Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That this legislature urge the Congress of the United States to enact into law H. R. 4723, now pending before the House of Representatives, so as to show the judgment of court martial in the case of Oberlin M. Carter was unlawful; be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, to both Houses of Congress, and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 16

Be it resolved by the Senate of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii (the house of representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States of America and the War Department of the United States be, and they hereby are, respectfully requested to take such steps as may be necessary to establish in the United States Army a regiment of infantry, to be known as the "Hawaiian Regiment," composed entirely of citizens who for at least 3 years have been residents in the Territory of Hawaii, and to be stationed in said Territory; and be it further

Resolved, That certified copies hereof be forthwith forwarded to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress and to the Secretary of War.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Board of Supervisors of Shasta County, Calif., favoring the enactment of legislation for the control of debris from the mud flow from Mount Shasta as a part of, or in connection with, the Central Valley project, the operation to be at the sole expense of the Government, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions of the Maryland Osteopathic Association, the New Jersey Osteopathic Society, the Ohio Society of Osteopathic Physicians and Surgeons, the Tennessee Divisional Society of the American Osteopathic Association, and the Vermont Osteopathic Association, favoring amendment of the so-called Wagner national health bill (S. 1620) so as to preserve the freedom of choice of the physician and school of practice to persons entitled to medical care, and providing osteopathic representation on Federal and State advisory councils, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of Townsend Club No. 1, of Traverse City, Mich., protesting against any discriminatory or punitive taxation of business on account of the size of certain enterprises, and also the alleged tendency of the Government to engage in business in competition with private citizens or corporations, and further favoring the enactment of House bill 2, a general-welfare plan providing old-age assistance, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HUGHES presented a resolution adopted by the Congregation Temple of Truth, of Wilmington, Del., favoring the adoption of a pending resolution permitting the immigration of certain refugee children from Germany to the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. SHEPPARD presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Texas, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

House Concurrent Resolution 27

Whereas during the past and present sessions of Congress bills and resolutions have been introduced into the Congress of the United States of America claiming, directly and by implication, that the United States of America has sovereign rights to and is the owner of all lands, oil, and mineral reserves under water along the coast line of the United States extending out to the 3-mile limit; and

Whereas there is now pending in Congress Senate Joint Resolution No. 24, by Senator NYE, which asserts that title and ownership of said lands and said oil reserves is vested in the United States of America instead of the various individual States of the United States; and

Whereas title to such land is by right and by law vested in the several States and their grantees and they cannot be deprived of their rights to the ownership of such land without just compensation; and

Whereas Senate Joint Resolution No. 24 asserts title to said land and undertakes to appropriate the oil reserves along such coast line extending out to the 3-mile limit for the use and benefit of the United States Navy; and

Whereas the State of Texas, in its Treaty of Annexation to the United States, specifically reserved all of its lands and the public domain of the State of Texas extending along the coast line into the Gulf of Mexico 3 leagues from shore and has heretofore, by legislative enactment and by constitutional provision, conveyed title to all of said submerged land along the coast line of the Gulf of Mexico to the permanent school fund of the State of Texas, and that the title to said land, together with all mineral rights thereunder, is now vested in the permanent school fund of the State of Texas as an endowment of public education for the use and benefit of the public-school system of the State of Texas, and that there is now estimated to be oil resources vested in said fund to the extent of at least $100,000,000: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That the adoption by the Congress of the United States of any legislation, directly or indirectly, that the United States has a sovereign title to and ownership of lands under navigable waters or any of the mineral deposits thereunder, or authorizing any suit or other proceeding by Federal officers to obtain possession or use of such lands or mineral deposits without the payment of a just compensation is contrary to law and sound policy and should be opposed; and be it further

Resolved, That Gerald Mann, attorney general of the State of Texas; Bascom Giles, land commissioner; R. A. Stuart, attorney for the Texas State Teachers Association; Gen. Claude V. Birkhead, representative of Gov. W. Lee O'Daniel; and Coke R. Stevenson, Lieutenant Governor, be, and they are hereby, authorized to oppose, in the name and on behalf of the State of Texas and of the permanent school fund and the school children of the State of Texas, the adoption of any such legislation by Congress, and in connection therewith to furnish copies of this resolution to such committees and Members of Congress as may be appropriate or desirable, to prepare briefs and memoranda in opposition to such legislation, and submit the same to Members of Congress and to the committees considering said resolution, and to appear in opposition thereto at any hearing, and generally to take such steps as may be necessary to carry out the intent and spirit of this resolution; and be it further

Resolved, That we assert ownership to said lands and the natural resources thereof, to be vested in the permanent school fund of the State of Texas, and that we urgently request and petition our representatives in Congress from the State of Texas and other representatives in Congress to defeat the Nye resolution or any other resolution that undertakes to interfere with the title or possession of said land or any operation thereof for the use and benefit of the public free schools of the State of Texas.

Mr. PEPPER presented the following memorials of the Legislature of Florida, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

House Memorial 3

Memorial to Congress requesting that the Congress of the United States by some appropriate method give relief to the several counties of the State of Florida for the loss of taxes sustained by counties of Florida in which Federal agencies have acquired lands, thereby striking same from the tax rolls of said respective counties

Whereas during the last several years, and particularly the last 5 years, various agencies of the United States Government, and particularly the Department of Agriculture, have by purchase, condemnation, or exchange acquired sizable tracts of land in numerous counties in the State of Florida; and

Whereas by virtue of such acquisition said lands have been by operations of Federal law stricken from the tax rolls of the counties in which said lands are located; and

Whereas said counties have therein and thereby been deprived of substantial sums of money which would have been paid into them as taxes had such acquisition not been made, thereby resulting in great financial loss to said counties; and

Whereas such a loss of revenue has resulted in said counties now being confronted with chaos and embarrassment; and

Whereas the projects are for the benefit of the State and Nation rather than the counties: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States in its wisdom pass and appropriate relief legislation for the use and benefit of the several counties of the State of Florida in which said acquisition of real estate has reduced the tax income of said counties, and that such relief legislation provide to such counties an appropriation equal to the amount of taxes which would accrue to said county if the lands were owned by individuals; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial, under the great seal of the State of Florida, be immediately forwarded by the secretary of state to the President of the United States of America, to the President of the United States Senate, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States Congress, to the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States, and copies to be forwarded to the delegation representing the State of Florida in both the House and Senate of the United States Congress; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be spread upon the journal in both the house of representatives and the State senate, and that sufficient copies be furnished to the press.

House Memorial 4

Requesting that the Congress of the United States of America, without further delay, pass H. R. 3747, entitled "An act to provide for improved agricultural land utilization by authorizing the rehabilitation of drainage works," introduced by WALL DOXEY, of Mississippi

Whereas this bill provides for improved agricultural land utilization by authorizing the rehabilitation of drainage works in the several States; and

Whereas it would provide an exceptional opportunity to perfect plans for the solution of acute problems confronting our drainage districts through Federal cooperation, which has heretofore only been available to the arid and semiarid Western States; and

Whereas such Federal assistance will result in the improvement and utilization of the agricultural land drained; and

Whereas the bill in question provides for an annual appropriation of $10,000,000 for each of the fiscal years ending June 30, 1939, June 30, 1940, June 30, 1941, and June 30, 1942: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the memorialists, the members of the Florida Legislature, that the Congress of the United States of America should enact the bill without further delay; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial, duly authenticated, be sent by the secretary of state to the President of the Senate, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, to each Senator and Representative in Congress from this State, to the President of the United States, and to Congressman WALL DOXEY, of Mississippi.

House Memorial 6

Memorial to Congress requesting that the Congress of the United States, by appropriate legislation, authorize and empower the Surplus Commodities Corporation to purchase, handle, and dispose of sea foods and the products thereof

Whereas it is recognized by all that the sea food industry of Florida represents to this great State one of its basic industries, providing employment for many thousands of people who contribute much toward the economic well-being of the State; and

Whereas the industry is now beset by many perils, chief among which is an unstable market, due largely to the accumulation of surpluses of all varieties of sea foods in the freezers and cold-storage plants throughout the Nation, and because of the activities of the Federal Government in making the American public "agriculture conscious"; and

Whereas it has been determined to be the concensus of those identified with the industry in the State that something must be done immediately to preserve the continuation of this industry founded upon the ingenuity, resourcefulness, and determination of the men engaged: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida, now in session at Tallahassee, Fla., That the Congress of the United States be and is hereby memorialized to bring about the immediate enactment of such legislation as will authorize the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation to buy sea food products on a parity basis with that authority the agency now has to buy other agricultural products and, further, that the legislation so enacted provide the necessary funds therefor; be it further

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States be, and is hereby, memorialized to enact legislation of such type as will provide funds for the use of the Bureau of Fisheries for an extended advertising program and educational campaign which shall be designed to increase the consumption of sea food products; be it further

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida now in session, That copies of this resolution be dispatched immediately to the honorable President of the United States Senate, the honorable Speaker of the House of Representatives, the honorable Senators and Representatives from the State of Florida with the request that this resolution be read and inserted into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

House Joint Memorial 7

To the Honorable Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States, and the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

We, your memorialists, the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Florida, in legislative session assembled, do most respectfully memorialize and petition your honorable bodies as follows:

Whereas there is situated within the Everglades drainage district in the State of Florida a large body of fertile lands; and

Whereas a good portion of these lands are of peat and muck formation, which, when the same become dry, are more or less inflammable, and when fires once start in such area it is practically impossible to extinguish the same with the equipment and methods now in use for such purpose; and

Whereas the Legislature of the State of Florida has created an Everglades fire control district, but the officers of such district are operating under a great handicap by reason of the lack of information with reference to the best method to pursue in adopting a permanent plan of fire protection in the enormous territory embraced in said Everglades drainage district by reason of the lack of information as to the best methods to pursue in extinguishing fires when started in said district; and

Whereas these immensely rich muck lands and the preservation thereof are of national interest and the destruction thereof by fire is and will be a Nation-wide loss; and

Whereas there are thousands of acres of these fertile lands that are being destroyed yearly by fires; and

Whereas there is imminent danger of all the uncultivated portions of this tremendous area of muck lands being destroyed in the future by fire; and

Whereas it is the belief of the Legislature of the State of Florida that if a survey was made by the United States Government of the entire Everglades drainage district for the purpose of determining and suggesting a permanent plan for the prevention of fires in said district, and further for the purpose of determining the best method of fighting such fires when the same once start; that such a survey would be of untold benefit in the preservation of such land, and therefore would be helpful to the entire Nation: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That your memorialists, the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Florida, do respectfully memorialize and petition the Congress of the United States of America to cause a survey to be made of the Everglades drainage district for the purpose of supplying information as to the best method or plans to be adopted for the permanent protection of the lands within said district from destruction by fire and for the further purpose of obtaining information for formulating plans as to the best method to fight fires in such district when the same are once started; and that such survey be made by such governmental agency and in such manner as the Congress may direct; and that the Congress appropriate such sum of money as may be necessary to carry into effect such survey; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this memorial be immediately transmitted to the President of the United States and the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States and to each Senator and Representative in Congress from the State of Florida.

Mr. ANDREWS presented four memorials identical with the foregoing, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate four memorials identical with the foregoing, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. PEPPER also presented the following memorial of the Legislature of Florida, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

House Memorial 5

Requesting the Congress to enact appropriate legislation to prohibit the exportation of scrap iron and other materials designed for armaments to aggressor nations who are dominated by dictators and militaristic leaders

Whereas in Europe and Asia certain nations are dominated by dictators and militaristic factions who are heavily arming and preparing for war and aggression against peace-loving and democratic nations; and

Whereas this Nation is permitting large shipments of scrap iron and other war materials to be exported to such aggressor nations; and

Whereas the present profits realized from such exports fail to take into account the misery and human suffering that is resulting and will result from such exportations: Be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring):

SECTION 1. That your memorialists, the members of the Florida Legislature, petition and memorialize the Congress to enact legislation to prohibit the shipping of scrap iron and other material designed for armaments to aggressor nations dominated by dictators and militaristic factions.

SEC. 2. That a copy of this memorial, bearing the great seal of this State, be transmitted to the President of the United States, to the President of the United States Senate, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of Congress, and each member of the Florida delegation in Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a memorial identical with the foregoing, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. PEPPER also presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Florida, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads:

House Concurrent Resolution 6

A resolution urging the Civil Aeronautics Authority of the United States to grant an appropriate application providing for air-mail and transportation service between the cities of Tallahassee and Orlando, Fla., by way of Ocala

Whereas it has come to the attention of the legislature that the Civil Aeronautics Authority of the United States Government is now considering, or will consider, the granting of an application providing for air mail and transportation service between the cities of Orlando and Tallahassee, Fla., by way of Ocala; and

Whereas air-mail and passenger service over the proposed route will serve as a connecting link at both of the aforesaid terminals with air transportation service now in existence; and

Whereas air passenger service over the proposed route will greatly facilitate the travel of those in central and south Florida who find it both necessary and desirous to travel to and from Tallahassee, the capital of the State of Florida; and

Whereas the proposed route will render to the entire State of Florida a much-needed and desired air mail and passenger transportation service: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring):

SECTION 1. That the Civil Aeronautics Authority of the United States Government be and it is hereby respectfully petitioned and requested to consider favorably and grant an appropriate application for the establishment of air mail and transportation service between the cities of Tallahassee and Orlando, Fla., by way of Ocala.

SEC. 2. That upon the adoption of this resolution by both the senate and house of representatives, the clerk of the house of representatives shall immediately transmit certified copies thereof to the Civil Aeronautics Authority of the United States, the Post Office Department of the United States, United States Senators CHARLES O. ANDREWS and CLAUDE PEPPER, and United States Congressmen from Florida, MILLARD CALDWELL, LEX GREEN, PAT CANNON, JOE HENDRICKS, and HARDIN PETERSON.

EMBROILMENT IN FOREIGN WARS—PETITIONS

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I present for reference to the Committee on Foreign Relations 50 petitions asking for legislative action tending to keep the United States from embroilment in foreign wars. The petitions are from citizens of the following communities in Kansas: Cimarron, Goessel, Hillsboro, Newton, Canton, Elkhart, Galesburg, Thayer, Humboldt, Burrton, Sedgwick, Halstead, Bentley, Garden City, Scott City, Modoc, Marienthal, Clay Center, Green, Lasita, Bala, Eureka, Emporia, Reading, Admire, Marion, Lincolnville, Saffordville, Edgerton, Burdett, Sterling, Hutchinson, Atchison, Smith Center, Athol, Iola, Frankfort, Wichita, Plains, and Altamont.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the petitions will be received and referred as requested by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted at this point in my remarks excerpts from a half dozen letters typical of the thousands of the letters I have received on this subject.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letters referred to are as follows:

POMONA, KANS., March 24, 1939.

DEAR SENATOR: I think we as Americans have a plenty to do to guide our own Nation in the right path. If we do that and get it done as it ought to be done, we will have a great big job. And then we will not have time to run some other nation's affairs. As for war, I never was for war, and I am not now nor ever will be. War is only hatred, jealousy, and strife. It only makes destruction, disease, poverty, and sadness—everything else only happiness and good will. If the leaders of each nation had to do the fighting themselves, there wouldn't be so many wars. Our boys and men of the common rank of life shouldn't, then, be forced to slay one another in this enlightened generation.

Mrs. R. A. MCEATHRON.

PITTSBURG, KANS., April 23, 1939.

Hon. Senator CAPPER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR CAPPER: We are wondering if you gentlemen in Washington realize the extent of the responsibility resting upon you.

Indirectly you hold in your hands the lives of our boys, and we are depending on you to see to it that they are not sacrificed to the warmongers. We are trusting you to keep us out of all foreign entanglements.

We have three boys, for whom we made many sacrifices, educating them to be useful and honorable members of society. And we would feel that our lives had, indeed, been lived in vain if they could serve no better purpose than to engage in one of Europe's ignoble wars. We are expressing not only our own sentiments but also the sentiments of thousands and thousands of parents in the great Middle West.

In the name of the God of Peace, we implore you to fulfill the duties of your high office and keep us out of war.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. and Mrs. E. B. RIORDAN.

THE GENERAL CONFERENCE OF THE MENNONITE CHURCH OF NORTH AMERICA,
North Newton, Kans., April 29, 1939.

HON. ARTHUR CAPPER,
Kansas Member of the United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR CAPPER: Since our country is in danger of being drawn into another European war, with all of its terrible consequences, I am making use of the privilege granted me by the United States Constitution "to petition the Government" and ask you, our representative in Congress, to use your full influence and power in helping set up bars that will keep us out of such a war.

To be more specific, kindly help strengthen, not weaken, the Neutrality Act.

Follow the sound foreign policy laid down by Washington of avoiding foreign entanglements and alliances.

Stop all loans or credit advances to foreign governments at war.

Enact effective legislation to take the profits out of war.

Keep our battleships and our soldiers out of foreign war zones.

Stop all shipments of war supplies to Japan or any other nation engaged in war.

Submit to the people for early ratification the war-referendum amendment.

Very respectfully yours,

J. R. THIRSTEIN.

HUTCHINSON, KANS., April 28, 1939.

HON. ARTHUR CAPPER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: Enclosed find copy of resolutions adopted by the Reno County Council of Women of Federated Clubs for your consideration.

Your cooperation in this matter will be greatly appreciated.

Yours very truly,

Mrs. L. H. WARNER,
President of Reno County Council.

RESOLUTIONS

Whereas we, the undersigned, are opposed to being drawn into an aggressive war: Therefore

Resolved, That we are not in favor of any bill or legislation of any kind which might entangle us in the European situation.

Respectfully submitted.

THE RENO COUNTY (KANS.) COUNCIL OF WOMEN'S CLUBS,
By Mrs. LAWRENCE HAINES,
Mrs. JOHN SHIVE,
Mrs. GUY HOUSTON, Committee.

APRIL 17, 1939.

DEAR SENATOR CAPPER: We listen to your broadcast every Sunday and appreciate your stand very much on your neutrality law, to keep us out of war with Europe. We are for a neutrality law that will keep us out of all alliances or entanglements with Europe. We raised three boys that will defend America, but will not be cannon fodder for any European nation whatever! And we are all opposed to a cash and carry neutrality law. We thank you very much and hope you will do all you can.

Yours truly,

Mr. and Mrs. ANDREW FEHRENBACH,
Bethel, Kans.

SYCAMORE VALLEY FARMS,
MRS. R. P. GILES & SONS, Owners,
Sadieville, Ky.

Senator ARTHUR CAPPER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: First, let me say I am what you would call an average farmer. I obey the laws of my country, not because I have to, but because I want to.

I may not know what the majority of the citizens in the Nation want for foreign policy, but I do know what the citizens in my own community want. A foreign policy that worked for one and one-quarter centuries should not be discarded. We are backing you.

The foreign policy of our Nation should be what the majority of the people want, and not what the President and some of our diplomats want us to have.

Americans owe Europe nothing. Our best contribution to peace in the world lies in minding our own business. Saber rattling in Washington [I wonder what Mr. Giles thought of the parade last Friday] is not doing that. We are for strong defensive power, power to defend our own boundaries, but not to police the world.

Respectfully yours,

T. W. GILES.

P.S.—I forgot to mention that being landowners through here, and with taxes steadily increasing, I think now is the time that the Nation's leaders—now in effect "sicking" Europe on to fight—keep their minds on America's real problems. Don't you?

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I received yesterday and in this morning's mail nearly 1,000 petitions, some of them signed by hundreds of persons, urging that the Congress keep the United States from becoming involved in the European war that they believe is impending. In the past few weeks I have received thousands of such petitions, and also thousands of letters and some telegrams of similar nature.

These petitions voice the sentiment of the vast majority of the people of the United States. They want to keep out of war. They want the United States Government to refrain from those steps which may lead toward our participation in Old World disputes.

Also, Mr. President, our people more and more are looking to Congress to take proper measures to keep us from becoming involved. Most of our people are coming to the realization that any attempt to recognize and determine aggressor nations in any foreign conflict amounts to our taking sides in such conflict, and that such a step ultimately means our participation in it.

More and more of our people also have come to realize that so-called "measures short of war" by which we would extend aid to a nation or group of nations, ultimately would lead to our active participation, with both money and men, in a conflict in which those nations were engaged.

Mr. President, the threatened war in Europe is not a conflict between ideologies. The line-up is not between democracies and dictatorships, although every effort is being made to sell the idea to the people of the United States that it is a conflict between democracies and dictatorships.

We cannot escape the deadly parallel with the months preceding our entry into the World War in 1917, when we were told, and were led to believe, that we would go to war to make the world safe for democracy. We no more accomplished that purpose than we participated in a war to end war.

The result of that war to end wars was almost to end democratic government in the Old World; also the aftermath of the World War was the breeding of new and perhaps even greater wars.

We in the United States, and particularly we in Congress, should beware of the propaganda with which we are being flooded day by day.

We should beware of the suggestions being artfully planted before the eyes of our leadership, that the United States assume world leadership, heading some 31 nations, in a combination against the dictatorships to defeat aggressor nations.

It is the plain duty of Congress, as I see it, to do everything in its power to prevent the Government of the United States from embarking on any such perilous course. That course leads to war, not toward peace, in my judgment.

Mr. President, I ask in all reason, how can the United States preach the Monroe Doctrine and at the same time practice intervention in Europe? I say that is an untenable position for us to take, and I say this in spite of the fact that recently the United States was placed in that position through a speech directed toward South America and a message directed to the heads of two European governments.

We hold firmly to the doctrine that European nations have no business interfering in affairs of the American continent.

I say it is just as plainly not our business to interfere in the affairs of the Old World, unless it is known beyond all peradventure of doubt that our own national interests are imperiled.

Uncle Sam should keep out of Europe's disputes and I firmly believe it is the duty of this Congress to use all the powers it has to keep us out of Europe's disputes.

The responsibility for determining our foreign policies rests not alone upon the President and the Department of State. This responsibility is shared by the Senate of the United States.

The first thing that should be recognized by those responsible for determining our foreign policy is that it must be an American foreign policy—not a British foreign policy nor a French foreign policy nor a German or Italian nor Russian foreign policy. Let us never depart from this basic principle.

Mr. President, I honestly believe that the United States can remain at peace if its people and its leadership desire to remain at peace—and will pay the price of peace.

One price of peace that leadership must pay is to give up the urge to play a leading role in power politics of the Old World.

The people of the United States will have to restrain their own urge to rush in and protect some foreign nation from what we regard as an unjustifiable attack by some other nation.

Another price of peace is the strength of mind and character to refuse to be bamboozled by foreign propaganda.

Still another price is to resist the temptation to make profits—and they will look like huge profits—from other peoples' wars. The World War made 23,000 millionaires in the United States—but those 23,000 millionaire war babies were an expensive luxury, and finally a dead loss, to the United States as a whole.

We must avoid entangling alliances; we must not make any secret commitments; we must beware of parallel courses of action.

We must provide an adequate navy, a strong air force—for defense of the Western Hemisphere; not for the defense of Guam in the Orient or the River Rhine in Europe.

We should keep our dollars at home, keep our soldiers at home, and I am inclined to wish we could keep some of the language of overzealous statesmen at home, but I suppose that is impossible.

The Congress should strengthen, not weaken, the Neutrality Act.

I think the Congress should pass the bill introduced by some 50 Senators, to take profits out of war.

The Congress should submit to the people the war referendum amendment. Those who have to fight the wars, and pay for the wars, should have some say whether the United States goes into wars overseas to save or protect foreign nations' boundaries; to play power politics for foreign nations.

No one seems to want war but a few of the big fellows. We do not need to fight another war for the international bankers. It is not the job of the United States to police the world.

Why try to butt in elsewhere? Why let the war lords of Europe drag us into another war as they would like to do?

The best policy America can pursue is to say as little as possible and to act as impartially as possible. The Neutrality Act as we have had it the past 2 years has kept us out of war. Why abandon it? After all, we have our hands full here at home just minding our own business.

Mr. President, this is a good time for us not to go abroad looking for trouble. There is too much trouble in Europe to be had for the looking.

Anyway, we have troubles enough at home to keep us busy.

Helping the farmer save his farm; helping the unemployed get jobs; helping business to get back on its feet; starting to balance the Federal Budget; working out a more equitable and better balanced tax system; in other words, setting our own house in order is a big enough job to keep us busy for some time to come without taking on a foreign war.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 126) to amend the act to authorize alterations and repairs to certain naval vessels, and for other purposes, approved April 20, 1939, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 402) thereon.

Mr. SMITH, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the bill (S. 2270) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to purchase refuge lands within the State of South Carolina for the perpetuation of the eastern wild turkey and to provide pure-blood brood stock for restocking within its native range, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 405) thereon.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Mines and Mining, to which was referred the bill (S. 1806) to provide for the construction and equipment of a building for the experiment station of the Bureau of Mines at Rolla, Mo., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 403) thereon.

He also, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 438) to repeal and reenact section 83 of the Judicial Code, as amended, relating to Federal court districts in the State of Kentucky, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 404) thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 1901. A bill to extend to Sgt. Maj. Leonard E. Browning, United States Marine Corps, the benefits of the act of May 7, 1932, providing highest World War rank to retired enlisted men (Rept. No. 406); and

S. 2163. A bill to authorize an appropriation to meet such expenses as the President, in his discretion, may deem necessary to enable the United States to cooperate with the Republic of Panama in completing the construction of a national highway between Chorréra and Rio Hato, Republic of Panama, for defense purposes (Rept. No. 407).

Mr. BARKLEY, from the Committee on the Library, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 5136) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide books for the adult blind," approved March 3, 1931, reported it without amendment.

EXECUTIVE REPORT OF THE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE

As in executive session,

Mr. PITTMAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of John J. Barc, of Michigan, to be United States marshal for the eastern district of Michigan. (Mr. Barc is now serving in this office under an appointment which expired March 16, 1939.)

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

CITIZENSHIP FOR ALIEN WORLD WAR VETERANS

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I ask consent to introduce a bill conferring citizenship on alien World War veterans, and ask to have it printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Immigration, and I also request consent to have printed in the RECORD an explanatory statement thereof.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be received and referred, as requested by the Senator from Massachusetts, and the bill and statement referred to will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 2386) conferring citizenship upon alien World War veterans was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Immigration, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all alien veterans who served in the armed forces of the United States during the World War for any period of time between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, who were honorably discharged from such service, be, and they are hereby declared to be, citizens of the United States, provided (1) that such alien veterans have been legally residing within the territorial limits of the United States for the past year; and (2) that such alien veterans have not, since their discharge from such service, taken any oath of allegiance to any foreign power; and (3) that such alien veterans have not been convicted of any felony within the past 5 years.

The explanatory statement relative to the bill presented by Mr. WALSH is as follows:

This bill confers United States citizenship upon all alien World War veterans who served in the armed forces of the United States, provided that (1) such alien veterans were honorably discharged from such service; (2) such alien veterans have been legal residents within the territorial limits of the United States for the past year; (3) such alien veterans have not since their discharge taken any oath of allegiance to any foreign power; and (4) such alien veterans have not been convicted of any felony within the past 5 years.

The bill conforms to previous acts of the Congress which have granted certain exemptions to alien veterans in order to assist them in becoming naturalized, although no act has conferred citizenship forthwith as would this bill. The Congress heretofore, for a limited period, however, gave to alien veterans the privilege of filing petition for citizenship upon showing only 1 year's residence and good moral character for 1 year. But all aliens generally are now required to show 5 years' residence and good moral character for 5 years before they may become naturalized.

There are said to be hundreds of alien World War veterans who still believe that because they took the oath of allegiance to this country when they were inducted into the United States forces they automatically became American citizens. Many of the States even grant certain privileges of American citizenship to honorably discharged veterans, such as permitting them to register and vote upon showing their honorable discharge certificates. But while the Congress has paid veterans their adjusted-service certificates, and in many cases awarded them compensation for their World War disabilities, yet many such veterans are still in fact aliens despite their honorable service on behalf of the United States. Such alien veterans are denied the privilege of taking civil-service examinations, whereas veterans who are citizens are given preferences in such examinations. Many alien veterans have even been deported from this country and separated from their American wives and children. Many alien veterans have been dropped from W. P. A. or the relief rolls throughout the United States because of the requirement that those on relief must be citizens. The present bill would alleviate such conditions and automatically confer the rights of citizenship upon our alien World War veterans under the conditions stated.

It has not been possible to ascertain the total number of aliens who served in the armed forces of the United States during the World War, as no such record was kept by the Army and the Navy. The statistics of the War and Navy Departments merely show the entire number of aliens who were registered and classified under the provisions of the Selective Service Law, and do not show how many aliens were actually inducted into service. Nor has the Labor Department any data showing the number of aliens who so served, or who have not been naturalized, and who, therefore, would be eligible for citizenship under the provisions of this bill. However, it has been generally estimated that there are at least 250,000 alien veterans who would benefit if this bill is enacted into law.

PREVIOUS ACTS ON BEHALF OF ALIEN VETERANS

Various acts have been passed by the Congress since the World War granting certain exemptions on behalf of alien veterans of the World War from the usual requirements for naturalization, such as:

(1) Permitting them to receive final citizenship papers after filing declaration of intention without proof of the required 5 years' residence.

(2) Permitting those in the military or naval service to file petition for naturalization without making preliminary declaration of intention.

(3) Relieving them of the necessity of proving continuous residence immediately preceding the date of filing petition for naturalization.

(4) Permitting those still in the service to file petition for naturalization without appearing in court.

(5) Conferring citizenship upon them if honorably discharged from the service or having ordinary discharges with recommendation for reenlistment without being required to file declaration of intention.

(6) Relieving them from paying the head tax and filing fee to accompany declaration of intention.

(7) Conferring nonquota immigrant status to their unmarried children under 18 years of age.

(8) Stating they could not be subject to deportation on the ground of becoming public charges.

(9) Conferring upon them the right to citizenship under the same conditions as existed before the World War.

(10) Providing for the issuance of certificates of repatriation of such alien veterans.

(11) Conferring upon aliens who served in the military and naval forces of the 22 allied nations during the World War, and who were honorably discharged therefrom, the same privileges as were accorded alien veterans who served in the United States forces.

However, all these exemptions and privileges were for limited periods only, and are no longer in effect. Unfortunately, many alien veterans were never advised of such exemptions, or never learned of them, and it is now too late, of course, to avail themselves of the benefits of these acts.

PRECEDENTS

There is nothing novel in the Congress thus conferring American citizenship by en masse legislation, as this has been done even in recent years. Thus, by the act of June 20, 1924, all noncitizen Indians born within the territorial limits of the United States were declared to be citizens of the United States. By the act of February 25, 1927, American citizenship was conferred upon certain inhabitants of the Virgin Islands. By the act of June 27, 1934, all persons born in Puerto Rico on or after April 11, 1899, who were not citizens, subjects, or nationals of any foreign power, were thereby declared to be citizens of the United States.

PRESENT REQUIREMENTS

The general requirements for naturalization of all aliens at the present time are as follows:

(1) The applicant must have had at least 5 years' continuous residence in the United States, and must be able to show he has had good moral character for 5 years, before he can secure his final citizenship papers.

(2) An alien, of course, can file his declaration of intention (called his first paper) as soon as he is legally admitted to this country; that is, as soon as he has established a domicile after such admission. After the expiration of 5 years, he can petition for his final papers, and secure same 90 days thereafter.

(3) If an alien has already had 5 years' residence before filing his first paper, he may file such first paper, and then after but the lapse of 2 years, petition for and secure his final papers.

(4) No exemptions or privileges to facilitate or expedite the naturalization of alien veterans are now accorded them. The acts of the Congress granting such exemptions or privileges, while reenacted several times, are no longer in effect. Alien veterans must thus follow the procedure outlined above.

NATURALIZATION FEES

All aliens now applying for naturalization receive the benefit of reduced fees, provided for in a bill which I sponsored and which became law April 19, 1934. That bill reduced fees by 50 percent, or otherwise set fees as follows:

(1) Reduced filing fee for declaration of intention from $5 to $2.50.

(2) Reduced filing fee for petition for naturalization from $10 to $5.

(3) Reduced fee for securing certificate of arrival from $5 to $2.50.

(4) Reduced fee for securing copy of naturalization certificate, and for certificate of derivative citizenship from $10 to $1.

(5) Reduced cost of registration of arrival from $20 to $10.

(6) Fixed a limit of $25 for counsel fees in naturalization proceedings.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

H. R. 4653. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to control the possession, sale, transfer, and use of pistols and other dangerous weapons in the District of Columbia, to provide penalties, to prescribe rules of evidence, and for other purposes," approved July 8, 1932;

H. R. 4654. An act to amend an act entitled "An act for the establishment of a probation system for the District of Columbia," approved June 25, 1910;

H. R. 4745. An act relating to benefit assessments from condemnation proceedings for the opening, extension, widening, or straightening of alleys or minor streets;

H. R. 5516. An act for the relief of Charlotte E. Hunter;

H. R. 5801. An act to grant permission for the construction, maintenance, and use of a certain underground conduit for electrical lines in the District of Columbia; and

H. R. 5987. An act to amend the District of Columbia Traffic Act of 1925 (43 Stat. 1119); to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

H. R. 6149. An act making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Appropriations.

AMENDMENT TO AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. WALSH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 5269, the Agricultural Department appropriation bill, 1940, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

On page 97, between lines 16 and 17, to insert the following new paragraph:

"Of the sum appropriated by the preceding paragraph, $2,000,000 shall be available for paying 10 percent of the approved schedules of prices for salvaged timber products purchased or to be purchased from the owners thereof by the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation, Northeastern Timber Salvage Administration, said 10 percent being in addition to a payment of 90 percent of such schedules of prices made or to be made from funds loaned by the Disaster Loan Corporation to the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation, Northeastern Timber Salvage Administration."

JEFFERSON DAY SPEECH BY SENATOR JOHNSON OF COLORADO

[Mr. BARKLEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the Appendix a Jefferson Day speech delivered by Senator JOHNSON of Colorado at Milwaukee, Wis., on May 7, 1939, which appears in the Appendix.]

CIVIL LIBERTIES—ADDRESS BY SENATOR SCHWELLENBACH

[Mr. MEAD asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address delivered by Senator SCHWELLENBACH on May 8, 1939, regarding the work of the Senate Civil Liberties Committee, which appears in the Appendix.]

LOANS UNDER THE MEAD BILL—ARTICLE BY ERNEST K. LINDLEY

[Mr. MINTON asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "Little Man Gets Help," by Ernest K. Lindley, dealing with loans under the Mead bill, which appears in the Appendix.]

EXPORTS AND IMPORTS UNDER TRADE AGREEMENTS

[Mr. MINTON asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD certain data relating to United States exports and imports of grain supplies, cattle, and other farm products under the reciprocal-trade agreements, which appear in the Appendix.]

PLEAS FOR PEACE BY THE POPE AND THE DUKE OF WINDSOR

[Mr. CHAVEZ asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD the text of the address of Pope Pius XII to the National Eucharistic Congress at Algiers, Algeria, and also the text of the Duke of Windsor's peace talk, delivered from Verdun, France, which appear in the Appendix.]

ADMISSION OF GERMAN REFUGEE CHILDREN

[Mr. WAGNER asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a number of editorials concerning the admission of German refugee children into the United States, which appear in the Appendix.]

TRIBUTES TO A. A. A. SCHOOL SAFETY PATROLS

[Mr. REYNOLDS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD excerpts from commendations of the school-patrol movement sponsored by the American Automobile Association, its affiliated motor clubs, schools, and police, which appear in the Appendix.]

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5269) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture and for the Farm Credit Administration for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. When the Senate took a recess yesterday afternoon it had concluded the consideration of the committee amendments to the agricultural appropriation bill then under consideration. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER] has advised the Chair that he desires to offer an amendment to the bill. The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I offer an amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 92, in line 21, it is proposed to strike out "$21,462,329" and insert in lieu thereof "$23,362,349."

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, the amendment offered by me proposes to increase the appropriation by the sum of $1,900,000 for the distinct purpose of providing funds to be available for expenditure by the Soil Conservation Service in cooperation with and in assisting the work that is being undertaken throughout the country by the soil-conservation districts. Thirty-five States have enacted soil conservation district laws, under which the farmers of those States organize what are termed soil-conservation districts. Each district is operated entirely by the farmers. The farmers do the work themselves; they furnish the material themselves; and the only thing that they are asking the Soil Conservation Service to furnish is technical assistance. Under the operation of those districts the Service undertakes to survey the districts and the watersheds, and to map out and coordinate and correlate a plan for the prevention of soil erosion and the conservation of the soil. The individual farms are mapped, and the work is done on the individual farms under, as I have suggested, the supervision of the Soil Conservation Service.

There are at present organized in the various States 146 soil-conservation districts. The Soil Conservation Service is cooperating with only 94 of those districts, and it will be utterly impossible for the Service to cooperate with the other districts unless this additional sum of money is provided. Unless we give this encouragement to the farmers who are engaged in land-utilization and soil-conservation practices, it simply means that during another period of years the destructive methods of farming which have been employed in past years will continue.

The conservation of our soil is a subject which it is not necessary to discuss before this body. I know that the Senate is entirely familiar with the devastating practices which have been indulged over a period of years. I know Senators realize that ordinarily, in the case of land that is susceptible of erosion, it takes 2,000 years for nature to build a soil 7 inches deep. That soil may be utterly destroyed within a period of 10 to 15 or 25 years unless soil-conservation methods are used.

Every year there pours into the Gulf of Mexico soil from 31 States of the Union to the extent of 740,000,000 tons. A comparable amount is pouring into the ocean from every other watershed in the country. It seems to me we can well afford to appropriate this sum of money to be given to the farmers who are now alive, as never before, to the necessity of soil conservation.

I do not know what induced the committee not to allow this sum. The matter was fully presented to the committee, and the hearings on the subject are to be found on pages 543 to 583. A casual reading of the hearings will disclose the absolute necessity for the appropriation of this sum of money, provided we believe in making the effort, provided we believe in lending aid and assistance to those who are undertaking to rehabilitate themselves. It is simply a question for Congress to determine whether or not we want now, while the people of the Nation are alive to the necessity, to give them this assistance to help themselves.

This work is not carried on haphazardly. So far as I am aware, the present is the only time in the history of the country when the farmers themselves have realized the absolute necessity of doing this work. Soil-conservation districts now are organized in 24 States of the Union. As I have said, 35 States have enacted laws under which such districts will be organized. There are now statutes pending and movements for the purpose in five additional States. The State of Iowa passed such a bill just a few days ago, as I understand, and other States are fast seeking to avail themselves of this privilege.

What happens in a soil-conservation district? The district is organized by watersheds, or a series of small watersheds. The Soil Conservation Service then comes in at the request of the farmers themselves, at the request of the commissioners of the district, and makes a survey and a map of the entire watershed, and a plan is prepared and adopted by the farmers. It is a matter of cooperation by them. Then the soil supervisers agree with the Soil Conservation Service to carry out the program over a period of 5 years. What I am asking for the great number of districts that have been organized, embracing many millions of acres of land, that money be provided with which to employ the technical assistance and technical aid necessary to help the local men carry on the work.

The survey shows that in this country today 282,218,263 acres of tillable land, plowable land, have been destroyed by erosion. Let me repeat those figures: There are now 282,000,000 acres of land that have been destroyed by erosion out of practically 2,000,000,000 acres of land in the entire United States; and that includes mountainous land.

In the State of Alabama, for instance, 25 percent of the land is suffering from severe erosion.

In the State of Arizona 10 percent is suffering from severe erosion.

In the State of Arkansas only 3 percent is suffering from severe erosion, but 52 percent of the land in Arkansas is suffering from erosion to some extent. I am giving, however, the figures for the land that is practically destroyed so far as farming purposes are concerned.

In the State of Colorado 23 percent is so destroyed.

In the State of Kentucky 45 percent is virtually destroyed.

In the State of Oklahoma, a new State, yet one that is suffering more from soil erosion than is any other State in the Union because of the wind, because of the water, and because of the types of soil, 58 percent is practically destroyed.

Taking it all in all, on the tremendous area of 282,000,000 acres of land in this country, farmers are now unable to make a living.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Has the Senator the statistics for all the States of the Union?

Mr. MILLER. I have; yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator put them all in the RECORD.

Mr. MILLER. I shall be very glad to do so.

I shall not consume the time of the Senate by stating in detail the statistics for the various States, but out of the entire area, 775,000,000 acres are now in the process of erosion, as against 282,000,000 acres that are practically destroyed. There is no apparent or only slight erosion—catch these figures, Senators, if you will—on only 700,512,011 acres of tillable land in the Nation, as against practically one billion acres upon which the erosion process has set in.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, the table from which I have been reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table is as follows:

[1] Reconnaissance erosion survey of the United States, 1934.

[2] Less than 1/10 of 1 percent.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I have referred to the fact that this matter was presented to the Appropriations Committee. A mere casual reading of the hearings before the committee will disclose the absolute necessity for the appropriation. I know there is a great hue and cry against the expenditure of money; but let me call the attention of the Senate to the significant fact that while this is a proposed expenditure of $1,900,000, it is not an ordinary expenditure. The money we are appropriating from day to day is spent and gone, and future generations will pay for it. The money which may be spent for the purpose of combating soil erosion, it is true, will be gone, but future generations will reap the benefit of it. It is the only appropriation I know of, or one of the few, that we can well afford to call upon the future to pay, because by this expenditure we are undertaking to rehabilitate the country, and give the people land on which they can live and support themselves and their families. We are spending yearly millions of dollars in building flood-control reservoirs and other great conservation works, such as hydroelectric reservoirs and dams.

Let me call attention to what is happening and what has happened in connection with that work. Only last year

Congress authorized the expenditure of $325,000,000 for flood-control work. Many reservoirs were authorized, 42 in the Ohio Valley, 8 within the State of Arkansas, and some in other States. Over the entire country they are scattered round about. Fifty-four million dollars is to be expended for a huge reservoir at Denison, on the Red River, and other reservoirs are to be constructed at other places. We have spent nearly $500,000,000 in the Tennessee Valley building reservoirs, and we will continue to expend money for such purposes.

What will happen unless this work shall be continued? Let me tell the Senate what will happen. Along the New River, in Virginia, there are four great hydroelectric-power developments. Field Reservoir, the uppermost, has lost 41 percent of its storage capacity in the 6 years since it was built. Washington Mills Reservoir, 43 miles downstream, has lost 83 percent of its capacity in less than 34 years. The power plant is about gone.

In Texas, Lake Waco was built as a power development on the Brazos River in 1930. Originally the reservoir stored a little more than 39,000 acre-feet of water. In 1936, within 6 years, the silting had reduced the capacity 20 percent.

I have a list of the reservoirs which have been measured; and it is only a question of time, and in my opinion a question of a very short time, unless corrective measures shall be adopted, before those structures will be absolutely ruined, and the money expended will have been thrown away so far as future generations are concerned.

How does the pending item affect us? Wherever soil-conservation districts carry on their work on the individual watersheds, they stop the continual working down and eroding of the land and the carrying of the silt into the drainage canals and the reservoirs. All over the Southland, and wherever drainage canals exist, the maintenance of the canals constitutes a great problem. That problem cannot be solved by the communities unassisted, because of the constant filling by silt. I have a picture in my office of some of the drainage canals in the States of Mississippi, Arkansas, Louisiana, Illinois, and Indiana, which today are absolutely filled and rendered useless because corrective measures were not taken on the watersheds to hold back the silt and prevent erosion.

Let me call attention to Lake Taneycomo in Missouri, the second largest reservoir and hydroelectric development in that State. It has a storage capacity of 44,000 acre-feet, but it has lost more than 46 percent of that storage capacity. In such instances it may not be worth while to preserve the development; but aside from that, the economic situation in this country is such as to demand the rehabilitation of our soil. No people can maintain their economic status on unfertile soil. Show me a community where the social status is low, and I will show you a community where the land from which the people are trying to obtain a living is so eroded that a living cannot be earned from it.

Let me call attention to what has been done by Soil Erosion Service in the way of preventing erosion at hydroelectric plants. In the State of North Carolina, at High Point, an experiment was conducted with a reservoir which was built there. The reservoir was filling with silt at the rate of eighty-seven hundredths percent a year. The authorities undertook to treat the watershed under the kind of operation made possible by our appropriations. They treated it over a period of years and reduced silting nearly a hundred percent, and the rainfall was nearly twice as great after the treating process had taken place as it was before. This work is our only salvation.

Mr. President, this character of work cannot be done by the C. C. C. camps. It is argued sometimes by those who probably have not had the opportunity of getting out and seeing what is going on that we should set up C. C. C. camps to do this work. We have established 355 C. C. C. camps doing soil-conservation service in this country, and that is all we have established. Those camps are in 355 small areas. They have succeeded in teaching the farmers the necessity and importance of this work, and the landowners of this country are entitled to this assistance.

Mr. President, it seems to me that unless we provide sufficient funds to assist the farmers in carrying on this great conservation work, we have reached the point of saying to them, "We are going ahead to spend your money; we are going to erect great flood-control structures; we are going to erect great dams; we are going to enact laws for the benefit of agriculture, but we are going to do nothing to preserve this country for those who come after us." Nature devastates the land because we have destroyed the natural things which were put there. We have denuded the soil of its timber; we have laid waste our country; yet we cannot give the people $1,900,000 additional to assist them.

It is true the work can go on to a limited degree. In my State alone 10 soil-conservation districts are in operation. I hope Senators will accept my word for the statement that I have visited every area in Arkansas where soil-conservation work is proceeding. I have seen that work in operation, and I know what it means. There is no farm problem in the areas where soil-conservation work has been done and land utilization practices have been in effect over a period of 3 or 4 years. The income of the farmer has been increased, as the hearings will disclose, practically 100 percent. In such instances there is no farm problem. The county of Scott, Ark., for instance, on the western side of the State, is one of the most prosperous counties in the State; yet it is the leading soil-conservation county in our Nation. If Senators would go there and see the work being done, they would be convinced of the wisdom of this activity. The farmers in that section of our State have carried on without assistance.

One hundred and forty-six of these districts have been organized in the various States, and others are being organized every day. We can give 94 of the districts help, and that is all. Are we to deny the others? Is not the farmer living on one watershed just as important as the farmer on another?

We hear much said about long-range planning and about conservation of natural resources. If we continue to permit the soil to be eroded as during the past few years, I do not know what is going to happen to this country. It is a matter that is entirely within the discretion of this body. Before this request is refused I should like to have Senators read the hearings; I should like to have them exercise their own common sense and knowledge of affairs, and if they believe in the policy and program I am advocating I ask their support of the amendment.

REORGANIZATION PLAN NO. II—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT (H. DOC. NO. 288)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

Pursuant to the provisions of the Reorganization Act of 1939 (Public, No. 19, 76th Cong., 1st sess.), approved April 3, 1939, I herewith transmit reorganization plan No. II, which, after investigation, I have prepared in accordance with the provisions of section 4 of the act; and I declare that with respect to each transfer, consolidation, or abolition made in reorganization plan No. II, I have found that such transfer, consolidation, or abolition is necessary to accomplish one or more of the purposes of section 1 (a) of the act.

In my message to the Congress on April 25, 1939, transmitting reorganization plan No. I, I took occasion to say that, it being obviously impracticable to complete the task of reorganization at one time, I had decided, in view of the declaration of the Congress that it should be accomplished immediately and speedily, to undertake it in several steps.

Plan No. I had to do with over-all management. Plan No. II, transmitted herewith, is designed to improve the work of the executive branch, for which, although carried on through executive departments and agencies, the responsibility to the people is through the President. It is concerned with the sole purpose of improving the administrative management of the executive branch by a more logical grouping of existing units and functions and by a further reduction in the number of independent agencies.

I am transmitting reorganization plan No. II as the result of studies that have been made for me and of my own experience over a period of several years as the best way in which to regroup the agencies affected so as to fulfill the purposes of the act:

(1) To reduce expenditures;

(2) To increase efficiency;

(3) To consolidate agencies according to major purposes;

(4) To reduce the number of agencies by consolidating those having similar functions and by abolishing such as may not be necessary; and

(5) To eliminate overlapping and duplication of effort.

The plan I now transmit I shall describe briefly, as follows:

I propose to transfer the Foreign Commerce Service of the United States and its functions now in the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce and the Foreign Agricultural Service of the United States and its functions in the Department of Agriculture to the Department of State, and to consolidate them with the Foreign Service of the United States under the direction and supervision of the Secretary of State.

By this transfer and consolidation, there will be a single Foreign Service in the Department of State, but this does not mean that the interests of the commercial and agricultural communities are to be neglected, for it is a part of the plan that representatives of the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of Commerce shall be placed on the Board of Foreign Service Personnel and that specific investigations relating to commerce and agriculture shall be initiated directly by the Secretaries of these two Departments who will receive directly the results of investigations in their own fields.

A much greater degree of coordination and effectiveness in our foreign establishments can be achieved under the plan than has ever before been possible. The needs of the different departments and agencies of the Government will be met more efficiently and the responsiveness of the foreign establishments to these needs will be greatly improved.

The plan presupposes that it may be necessary from time to time for various departments and agencies of the Government to send abroad specialists and technicians for relatively temporary duty. While these will not be in the Foreign Service, strictly speaking, they will be given a suitable commission by the Department of State, on a temporary basis, so that they may have the same obligations as other officers of the Foreign Service while on duty abroad.

The plan also presupposes a special training period within the Department of Commerce and the Department of Agriculture for Foreign Service officers selected to specialize in commercial or agricultural work and contemplates the fullest utilization of the experience gained abroad by Foreign Service officers in the work of the Departments of Commerce and Agriculture in this country. There will be stationed in the Department of State a liaison officer of the Department of Commerce and of the Department of Agriculture to make effective the proposed cooperation.

The plan specifically leaves undisturbed the relationships of the Department of Commerce and of the Department of Agriculture with the commercial and agricultural communities. What it does do is to consolidate the foreign services into one Foreign Service in the Department of State, where it ought to be, with the resulting advantages of economy, efficiency, better functional grouping, elimination of overlapping and duplication of effort, and greater service to our commercial and agricultural interests.

There is also transferred to the Department of State the Foreign Service Buildings Commission and its functions. This Commission is advisory to the administrative work of the Department of State and should no longer have the status of an independent establishment.

The Bureau of Lighthouses now in the Department of Commerce is transferred to the Treasury Department and consolidated with the Coast Guard in that Department. The advantages of this consolidation are obvious and fall clearly within the provision of the act requiring me to consolidate agencies according to major purposes. This will save money on equipment and administration and will permit the better use of personnel.

The plan also includes the abolition of the office of the Director General of Railroads and of the War Finance Corporation and the transfer of their functions to the Secretary of the Treasury, to be wound up by him as rapidly as may be. In the case of the War Finance Corporation, it is directed that the final dissolution shall be accomplished not later than December 31, 1939.

I further propose to transfer to the Department of Justice the Federal Prison Industries, Inc., and the National Training School for Boys, and at the same time to abolish the Board of Trustees of the National Training School for Boys. Responsibility for the Federal penal and correctional institutions is in the Department of Justice, and these two independent establishments should be consolidated therein. None of the other Federal penal or correctional institutions has a board of trustees, and there is no need of further continuing the Board of the National Training School.

The plan also provides for the abolition of the Codification Board established for the purpose of codifying existing administrative law and the transfer of its functions to the Division of the Federal Register in the National Archives. The work of this Board has now progressed to the point where a separate board is no longer necessary and the future work of keeping the codification up to date can more efficiently and economically be carried on by the editorial staff of the Federal Register.

I find it necessary and desirable in order to accomplish the purposes of the Reorganization Act to abolish the National Bituminous Coal Commission and to transfer its functions to the Secretary of the Interior. Thus the task of conserving the bituminous-coal resources of the country may be carried on directly by the head of the department principally responsible for the conservation of fuel and other mineral supplies. The Congress placed this Commission in the Department of the Interior, but experience has shown that direct administration will be cheaper, better, and more effective than through the cumbersome medium of an unnecessary commission.

The transfer to the Department of the Interior of the Bureau of Insular Affairs in the War Department and its consolidation with the Division of Territories and Island Possessions in Interior is a functional transfer of obvious desirability. Under the provisions of existing law, however, I shall direct, where necessary, that certain correspondence from the Governor General of the Philippines shall be transmitted to the President through the Department of State.

The plan provides for the transfer to the Department of the Interior of the Bureau of Fisheries from the Department of Commerce and of the Bureau of Biological Survey from the Department of Agriculture. These two bureaus have to do with conservation and utilization of the wildlife resources of the country, terrestrial and aquatic. Therefore, they should be grouped under the same departmental administration, and in that Department which, more than any other, is directly responsible for the administration and conservation of the public domain. However, I intend to direct that the facilities of the Department of Agriculture shall continue to be used for research studies which have to do with the protection of domestic animals from diseases of wildlife, and also where most economical for the protection to farmers and stockmen against predatory animals.

The plan also provides for the transfer of the Mount Rushmore National Memorial Commission to the National Park Service in the Department of the Interior in order that this great memorial may be administered as a part of the similar work of the Park Service.

Included in the plan is a provision to transfer to the Department of Agriculture the Rural Electrification Administration, now operated as an independent establishment. The work of this Administration in its educational as well as its lending functions is clearly a part of the rural life activities of the country and should, therefore, be administered in coordination with the other agricultural activities of the Government.

The Inland Waterways Corporation is transferred to the Department of Commerce from the War Department. This Corporation, which operates inland waterways transportation facilities, should be coordinated with the administration of other aids to commerce and industry.

I propose to transfer to the Federal Security Agency, for administration in the Office of Education, the film and radio functions of the National Emergency Council. These are clearly a part of the educational activities of the Government and should be consolidated with similar activities already carried on in the Office of Education. Similarly, Government participation in the work of the American Printing House for the Blind, except fiscal functions relating to trust funds, is transferred from the Secretary of the Treasury to the Federal Security Agency, in order that this work may be coordinated with the other work for the blind now being carried on in the Social Security Board.

The plan provides for the abolition of the National Emergency Council and the transfer to the Executive Office of the President of all its functions with the exception of the film and radio activities which go to the Office of Education. Subject to appropriations by the Congress these activities transferred to the White House would be administered in the manner best designed to give the President the information he requires from all parts of the country.

The National Emergency Council was established by Executive order in 1933 and is composed of the President, the Vice President, the members of the Cabinet, and the heads of some 23 independent establishments. Its usefulness as an actual council, which met weekly under my chairmanship, was very great in the period of the emergency which then confronted the country, but, as time has gone on, it no longer operates as a council but does continue to carry on important activities which are indispensable to the President of the United States, as well as to other branches of the Government, and the public. It maintains an information service and a press intelligence service, it publishes the United States Government Manual, and it carries on through State and central staffs an important work of coordinating and reporting.

The information service makes available general information concerning all phases of governmental activity and is provided for all who submit questions or inquiries by mail, by telephone, or by personal call. In one sense it may be called a post-office address—"Uncle Sam, Post Office Box No. 1, Washington, D. C."—to which persons who want information about the Government but do not know the exact division or agency of the Government to which to apply, may write with confidence that their questions will be answered or else sent on to the proper agency for direct reply.

The press intelligence service carried on in the council is not a service for giving intelligence to the press, but rather for making available to responsible persons in the Government, both in the executive and in the legislative branches, a clipping service, which shows what the press of the country has printed. The partial consolidation of clipping services in this unit—a consolidation which should go further—already has resulted in economy and convenience. A clipping service of this kind, on a smaller scale, was maintained for many years in the White House but it was not then available to other branches of the Government. Its return to the White House with the additional feature of availability to all the rest of the Government will promote efficiency without violating tradition.

The publication of the United States Government Manual makes available to every citizen a simplified textbook of information as to the organization and availability of the Federal agencies. Published in loose-leaf form, it is sold by the Superintendent of Documents of the Government Printing Office.

The coordinating and reporting functions of the council have to do with the presentation to the President of factual information, independently gathered, as to the progress and effect of our governmental activities. Through its State offices the council has been able to facilitate the various Federal programs particularly with respect to State and local governments.

The plan also includes certain general provisions in order to accomplish fully the purposes of the act. In addition to the transfer of bureaus and other units, it is necessary also to transfer certain functions of heads of departments; to transfer records, property, and personnel; to transfer funds; and to provide that the power of appointment occasionally, and sometimes apparently quite accidentally, vested in a subordinate official of a department, shall be vested in the head of the department. It is impossible to exercise the proper direction and supervision over subordinate units unless the definite power of appointment, fixing of compensation, transfer, and promotion or dismissal of personnel is vested in the principal responsible head. In no other way can the purpose of consolidating similar functions under a single head as required by the act be accomplished in practice.

It is one of the five purposes of the Reorganization Act "to reduce expenditures to the fullest extent consistent with the efficient operation of the Government." This is an important purpose in each phase of the plan here presented. The Reorganization Act prohibits abolishing functions—in other words, basic services or activities performed. Therefore, the reduction in expenditures must necessarily be brought about chiefly in the overhead administrative expenses of the agencies affected. In a great many cases the economies to be effected by reorganization plan No. II will be the result of improved efficiency which will, as the plan works out, require fewer persons to perform the work or will require the employment of less temporary assistance.

In the case of the consolidation of the foreign services it is estimated that the administration by a single administrative unit in the Department of State will achieve a saving of $20,000 a year and that consolidation of the three field forces will make it possible to drop alien employees and, by a more effective use of personnel, to save an additional $100,000 a year when the readjustments have been made.

The total administrative expense of all of the agencies affected by this plan is about $25,000,000 per annum.

The reduction of such expenditures, which it is probable will be brought about by the taking effect of the reorganizations specified in the plan, is estimated at $1,250,000 per annum. Certain of these economies can be brought about at once. Others will require a gradual readjustment in machinery and business practices of the agencies affected.

May I repeat what I said in my message transmitting reorganization plan No. I, that in this as in future reorganization plans not every person will agree on each and every detail. Out of the many groupings and regroupings proposed, a few of the individual agencies conceivably could be placed elsewhere, but I have been seeking to consider the functional purpose of each agency as required by the Reorganization Act itself and have made this plan with the sole purpose of improving the service rendered by the Government to its citizens in accordance with the purposes set out in the act.

In view of the fact that it is now May 9, and that any reorganization plan must lie before the Congress for 60 calendar days, and because the reorganizations of an intradepartmental character require a great deal of research and careful painstaking detailed work, I do not propose to send any further general reorganization plans to the Congress at this session.

However, there are certain transfers, abolitions, and consolidations of committees, commissions, and boards which I propose to do by means of Executive and military orders under existing law as complementary to reorganization plan No. II when it becomes effective.

Then, also, by mere administrative procedure, some small agencies which have been listed in various publications as independent establishments, but whose independence has no basis in law or in formal Executive or military orders, may be reassigned to an appropriate placement by administrative procedure on the part of their respective heads.

Not all of the interdepartmental transfers and consolidations that are necessary and desirable have been accomplished in this reorganization plan No. II. I am directing the Bureau of the Budget to study these problems in order that they may be included in plans to be transmitted to the Congress at its next session.

For example, in order to save money and to do the work more efficiently, there are some units which should be divided so that a part of the work may be done by one agency and a part by another. Take, for example, the business of mapping. It is obviously important that the work of making surveys and accumulating data for maps should be done in the various agencies which are concerned primarily with the purpose for which the map is being drawn. On the other hand, the business of manufacturing maps might very well be consolidated in order to save money and to manufacture better maps.

I have considered the desirability of transferring the jurisdiction over deportable aliens from the Immigration and Naturalization Service in the Department of Labor to the Department of Justice, but I find that this matter will require further study, or perhaps legislation, and therefore it is not included in this plan.

I have also considered the problem of certain public lands insofar as they present overlapping jurisdiction between the Departments of the Interior and Agriculture.

Insofar as crops, including tree crops, are involved, there is something to be said for their retention in the Department of Agriculture. But where lands are to be kept for the primary purpose of recreation and permanent public use and conservation they fall more logically into the Department of the Interior.

I hope to offer a reorganization plan on this early in the next session.

There are other types of work carried on in the Federal Government where it may prove necessary and desirable to divide the functions now being carried on by a particular unit so as the better to serve the basic purpose for which the work was undertaken. Such problems I shall continue to study with the view of sending other reorganization plans involving both interdepartmental and intradepartmental reorganizations to the Congress at its next session.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 9, 1939.

Reorganization plan No. II, accompanying the President's message, was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REORGANIZATION PLAN NO. II

(Prepared by the President and transmitted to the Senate and the House of Representatives in Congress assembled, May 9, 1939, pursuant to the provisions of the Reorganization Act of 1939, approved April 3, 1939)

PART 1. DEPARTMENTS

SECTION 1. State Department: Transfers and consolidations relating to the Department of State and hereby effected, as follows:

(a) Foreign Commerce Service and Foreign Agricultural Service: The Foreign Commerce Service of the United States and its functions in the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce and the Foreign Agricultural Service of the United States and its functions as established by the act of June 5, 1930 (46 Stat. 497), in the Department of Agriculture are hereby transferred to the Department of State and shall be consolidated with and administered as a part of the Foreign Service of the United States under the direction and supervision of the Secretary of State.

(b) Functions of the Secretary of Commerce and the Secretary of Agriculture transferred to the Secretary of State; exceptions: The functions of the Secretary of Commerce with respect to the Foreign Commerce Service and the functions of the Secretary of Agriculture with respect to the Foreign Agricultural Service (other than functions with respect to such services pertaining to activities in the United States and to the compilation, publication, and dissemination of information) are hereby transferred to, and shall be exercised by, the Secretary of State except and provided that under regulations prescribed by the President—

(1) The Secretary of State shall cause to be made such investigations relating to commercial and industrial conditions and activities in foreign countries and such other specific investigations relating to foreign commerce as the Secretary of Commerce shall determine to be in the public interest and shall report to the Secretary of Commerce the results of and the information secured through such investigations. He shall also cause to be made such investigations relating to world competition and demand for agricultural products to production marketing and disposition of such products in foreign countries and to farm management and other phases of agricultural industry in foreign countries and shall conduct abroad such activities (including the demonstrations of standards of cotton, wheat, and other American agricultural products) as the Secretary of Agriculture shall determine to be in the public interest and shall report to the Secretary of Agriculture the results of and the information secured through such investigations and activities.

(2) The Secretary of Commerce may from time to time when he deems it in the public interest designate any officer in his Department to render temporary service under the provisions of and subject to the conditions named in section 5 of the act of March 3, 1927 (44 Stat. 1396).

(3) The Secretary of Agriculture may from time to time when he deems it in the public interest designate any officer of his Department to render temporary service under the provisions of and subject to the conditions named in section 2 of the act of June 5, 1930 (46 Stat. 498).

(4) The Secretary of Commerce and the Secretary of Agriculture may each designate an officer in his Department acceptable to the Secretary of State to serve in the Department of State as liaison officer in connection with the administration of the Foreign Service of the United States.

(5) One officer in the Department of Commerce designated by the Secretary of Commerce and acceptable to the Secretary of State, and one officer in the Department of Agriculture designated by the Secretary of Agriculture and acceptable to the Secretary of State shall be added to the membership of the Board of Foreign Service Personnel for the Foreign Service.

(c) Status of Foreign Service officers: Foreign Commerce Service officers and Foreign Agricultural Service officers who by reason of transfer to the Foreign Service of the United States and by appointment according to law acquire status of Foreign Service officers therein shall not be included in the total number of officers in such Service for the purpose of determining the percentage limitation established by section 10 of the act of February 23, 1931 (46 Stat. 1207), as amended.

(d) China Trade Act registrar: Such officer of the Foreign Service as the Secretary of State shall make available for that purpose may be authorized by the Secretary of Commerce to perform the duties of China Trade Act registrar provided for in the act of September 19, 1922 (42 Stat. 849), under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce.

(e) Foreign Service Buildings Commission: The Foreign Service Buildings Commission and its functions are hereby transferred to the Department of State. The Commission shall exercise advisory functions, but all other functions (including administrative functions) shall be exercised under the direction and supervision of the Secretary of State by such division, bureau, or office in the Department of State as the Secretary shall determine.

SEC. 2. Treasury Department: Transfers, consolidations, and abolitions relating to the Department of the Treasury are hereby effected as follows:

(a) Bureau of Lighthouses: The Bureau of Lighthouses in the Department of Commerce and its functions are hereby transferred to and shall be consolidated with and administered as a part of the Coast Guard in the Department of the Treasury.

(b) Director General of Railroads: Office abolished and functions transferred: The office of director general of railroads is hereby abolished. The functions and duties of the director general of railroads are hereby transferred to the Secretary of the Treasury to be exercised and performed by him personally or through such officer or officers of the Department of the Treasury as he may authorize. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby designated as the agent provided for in section 206 of the Transportation Act, 1920 (41 Stat. 461).

(c) War Finance Corporation abolished: All of the functions, property, and obligations of the War Finance Corporation not heretofore transferred by statute to the Secretary of the Treasury are hereby transferred to the Department of the Treasury. The War Finance Corporation is hereby abolished and the Secretary of the Treasury shall complete the winding up of its affairs and shall dispose of its assets in accordance with the act of March 1, 1929 (45 Stat. 1442), not later than December 31, 1939.

SEC. 3. Department of Justice: Transfers, consolidations, and abolitions relating to the Department of Justice are hereby effected as follows:

(a) Federal Prison Industries, Inc.: The Federal Prison Industries, Inc. (together with its board of directors) and its functions, are hereby transferred to the Department of Justice and shall be administered under the general direction and supervision of the Attorney General.

(b) National Training School for Boys: The National Training School for Boys and its functions (including the functions of its board of trustees) are hereby transferred to the Department of Justice and shall be administered by the Director of the Bureau of Prisons, under the direction and supervision of the Attorney General.

(c) Board of Trustees of the National School for Boys abolished: The board of trustees of the National Training School for Boys (including the consulting trustees) is hereby abolished.

SEC. 4. Department of the Interior: Transfers, consolidations, and abolitions relating to the Department of the Interior are hereby effected as follows:

(a) Functions of the National Bituminous Coal Commission transferred: The functions of the National Bituminous Coal Commission (including the functions of the members of the Commission) are hereby transferred to the Secretary of the Interior to be administered under his direction and supervision by such division, bureau, or office in the Department of the Interior as the Secretary shall determine.

(b) National Bituminous Coal Commission abolished: The National Bituminous Coal Commission and the offices of the members thereof are hereby abolished and the outstanding affairs of the Commission shall be wound up by the Secretary of the Interior.

(c) Office of Consumers' Counsel abolished and functions transferred: The office of Consumers' Counsel of the National Bituminous Coal Commission is hereby abolished and its functions are transferred to, and shall be administered in, the office of the Solicitor of the Department of the Interior under the direction and supervision of the Secretary of the Interior.

(d) Bureau of Insular Affairs: The Bureau of Insular Affairs of the War Department and its functions are hereby transferred to the Department of the Interior and shall be consolidated with the Division of Territories and Island Possessions in the Department of the Interior and administered in such Division under the direction and supervision of the Secretary of the Interior. The office of the Chief of the Bureau and offices subordinate thereto provided for in section 14 of the act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat. 769), are hereby abolished and all of the functions of such offices are transferred to, and shall be exercised by, the Director of the Division of Territories and Island Possessions.

(e) Bureau of Fisheries: The Bureau of Fisheries in the Department of Commerce and its functions are hereby transferred to the Department of the Interior and shall be administered in that Department under the direction and supervision of the Secretary of the Interior. The functions of the Secretary of Commerce relating to the protection of fur seals and other furbearing animals, to the supervision of the Pribilof Islands and the care of the natives thereof, and to the Whaling Treaty Act, are hereby transferred to, and shall be exercised by, the Secretary of the Interior.

(f) Bureau of Biological Survey: The Bureau of Biological Survey in the Department of Agriculture and its functions are hereby transferred to the Department of the Interior and shall be administered in that Department under the direction and supervision of the Secretary of the Interior. The functions of the Secretary of Agriculture relating to the conservation of wildlife, game, and migratory birds are hereby transferred to, and shall be exercised by, the Secretary of the Interior. The provisions of the act of May 18, 1934 (c. 299, 48 Stat. 780), as amended by the act of February 8, 1936 (c. 40, 49 Stat. 1105), insofar as they relate to officers or employees of the Department of Agriculture designated by the Secretary of Agriculture to enforce any act of Congress for the protection, preservation, or restoration of game and other wildlife and animals shall apply to officers and employees of the Department of the Interior designated by the Secretary of the Interior to exercise and discharge such duties.

(g) Officers of Biological Survey may administer oaths: The provisions of the act of January 31, 1925 (c. 124, 43 Stat. 803), shall be applicable to such officers, agents, or employees of the Department of the Interior performing functions of the Bureau of Biological Survey as are designated by the Secretary of the Interior for the purposes named in the act.

(h) Migratory Bird Conservation Commission: The Secretary of the Interior shall be chairman of the Migratory Bird Conservation Commission, and the Secretary of Agriculture shall be a member thereof.

(i) Mount Rushmore National Memorial Commission: The Mount Rushmore National Memorial Commission and its functions are hereby transferred to the National Park Service in the Department of the Interior. The functions vested in the Commission by sections 3 and 4 (a) of the act of June 15, 1938 (c. 402, 52 Stat. 694) shall continue to be exercised by the Commission. All other functions of the Mount Rushmore National Memorial Commission shall be administered by the National Park Service under the direction and supervision of the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 5. Department of Agriculture; Rural Electrification Administration transferred: The Rural Electrification Administration and its functions and activities are hereby transferred to the Department of Agriculture and shall be administered in that Department by the Administrator of the Rural Electrification Administration under the general direction and supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture.

SEC. 6. Department of Commerce: Transfer of Inland Waterways Corporation: The Inland Waterways Corporation and all of its functions and obligations are hereby transferred to the Department of Commerce and shall be administered in that Department under the supervision and direction of the Secretary of Commerce. The capital stock of the Corporation shall continue to be held for the United States by the Secretary of the Treasury, but all other functions, rights, privileges, and powers and all duties and liabilities of the Secretary of War relating to the Inland Waterways Corporation are hereby transferred to, and shall be exercised, performed, and discharged by the Secretary of Commerce. The Secretary of Commerce shall be substituted for the Secretary of War as, and shall be deemed to be, the incorporator of the Inland Waterways Corporation.

PART 2. INDEPENDENT AGENCIES

SEC. 201. Federal Security Agency: Transfers and consolidations relating to the Federal Security Agency are hereby effected as follows:

(a) Radio service and United States film service transferred: The functions of the Radio Division and the United States film service of the National Emergency Council are hereby transferred to the Federal Security Agency and shall be administered in the Office of Education under the direction and supervision of the Federal Security Administrator.

(b) American Printing House for the Blind: The functions of the Secretary of the Treasury with respect to the administration of the appropriations for the American Printing House for the Blind (except the function relating to the perpetual trust fund) are hereby transferred to the Federal Security Agency and shall be administered under the direction and supervision of the Federal Security Administrator. The annual report and vouchers required to be furnished to the Secretary of the Treasury by the trustees of the American Printing House for the Blind shall be furnished to the Federal Security Administrator.

SEC. 202. National Archives: Transfers, consolidations, and abolitions relating to The National Archives are hereby effected as follows:

(a) Functions of Codification Board transferred: The functions of the Codification Board, established by the act of June 19, 1937 (50 Stat. 304), are hereby transferred to The National Archives and shall be consolidated in that agency with the functions of the division of the Federal Register and shall be administered by such division under the direction and supervision of the Archivist.

(b) Codification Board abolished: The Codification Board is hereby abolished and its outstanding affairs shall be wound up by the Archivist through the division of the Federal Register in The National Archives.

PART 3. EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT

SEC. 301. Transfers and abolitions relating to the Executive Office of the President are hereby effected as follows:

(a) Functions of National Emergency Council transferred: All functions of the National Emergency Council, other than those relating to radio service and film service (transferred by sec. 201 (a) of this plan to the Federal Security Agency), are hereby transferred to the Executive Office of the President, and shall be administered under the direction and supervision of the President.

(b) National Emergency Council abolished: The National Emergency Council is hereby abolished and its outstanding affairs shall be wound up under the direction and supervision of the President.

PART 4. GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 401. Transfer of functions of heads of departments: Except as otherwise provided in this plan, the functions of the head of any department relating to the administration of any agency or function transferred from his department by this plan, are hereby transferred to, and shall be exercised by, the head of the department or agency to which such transferred agency or function is transferred by this plan.

SEC. 402. Transfer of records, property, and personnel: All records and property (including office equipment) of the several agencies and all records and property used primarily in the administration of any functions transferred by this plan and, except as otherwise provided, all the personnel used in the administration of such agencies and functions (including officers whose chief duties relate to such administration) are hereby transferred to the respective departments or agencies concerned for use in the administration of the agencies and functions transferred by this plan: Provided, That any personnel transferred to any department or agency by this section found by the head of such department or agency to be in excess of the personnel necessary for the administration of the functions transferred to his department or agency shall be retransferred under existing law to other positions in the Government service or separated from the service subject to the provisions of section 10 (a) of the Reorganization Act of 1939.

SEC. 403. Transfer of funds: So much of the unexpended balances of appropriations, allocations, or other funds available for the use of any agency in the exercise of any function transferred by this plan, or for the use of the head of any department or agency in the exercise of any function so transferred, as the Director of the Bureau of the Budget with the approval of the President shall determine, shall be transferred to the department or agency concerned for use in connection with the exercise of the function so transferred. In determining the amount to be transferred, the Director of the Bureau of the Budget may include an amount to provide for the liquidation of obligations incurred against such appropriations, allocations, or other funds prior to the transfer: Provided, That the use of the unexpended balances of appropriations, allocations, or other funds transferred by this section shall be subject to the provisions of section 4 (d) (3) and section 9 of the Reorganization Act of 1939.

SEC. 404. Transfer of functions relating to personnel: Except as prohibited by section 3 (b) of the Reorganization Act of 1939, all functions relating to the appointment, fixing of compensation, transfer, promotion, demotion, suspension, or dismissal of persons to or from offices and positions in any department vested by law in any officer of such department other than the head thereof are hereby transferred to the head of such department and shall be administered under his direction and supervision by such division, bureau, office, or persons as he shall determine.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair also lays before the Senate, in connection with the message, reorganization plan No. II, prepared by the President, which will be published in the RECORD immediately following the message. The message and the accompanying plan will be referred to the Select Committee on Government Organization.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I ask that the message, with the accompanying plan, be printed as a public document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5269) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture and for the Farm Credit Administration for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER]. I wish to congratulate the committee which reported the agricultural appropriation bill.

Put the people on the pavement and they starve to death. Put them on soil and they live. Oklahoma has oil volcanos which can darken the sky with liquid wealth, but the greatest value in Oklahoma is found in the first 6 inches of the soil. That wealth is washing away and blowing away. Thirteen million acres in Oklahoma are subject to soil erosion.

Oklahoma is one of the newest States in the Union. It is represented by the forty-sixth star in the flag; and yet our soil is badly eroded, much more so than is the soil in the Eastern States, where the rainfall is more gentle and erosion is not so noticeable. When it rains in Oklahoma—which is not often enough—it rains "gully washers" and "clod busters." The rain takes the soil with it. And when the wind blows, it blows. Our people are rather a sturdy race. They offset the wind when they can. We have wind indicators out in the panhandle in Oklahoma. On the gable end of a house will be seen a pole sticking out horizontally. On the end of the pole is fastened one end of a long chain. Whenever the wind blows so hard that the log chain stands out straight, it is too windy to work, but if it sags a little the farmers go right on pitching hay. Our people are sturdy, but in spite of that fact the fertility of the soil is getting away from us.

Soil conservation, flood control, and agricultural relief are all part of a great program to reestablish the foundation of prosperity and wealth. When prosperity comes back to America in full measure it will come from the forks of the creek and from the grass roots—in other words, from the farms.

Our farmers feed the country. At one time John Simpson of our State painted a word picture of the farmer feeding the rest of mankind. He has a long table. Down that table sit the lawyer, the banker, the doctor, the merchant, and all the other people dining at the table of the farmer. He is the host; and yet he himself has not enough to live on. In the hearings which some Senators conducted over the Nation 2 years ago a farmer down in Texas came before the committee. He was dressed in rags. According to his testimony he had produced enough cotton to make a wide cotton belt which would girdle the globe; but he did not have enough clothes to hide his body. This condition is true of the agricultural group, which represents almost a third of the population of the Nation. Thirty million people are represented by the agricultural group. There are 6,000,000 farm families, with 5 to a family. We cannot hope to have prosperity until this third of the population has a purchasing power commensurate with the American standard of living.

The pending measure is said to be the largest appropriation bill ever brought out of a committee for agricultural purposes. I know there is opposition to it. Those who are not represented in the farm group say, "Why should we pay taxes to support the other fellow?" My answer is, "To keep his fall from pulling us down." We cannot build a great nation upon a shifting population any more than we can erect a great building upon shifting sands.

My State of Oklahoma is young, and yet, from the scars on the face of the earth there, it is old, because, as I have said of the heavy rainfall that comes in torrents when it comes and because of the light sandy topsoil erosion takes place rapidly. There in a new territory opened by a rush of settlers 50 years ago last month, there are farms that used to be fertile which today are eroded. It would take 3 acres to raise a crop that should be produced on 1 acre. Some of the acres will not even raise a crop at all. They are "hogbacks." Some of them are so poor they "would not raise an umbrella," it has been said; and down in southeastern Oklahoma occasionally the boll weevil appears and eats up everything but the mortgage.

Sixty-two and two-tenths percent of the farms that were given to the farmers of Oklahoma 50 years ago no longer belong to them. There are four reasons why the possession of the farm has passed from the farmer. One is taxes on the homestead. Several States are passing homestead tax-exemption laws. Oklahoma has enacted such a law for the homestead up to $1,000. That is a good thing. We should put a premium and not a penalty on home ownership.

Another reason why the farmers have lost the ownership of their farms is high interest rates they had to pay on the mortgages they placed on their farms in order to improve them. This administration has beaten down interest rates and thus has afforded help in that direction.

A third reason why the farmers have lost their farms is the lower yield resulting from the loss of soil fertility. There again the present administration is fighting back with a comprehensive program that will preserve the fertility of the soil.

The fourth reason—and perhaps the most important one—is low farm prices. The farmers are losing their farms because they cannot get a fair price for what they produce. A few years ago a farmer friend of mine told me of his experience. He went to town one day with a load of oats and took along a calf that was ready for market and that he did not need. He sold the calf at the stockyards, and by the time there had been deducted yardage, the commission, the hay, and certain other service charges, which are always the same regardless of the price of livestock, he had 54 cents left from the sale price of that calf. It was lunch time; he went to the lunch counter and saw on the menu "calf liver, 50 cents." So he spent 50 cents, and after he had eaten his lunch he had 4 cents left. He then sold his oats. Oats at that time were 7 cents a bushel. That night, before he got home, he stopped to eat supper, and his supper cost 70 cents. So he ate a calf and 10 bushels of oats. That is translating the farmer's product in terms of dollars; as he must translate it in terms of dollars before he can spend it.

When this Nation was young it was argued that in order to be a great country we must have great industries, that in order to have great industries we must protect them from competition with the Old World, and in order to protect them from competition of the industries of the Old World we must erect tariff walls. It was understood that the tariff walls would remain until our industrial institutions could be established and then those tariff walls would be lowered, but the opposite happened. The stronger the industrial group became because of the tariff the higher rose the tariff wall; the higher the tariff went the stronger the industrial group grew because of the tariff. So there developed a never-ending circle. The result was the more the farmer produced the cheaper his product got. There was an ever-widening gulf between what the farmer bought and what the farmer sold; what he sold brought less and what he bought brought increasingly more. No matter how much he increased his production, no matter how fast his herds increased, there was an ever-widening gulf between what he sold and what he bought, and it took more and more of what he sold to buy the necessaries of life.

Today when we buy an article that is protected by the tariff we pay an indirect subsidy to the manufacturer. No one says anything about it; no one objects. We do not see headlines in the newspapers criticizing a system under which the consumer pays a subsidy, a bounty, to a special class, the manufacturing class; but that is the system today. Every time one buys a commodity that is protected by the tariff he pays a tax, and that tax is a special bounty to the manufacturer, just the same as if it were collected by the Internal Revenue Department and appropriated by the Congress of the United States. It is a tax and an expenditure just the same. It is hidden a little more; it is not quite so obvious; but it is a tariff for the benefit of a special class and at the expense of the farmer, who must sell in an unprotected market and take the dollar he gets in an unprotected market and purchase commodities in a protected market. That is an unfair discrimination. But when we propose to do something for the farmer, there are those who say "No, no; let the law of supply and demand operate."

I am willing that the law of supply and demand should operate if we allow it to operate with equal force upon the manufacturer as upon the farmers. However, we have artificially protected the manufacturer by an artificial regulation of the law of supply and demand so far as the manufacturer is concerned; but we are told to let it operate naturally so far as the farmer is concerned. Therefore, we should either repeal all artificial regulations of the law of supply and demand as affecting industry, or else we should set up an offsetting artificial regulation of the law of supply and demand with respect to agriculture.

Now we have before us, according to the newspapers, the largest appropriation for a cash payment to the farmers that has yet been proposed in an agricultural bill. We also have voted some of the largest appropriations in history for battleships, some of the largest appropriations for the Army and air defense, all of which are proper and appropriate, but we should also look to the inside of this Nation. What good would it do us to protect ourselves from outside aggression, from outside danger, and in the meantime allow ourselves to be undermined from within by a system under which one-third of our people have less than enough to live on?

This proposed appropriation will not pay full parity to the farmer. Parity means that his bushel of wheat or his bale of cotton should buy as much as it did in better years, in the base period 1909–14, when he was in a better position than he is today. But we have not as yet had sufficient courage or enough money to appropriate an adequate sum to pay the farmer full parity for what he produces or what we consume of his commodities in this country. He is suffering, therefore, from an unfair discrimination that exists by virtue of law.

I know there are those who say, "We must stop spending." I subscribe to that view. I should like to stop spending if we could; but sometimes that appears to be false economy. It certainly would be false economy to stop spending at the farmers' expense, to begin our economy with agriculture. The farmer is the great market we of the United States look to. The farmer is the purchaser, and today business would surge forward if the farmer could get parity for his crops.

The farmer's condition is bad. I doubt if we all realize the situation he is in. The trouble is, we ride around in Pullman cars until we get fatty degeneration of the point of view and we forget how the farmer lives.

Many of the Senators here have farms, but sometimes they get so far from them that it is necessary to strain their memories to remember the lean days. Not many farmers have modern plumbing in their homes. Not many farmers have a modern bath tub. They have to take a bath in an old tin tub. They put it on the stove on Saturday night. One side of it gets hot and the other side is cold. I remember that if I leaned against one side of the tub it would blister me and if I leaned over on the other side it would chill me. That is the best equipment that most of the farmers can have today so far as modern plumbing is concerned.

We have air-conditioned offices and an air-conditioned Senate Chamber, but I never heard of even one farmer who had an air-conditioned home. Every now and then somebody throws it up to me, "Well, I know a farmer who is making it all right." Well, I know just one, and he is the tightest tightwad that ever tightened a wad. He is so stingy that he works his crossword puzzles up and down so that he will not have to come across. [Laughter.]

One time I was working for him. It was one of those hot days when the "lazy lawrence" was dancing on the horizon. It was so hot that every time I would lift a wheat bundle on the end of a fork it seemed that I could see ink spots all around. This farmer came out to see how the hired hands were getting along. We had a jug of water and a jug of oil under the same shock of wheat. The farmer got thirsty while he was out there and he reached down under the shock of wheat to get the jug of water to get a drink; but he would not take his eye off the hired hands out there for fear they would miss a lick, I guess. He fumbled around under the shock of wheat, and he got hold of the wrong jug. He got the jug of old black oil. Still watching the hired hands, he brought up his arm, pulled the cob out, and turned up the jug—glug-glug—and got his mouth full of the old black oil; but he would not spit it out—not this fellow—no, sir. He just waited until the binder came around again, and he hailed it and got down under it and oiled the whole machine. [Laughter.]

It is possible that if a farmer was that tight, he might be able to hold on to something; but not many of them have been able to do it, because as a rule the farmer is generous—he is a good spender. This money that we are appropriating to go to him will soon be back in the hands of the merchant, the manufacturer, and the laborer. The farmer will set this money into circulation. When we pass this bill and it becomes law and this money is sent out, do you think it will make that much less money in the United States? Will it make that much less money in the United States because we take some of this money from those most able to pay, and try to bring the farmer's income up to parity, putting it in the hands of those in most need? Certainly not. It will have an equalizing effect.

There is enough wealth in the United States today for every person, every man, woman, and child to have enough to buy the necessaries of life, but is is not properly distributed.

A program like this has a leveling effect. There are five spokes to the wheel of profits. First there is the producer of the raw product, the farmer. Next there is labor. Then there is capital. Then there is management. Finally, there is the consumer. There are enough profits, if properly distributed among these five spokes of the wheel of profits, for all to share; but where have the profits gone in the past?

Have the profits gone to the farmer who produces the raw product? Certainly not, because the farmer is bankrupt today.

Have the profits gone to the laborer who toils? Certainly not; because the laborer does not have a week's rations ahead today.

Have the profits gone to capital? Yes; too much of the profits have gone to capital. The high interest rates have placed a greater premium upon capital than upon human energy.

Start $10,000 out, and start a young man out. Let the $10,000 gather interest at the rates that prevailed before this administration. Compound that interest. Let the laborer work as a day laborer over a period of 30 years, and come back, and what do you find? You find that the $10,000 has grown into a fortune. You find the laborer with barely enough to cover his body, and barely enough food to carry him from one day to the next.

We have put too much emphasis on the value of money. Yes; too much of the profits has gone to capital.

What about management? That is where some more of the profits have gone. I believe that a good executive ought to receive a good salary, but certainly not the ridiculously high salaries that have been paid to the directors of corporations, to the managers, to the presidents; high salaries like that which was paid to Mr. Grace, president of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation, running up into the hundreds of thousands of dollars, and then a bonus of a million dollars. There were nine vice presidents, and the lowest paid one received $54,000 salary, each one receiving also a tremendous bonus, thereby hiding the profits of industry under the cloak of salaries, at the expense of the stockholders themselves, and certainly at the expense of the farmer who produces the raw products and the laborer whose toil fashions the products into useful commodities.

Finally, there is the consumer. Has the consumer benefited by the low prices of farm commodities? Certainly not. The consumer has always paid all that the traffic would bear.

If this were not a situation that is the result of law, I would be wasting my breath. Only yesterday I heard a Member of this body say, "You cannot legislate prosperity into a country." I disagree with that statement. You can legislate conditions and prosperity will result; but prosperity cannot result when one class, by virtue of legislation, is given year after year a subsidy which amounts to $450,000,000 in the form of tariff that goes directly to the manufacturing class, the same as if it were levied as a tax and paid out as a bounty year after year.

The only objection I have to this bill today is that it will be necessary to do it all over again every year. Any farm plan which depends upon appropriations and taxes will collapse when any Congress fails to pass the proper appropriations. The farmer ought to have a program that will operate mechanically, that will operate automatically, just as the program of the tariff operates automatically for the benefit of the manufacturer. Every year we come in here and ask for appropriations for the farmer. Sometimes he gets more than other times; but never has the farmer received enough to bring his income up to parity. But once we have a Congress that fails to pass the appropriation the whole plan collapses. But what about the manufacturer's plan? Does it collapse? Certainly not. It goes on operating automatically. It is invisible to the naked eye, so to speak. It is an automatic plan; a sort of a self-financing one that carries itself.

That is what I should like to see us enact here for the benefit of the farmer—a plan that would work until it was repealed. Then it would take an overt act on the part of Congress to repeal it. It would take an affirmative act on the part of Congress to keep it from working, whereas this plan of "appropriate and tax" takes an overt, affirmative act on the part of Congress every year to make it work.

We could pass legislation at this session of Congress which would do the same thing for the farmer that the tariff does for the manufacturer—in other words, give the farmer a farm tariff.

I never have subscribed to the program of crop control. I never have believed in saying to a man, "You cannot produce all you want to produce." Of course, the reason for crop control was that we wanted to try to give the farmer parity payments on all he produces on a certain number of acres if he complies with the control program. Naturally we could not give him parity payments on all he would produce unless we limited the amount. That, of course, is the purpose of such a program. But that was not a logical program, because it anticipated what we used in this country, in addition to some that we would export.

On the other hand, if we guarantee to the farmer a fair price on what he produces which we consume in this country, then we can release him from control above that amount. Put him on notice that all he produces above that he will sell in the world market at the world market price. That is logical. Every one else in the United States is on an American standard of living, which is a higher standard of living than that of the rest of the world—everyone else, I say, is on an American standard of living except the farmer. The farmer alone is in competition with the pauper labor of the world. When the farmer produces a bushel of wheat or a pound of cotton he is producing it in competition with the coolies, in competition with the peon. He is in competition with the lowest paid labor in the world. Everyone else is on a higher standard of living in the United States. We call it the American standard of living. Why should we not at this session of Congress guarantee the American farmer the American market at an American price? That is logical, that is sane and sensible. Then release him from control above that amount.

Thomas Jefferson once said, "It is not by concentration of power that good government is attained, but by distribution of power. If we are told from Washington when to sow and when to reap, we shall soon want bread." It seems that Jefferson foresaw the present situation when he made that statement.

Release the farmer from control. He is no fool. It is his back that aches when he picks cotton. It is his head that swims when he pitches wheat. He is not going to produce a great surplus to sell below the cost of production if he receives enough to live on from his domestic allotment. Guarantee him the American price for what we consume in this country, and I believe he will voluntarily regulate his own production above that amount.

Today when you eat bread, remember that the wheat which makes up that bread was produced by the farmers and sold at a cost lower than the cost of producing it. I know my colleagues are willing to pay the farmer a fair price. The shirt you have on is made out of cotton that was sold by a farmer who did not get the cost of production for that cotton.

For some years Colonel Westbrook was with the Works Progress Administration. It was his business to figure out the man-hour labor in connection with different commodities, and according to his figures it takes one man-hour of labor to produce one pound of lint cotton. According to that, if we are to follow the spirit and letter of the wage-hour law, we should pass a law guaranteeing the farmer 25 cents for every pound of lint cotton we consume in this country, and then allow him to produce above that all he wants to produce and let him sell it if he wants to or keep it if he wants to, guaranteeing him at least a minimum wage for his labor.

Instead of that, however, we continue to appropriate and hand out to the farmer a partial parity payment each year, then let him lose his farm, and let him move to town and get on the W. P. A. Then we come in and vote appropriations for the W. P. A. to support him in town. I have supported the appropriations and I shall continue to support them, because it is a situation which already exists. But our passing appropriation bills like the one before us is like treating smallpox by putting poultices on the pimple. We are not getting at the source of the thing. If we are to get at the source of it we must pass a domestic allotment bill which will allot to each farmer his share of the domestic market, then guarantee him by law a fair price on that, just as we guarantee the manufacturer protection by the tariff law. Let us give the farmer a tariff.

There are several plans which have been offered for the relief of agriculture. Any one of them would be an improvement over the present one. Each one of these is self-financing.

Take the domestic allotment plan, for example. If a farmer had an allotment of five bales of cotton as his part of the domestic market, the Secretary of Agriculture would issue him five bale tags. It would not be necessary to issue the bale tags to the man himself, but simply announce to him that he would have five bales of cotton on which he would receive the domestic price, and send his bale certificates to a pool, then send him the money for the difference between the domestic price and the world price, without the process of taxation and appropriation through which we are going in connection with the bill before us. Then let the law require that each processor of cotton must purchase one of these bale tags before he could process a bale of cotton for domestic use. The processor then would pay the money into the pool, and the Secretary of Agriculture would pay the money out of the pool to the cotton farmer. Then we would have a self-financing plan which would be comparable to the plan which now is so beneficial to the manufacturing group. It would then be unnecessary for us to appropriate and spend every year for the benefit of the farmer.

Today if the farmers had the American price for the part of their commodity consumed in this country, in my opinion, we could fold up most of the W. P. A. and relief programs in the agricultural areas of this country. Every farmer needs something. He needs clothes for his family, he needs clothes for himself, he would like some of the delicacies which the food markets offer for sale. Every farm needs barbed-wire fencing, every farm needs metal roofing, every farm needs lumber, harness, machinery, paint; and all of these would be purchased if the farmer had the purchasing power.

I am supporting the pending proposal, and I shall support the highest figure on every amendment that is offered in an effort to equalize the opportunities in this country in order to put the farmer upon economic stilts, to make him economically as tall as the manufacturer.

Mr. President, I desire to say to the Senators on this side of the Chamber that no administration was ever returned to office on 6-cent cotton and 50-cent wheat, and very few Senators were ever returned to office with those prices existing, particularly if they subscribed to the program which resulted in those prices.

Mr. President, Congress can do something about the matter. There are some who would like to have Congress adjourn. I would not mind having Congress adjourn, from one standpoint, but from another standpoint I think we should undertake the enactment of a farm bill which would do something for the farmer. We have a Democratic House of Representatives, we have a Democratic Senate, and we have a Democratic President. We pledged relief to the farmer, and what have we done? We have placed him under a system of compulsory acreage control and every year we vote him partial parity payments like a dole. We vote it out and hand it to him. We have not given him a self-operating and self-financing program, a program which will last and will not fall of its own weight unless it is continually reenacted year after year.

Unless we do something for the man who tills the soil, he soon will lose ownership of the soil. Many of the farmers have already lost their farms. Farm tenancy in the United States today has reached the staggering figure of 42 percent.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BROWN in the chair). Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Did I understand the Senator from Oklahoma to say that through these appropriations we are putting the American farmer on a dole?

Mr. LEE. I say yes; we are putting the farmer on a dole when we give him a program under which it is necessary to appropriate every year, and make him cut his acreage in order to get the money. I do not say it is a dole in the sense that the farmer is receiving charity, but the method of handing it out smacks very much of a dole.

Mr. LUCAS. I want to say to the Senator from Oklahoma, in reply to his answer, that in my humble opinion the American farmer, who at this particular time is cooperating in the program, will fiercely resent the statement made by the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. LEE. I should like the Senator from Illinois in his own time to explain what else it is when you raise the money by means of a tax and hand it to him in the form of a check and require him to cut his acreage in order to receive it. I am for the appropriation, and rejoice that we have this opportunity to appropriate this for the benefit of the farmer. But how much better it would be if we just guaranteed the farmer a fair price for the domestically consumed portion of his crops. That would leave him a feeling of independence.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Does the Senator know how much we pay in benefit payments to the American farmer as compared to the total amount in billions of dollars that the American farmer produces every year?

Mr. LEE. I do not understand the Senator's question.

Mr. LUCAS. Does the Senator from Oklahoma know how much this Government pays to the farmer in benefit payments and subsidies as compared with the total amount that the farmer raises in billions of dollars through the sweat of his brow and his own toil?

Mr. LEE. I have it in mind in round figures. If the Senator has it on the tip of his tongue, I should be glad to have it from him.

Mr. LUCAS. Does the Senator know that it is about 5 percent, and that 5 percent which he is talking about is what he says is putting the farmer on the dole, if I understand his argument correctly?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I understand that the income of the farmers is somewhere between seven and eight billion dollars annually. Is that correct?

Mr. LEE. That is correct.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I ask the Senator from Illinois: Is the total income of the farmer seven or eight billion dollars annually?

Mr. LUCAS. Will the Senator from Oklahoma yield to me to answer that question?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. The total income of the farmers in this country under the Roosevelt administration has increased a hundredfold over what it was in 1932, and last year it was slightly under the year before, but it was close to $8,000,000,000. What we are appropriating under the pending bill is from 5 to 7 percent of the total amount that the farmer produces in this country through his own sweat and his own toil. If the Senator from Oklahoma can find any reason under those figures for saying to the country that through the appropriation in the pending bill we are putting the farmer on the dole it is more than I can comprehend and understand, and I do not think it will be so regarded by the farmers in this country who are cooperating in this program. Some of the best citizens in my community—yea, the best citizens in American life today on the farm—are cooperating in this program, thereby attempting to get just a small sum by way of an adjustment to give them some purchasing power in line with all other industry in this country.

I admit the program is not perfect. Of course, no program is perfect. The program which the Senator from Oklahoma is talking about now, the domestic-allotment plan, has been considered many, many times in the past, and no Congress has yet ever seen fit to adopt it. The Senator's program may work. I hope the Senator from Oklahoma is correct in his statement, but I think he is on the wrong track in connection with that particular type of farm program; and some of the best leaders of agricultural thought in all America think the same as the senior Senator from Illinois with respect to that proposition.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, the total income of the farmers last year, as the Senator from Illinois has stated, was something less than $8,000,000,000. About $1,000,000,000 of that amount came out of the Federal Treasury. I do not see how the Senator figures that the pending appropriation bill which we are considering at the present time, carrying approximately one and a quarter billion dollars, or a little more, is only 5 percent of $8,000,000,000. I do not understand the mathematical calculations of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. President, I wish to say further that last year the farmers of this country produced a splendid crop, much better than the average—in fact, it was an excellent crop. It was not a record breaker, but it was a very excellent crop, well balanced. It did not consist of a large crop raised here and a small crop raised some other place, but was a well-balanced crop. In addition to the farmers raising that crop, we had to reach into the Federal Treasury and pay them a dole. I wish to use the words of the Senator from Oklahoma because they are correct. It is a dole. We reached into the Treasury and got out more than a billion dollars to pay the farmers a dole on top of that fine crop they raised. If that does not indicate that there is something wrong with this program, then I do not know what evidence is required to prove that there is something wrong.

I thank the Senator from Oklahoma for yielding.

Mr. LEE. I thank the Senator from Colorado. I was going to call the attention of the Senator from Illinois to his figures. I am sorry he has temporarily left the Senate Chamber. But his mathematics or mine, one or the other, are very much in error. If the pending bill, calling for over a billion dollars, should be passed, and the American farmers' total income is six or seven billion dollars, it seems to me the amount carried in the bill would be far in excess of the 5 percent referred to by the Senator from Illinois.

The Senator from Illinois also referred to the fact that the farmers cooperated.

Of course they cooperated because they had no alternative. It was "take this or else." And the law said "If you do not cooperate you do not get the loan and you do not get the parity payments." So, of course, they accepted it. I urged them to, because it was all that was offered, and I voted for the program because there was more good in it than bad.

But that did not still my tongue from calling attention to the fact that it was not a solution to the farm problem, and I shall never still my tongue as long as we have a program which does not give the farmer an even break with the manufacturer.

For years the United States Congress has smiled on the factory and frowned on the farmers, and so I say the present farm program is too much on the plan of a dole. How much more dignified it would be for the Congress to guarantee the American farmer the American market at an American price fixed by law.

Certainly the present administration has been kinder to the farmer than any administration that I can remember. This administration has opened up the Treasury, and for the first time that I can remember the farmer received a Treasury check, and it saved him from bankruptcy. I am not complaining about that. I am not blind to that. It has launched a great soil-conservation program. I am not blind to that. I am supporting the pending amendment. I am for it. But I say, with respect to that part of the program which requires compliance, and which says, "If you do not comply with the program, you will not get the loan, you will not get the parity payment," that, of course, they are cooperating. They have no choice. There is no alternative. They either get the checks or starve to death, so they will cooperate. But they do not like it, and I do not like it. In our State of Oklahoma in some of the counties the farmers voted down the cotton quotas. They have not voted on the wheat. The tobacco farmers voted down the tobacco quotas.

I say this is not a satisfactory program; and the man who comes before the Congress and says, "This is a satisfactory solution of the farm problem," is, in my opinion, making a mistake.

Mr. President, I am encouraged to some extent. This is the largest appropriation for the farmer that has been presented to us. I believe it will pass. I believe its effect will be immediately felt in an increased purchasing power. I believe when these green checks begin to reach the forks of the creek, when the farmer gets his green check and comes to town, he will buy from the merchant, the merchant will buy from the factory, and the hitchhikers will get their jobs back, and we will be back on the road to prosperity.

It is my hope that the taste of prosperity that I think will result from this comparatively small amount that we are voting for the benefit of the farmer will cause us to consider seriously a farm plan that will go to the roots of this question, and will be a solution that will continue to operate regardless of whether we appropriate every year or not.

Mr. President, no nation long survives with liberty and happiness when the man who tills the soil is reduced to the status of peonage. It is a wise government which realizes that the first strata of society is the foundation and on that strata all others rest.

It is a wise government that undertakes to rehabilitate the disinherited. It is a wise government that realizes that the man on the farm is closest to nature; that he alone is an individualist. The reason every farmer is out on the farm trying to scratch a living out of the ground today is because he wants to be his own boss. He wants to be independent. I should like to preserve the independence of the farmer in this country. He is about the last individualist left. He is now fighting for his independence.

I am glad the Appropriations Committee has reported a measure calling for such an appropriation. I shall support it. I shall support the highest figure proposed in any amendment. Even then I think we shall fall short of the obligation to the farmer to make up to him for the years of disadvantage which he has suffered. The manufacturing group, at the lowest estimate, has been receiving the benefit of the tariff to the extent of about $450,000,000 a year. The measure before us is a belated help to the farmer. I am for it. I wish this Congress could at this session take up legislation which would really seek to get to the bottom of the farm problem and provide a solution.

I thank the Senate for its indulgence. Mr. President, the soil-conservation amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER] is worthy. It is not intended to be a part of the soil-conservation payments. It is for the promotion of soil conservation by the accumulation of information, experiments, and for other purposes. My opinion is that it will return, in the value of fertility preserved, manyfold the amount called for in the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. GURNEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I wish to address myself for a few moments to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], which is the pending business. The amendment proposes to increase the appropriation for the Soil Conservation Service by approximately $2,000,000.

I have often expressed the opinion that the greatest of the many achievements of this administration is the fact that it has made the people of the United States conservation-minded. If nothing else had been accomplished in the past 6 years, the fact that farmers, even in the most remote areas as well as those who are affected by the uses and the preservation of all forest and mineral resources, are keenly alive to the importance of conservation of our natural resources would entitle the administration to a prominent place in history.

Mr. President, the committee has not dealt parsimoniously with the Soil Conservation Service, or with any phase of conservation work. Doubtless the $2,000,000 sought by the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas would be valuable and helpful to some of the soil-conservation districts. However, I wish to point out to the Senate that in the year 1938 the appropriation for cooperation with the soil-conservation districts was only $625,000, whereas the present bill carries the sum of $3,158,988 for that purpose.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. I understand that the direct appropriation was $654,000, but $2,500,000 was added by transfer of funds. Is not that correct?

Mr. RUSSELL. The total appropriation has not been increased.

Mr. MILLER. I am referring to the district work. Mr. Myer, testifying at page 549 of the hearings, in speaking about the district program, said:

> That is where, as a matter of fact, the majority of this $3,158,988 has come from. We have simply shifted it over from one type of service to another. Two years ago $584,000 was included in the appropriation for cooperation with the districts. We have shifted over, I would say, something over $2,500,000 from other projects to carry on the district work today. We have had no increase in total funds but have had some reductions.

I thank the Senator.

Mr. RUSSELL. I understood that the Senator from Arkansas was primarily concerned in obtaining additional funds for cooperation with the soil-conservation districts. I did not know that he was concerned as to the source from which those funds were derived. Nevertheless, the fact remains that the funds available for the specific type of work which the Senator seeks to aid by his amendment have increased to $2,500,000 in the past 2 years. In addition, the Soil Conservation Service has an item of $10,286,000 for carrying on demonstrational work in certain areas. In those areas projects have been undertaken to demonstrate to the farmers of the several States just what progress can be made by carrying on soil-conservation practices. More than 8,000,000 acres are embraced in these demonstration areas, and I think I am correct in saying that at least one such area is located in each one of the agricultural States.

In addition to the funds that are appropriated in this item, there are at the present time, or will be on the 1st of July, 392 Civilian Conservation Corps camps engaged, under the direction of the Soil Conservation Service, in soil-conservation work, both in the demonstrational areas and on the soil conservation district projects which have been created by the farmers themselves under the laws of 35 States which authorize the creation of soil-conservation districts. It is estimated that it requires $1,000 a year to support one boy in a C. C. C. camp. If the total cost of those camps is charged up to the Soil Conservation Service—and I do not think it is unfair so to charge that item—it means that approximately $80,000,000 that does not appear in this appropriation bill at all but is carried in the independent offices appropriation bill is also being devoted to conservation work on demonstration areas or cooperative projects.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. The demonstration areas are merely areas established in the various States and are what their name implies, and they are areas which are largely responsible for the creation of the interest in the district work. Is not that true?

Mr. RUSSELL. That is exactly correct. Of course, a farmer who has been over a demonstration area and has been able to see the type of work that is applied on land that is similar to land on his own farm knows how to go home and combat erosion and depletion of his soil.

Mr. President, in addition to these huge sums spent on soil conservation, there is carried in this bill the sum of $500,000,000 for payments to farmers for following soil-conservation practices on their farms. Freely do I concede that that item has no direct relation to the scientific work of the Soil Conservation Service; but every person who is familiar with the soil-conservation work that is carried on under the soil-conservation program in the Agricultural Adjustment Administration knows that it has been of incalculable benefit in preserving the fertility of our soil and preventing soil depletion.

I do not think, Mr. President, that this amendment can be wholly justified; I am sure that it cannot be in the amount the Senator from Arkansas suggests. The committee gave careful consideration to it, and, after having considered it from all angles, was of the opinion that the increase of approximately two and a half million dollars for this purpose over the last 2 years was as much as even the most ardent conservationist could reasonably request. I would like to see these funds made available for this important work. The people of my State are greatly interested. But this bill already exceeds the Budget estimates and I think this amendment should be defeated.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. RUSSELL. I have surrendered the floor, but I will be glad to answer any question I can.

Mr. MILLER. The Senator is always fair, and I realize the necessity under which he is placed to uphold the action of the committee; but, as a matter of fact, the hearings disclose that there are now 146 organized districts in the United States, comprising 78,089,000 acres of land, and that unless this appropriation is increased only 97 of those districts can be operated by the Service. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. RUSSELL. That is the statement that was made to the committee by the officials of the Soil Conservation Service. However, I understood from the general trend of the testimony that if the demonstration areas were completed, as it was expected that some of them would be completed, additional scientific and technical aid that has been engaged in work on the demonstrational areas would be available for the soil-conservation districts.

Mr. MILLER. Yes; there would be a shifting there; that is true.

Mr. RUSSELL. So that the statement of the Senator from Arkansas would not be literally correct as to the number?

Mr. MILLER. No; there might be a shifting as to numbers.

Mr. RUSSELL. That is quite correct.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Georgia a question?

Mr. RUSSELL. I will gladly answer any question if I can.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to be advised whether the Bureau would be able to use the additional funds if this amendment were agreed to. Is the Bureau prepared to expand the work sufficiently so that if the money were appropriated there would not be a waste of funds? It seems to me that this work is very valuable indeed, and I would be limited in my idea of the amount appropriated only by the ability of the Bureau to use the money to advantage. If they can do that, I do not see why the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas should not be agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL. I have never, in my experience as a member of the Appropriations Committee or a subcommittee of that committee, known any amendment providing additional funds to be presented that the bureau affected did not state that they could use the funds. It is my opinion that the Bureau could use the funds, but there are many other items in this bill that are just as important as is the pending amendment. The committee and the Senate cannot afford to vote for every increase in funds that is suggested. In my judgment, as one who is most friendly to this work, the amendment seeking an increase of $1,900,000 should not be adopted.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, does the Senator recall that the evidence shows that the Department made a request for a larger sum than the Budget Bureau estimated?

Mr. RUSSELL. I think the evidence discloses that the Department asked for $5,000,000 for this purpose. I am not clear in my own mind as to whether the request was made by the Soil Conservation Service to the Secretary of Agriculture when the estimates were made up, or whether the Secretary submitted the request to the Bureau of the Budget, but the head of the Soil Conservation Service, undoubtedly, sought to secure approval of the sum of $5,000,000 rather than the sum of $3,100,000 carried in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois yesterday stated, in answer to a question, that only $300,000,000 out of the $500,000,000 appropriated for soil conservation last year was used by the Department. I presume that is correct. I do not know why the full appropriation was not used. Of course, the pending amendment is for a more definite purpose, but, undoubtedly, it would be of use if it were agreed to and the money were appropriated.

It seems to me that more money should be appropriated. I am strongly in favor of a larger appropriation than the committee has put in the bill to carry out the present Agricultural Adjustment Act, for the bill does not even yet provide sufficient money for that purpose.

The Senator from Illinois yesterday stated that he should like to see the Triple A Act given a fair chance before it was repealed. The appropriations carried by the pending bill do not give the Triple A a fair chance according to the Agricultural Department's own figures. It will take at least a billion and a half dollars in benefit payments to pay the difference between the present market price and the Department's so-called parity price. Their parity price is generally conceded to be below cost of production. If the farmer is going to get any profit for his product, the amount in the bill is not yet sufficient to give either the Triple A a fair chance or to give the farmer a fair chance.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Considering the full amount we are proposing to appropriate, would the Senator say it would put the farmer on a dole and would be a hand-out to him, as the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE] contends?

Mr. FRAZIER. I am frank to say I cannot see anything else in it but a dole. Anything below the cost of production to the farmer is not a square deal and the farmer will go broke.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator is complaining, as I understand him, about the small amount we are appropriating by this bill for the farmer. Do I understand him to say because of the small amount we are appropriating that we are putting the farmer on a dole?

Mr. FRAZIER. Unlike the Senator from Illinois, I was not for the Triple A legislation. As a solution of the farm problem it was the best we could get; I have voted for it every time it has come up, and I have voted for the largest appropriations we could get; but I cannot see these benefit payments to the farmer in any other light than as a dole.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, if the Senator will further yield, I should like to ask if the Senator is in favor of larger appropriations, the result would be the higher the appropriations the greater the dole.

Mr. FRAZIER. Absolutely; and I would like to see higher amounts paid, high enough so that the farmer will get a profit on his product. He is entitled to a profit just as much as is the manufacturer entitled to a tariff to protect him and give him a profit on his products. But we know that we cannot get it. In my opinion, it is impossible to get the Congress to appropriate a billion and a half dollars annually to take care of the difference between the present farm prices and cost of production. It is an impossible proposition. When the present Agricultural Act was up before the Senate Agricultural Committee a few months ago, the committee put in the bill a provision authorizing an appropriation large enough to carry out the purposes of the bill, and those who were in favor of doing something for the farmer insisted that that provision go in the bill; but, of course, when the bill went to the conferees, that provision was stricken out. It was intimated that the President had said that he would veto anything above the amount that the bill had carried as passed by the House. This bill at the present time will be at least $750,000,000 or $775,000,000 below a sufficient amount to give the farmers the parity price on the five products that are included in the bill, to say nothing about the rest of the products.

I have here a letter which came this morning from Dayton, Wash. It is written by a lady who says she is a farmer. She says:

> I am only one of the many millions on our farms in this great country, but let me tell you from experience that the low price of wheat is exhausting the farmers in body and soul as well as purse. These are terrible days of depression for most farmers. We should have a "cost of production" put on wheat, and a fair margin of profit to live on, as we must all live while we are growing a crop.
>
> Here we pay 13 cents per bushel on wheat to our nearest terminal point, which is Portland, so you can readily see we don't get much for our wheat. Machinery and other necessities are not bought as a result of this low price for wheat. I believe if farmers received a decent price for their wheat, it would definitely help business in general for there is no buying now.
>
> We who have horses work every daylight hour and many hours when there is no daylight. These conditions are making slaves of us.
>
> We keep body and soul together, but that is about all. What for? I often wonder. I can't see any future ahead, only bankrupting days.
>
> I want to tell you about ourselves—it is no different with us than with many other farmers.

Then she goes on. She says:

> Only God knows how I have wept and prayed over conditions as they are, until it seems I have no voice left to protest this terrible condition.

She goes on and tells of present prices. Out in North Dakota we are getting 17 cents a pound for butterfat right now, 11 cents a dozen for eggs, and 56 or 57 cents a bushel for wheat. They are bankrupting prices. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE] a few minutes ago made the statement that the increased appropriation in this bill will save many farmers from bankruptcy. It may, but there are a great many farmers who are going bankrupt now.

The figures that have been used are that one out of every five farmers in the United States has gone bankrupt, lost his home and his farm, during the past 18 years; and I think that statement is absolutely correct.

I believe that the farmer should have a square deal; and nothing but cost of production is a square deal for our American farmer, especially for the amount used for home consumption in the United States.

The Senator from Oklahoma also said that he wanted to see the farmers independent. I do, too. I should like nothing better than to see our farmers made independent; but they are not independent now. They are about as far in debt as they can get right now, and they are dependent on everybody in sight. That is the present situation of the farmer; and he is not by any means independent. He is anything but independent. Although he produces the food products which feed the Nation, he has nothing to say about the prices he will get. The present Agricultural Adjustment Act simply gives him a dole on five of the products he produces, if he will comply with the program and cut down production. It is the best he can get. The farmers are grabbing at it because it is the only thing that will give them a little better price.

The Secretary of Agriculture, when he came before the Committee on Agriculture on the cost-of-production bill in February of this year, stated that the wheat farmer might expect benefit payments amounting to 28 cents per bushel for the 1939 crop. He also said the loan price on wheat in 1939 would be 58 cents a bushel. That would make a total of 86 cents a bushel that the farmer who complied with the program this year might expect for his wheat. The parity price at that time, in February, was $1.14 a bushel, as figured by the Department of Agriculture. That is 28 cents more than the 86 cents the farmers are going to get for 1939 wheat. The 86 cents was at that time only 75 percent of the parity price; and the present bill provides that if the farmer gets 75 percent of the parity price he does not need any of this additional payment. Seventy-five percent is all that the Agricultural Department seems to favor. We have hardly been able to get that amount, and of course it is below cost of production; and our farmers will continue to go broke as long as they are getting anything below cost of production, I do not care what it is. If it costs us say $1.50 to produce a bushel of wheat and get a little profit on it, if we sell it for anything below that amount our wheat farmers are going broke. The cotton farmers will go broke, too, on anything less than cost of production for their product, especially for the amount used for home consumption.

I believe a bill can be worked out that will take care of the situation; but until it can be worked out I am for these appropriations. The higher they will go, up to the total of a billion and a half, which will give the farmers at least the parity price, the better, in my opinion, because it will give them that much more benefit payments.

So I am strongly in favor of the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], as well as the committee provisions that were put in the bill yesterday for higher amounts, because I think the farmers are entitled to them.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, a short time ago the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE] was discussing the farm program in general, incidental to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], and he made a statement which caused me to engage in a short debate with him upon a certain phase of the farm program.

One of the great troubles with a farm program of this kind is that so many persons have a notion that the farmer who is cooperating is receiving the benefit of the total amount that is appropriated or will be appropriated in this bill. They have an idea that the farmer is getting the greatest portion of this sum through benefit payments and through checks which come to him from time to time; and from the remarks of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE], which were agreed to by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER], it seems that this small amount, in comparison with the total amount of the income of the farmer, is the basis for their assertion that we are putting the American farmer on the dole. Notwithstanding the fact that the Senator from North Dakota says we are putting the farmer on the dole, and he does not like that situation, yet the Senator would increase the appropriation to a billion and a half dollars to give the farmer parity payments. So if the farmer is on a dole now, he would be on a superdole then. Mr. President, I deny this implication. Any amount he receives will only add to his dollar more purchasing power, to which he is justly entitled under the unbalanced economic laws of this Nation.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. If the farmer should get what I want to give him, he would at least get what the Department of Agriculture calls parity; and the provision in the pending bill at the present time will give him only 75 percent of parity, at best.

Mr. LUCAS. That does not change the statement of the Senator from North Dakota. Even though the farmer got parity payments—and no one would like to see the farmer get parity payments any better than would the Senator from Illinois—yet, notwithstanding that, following to a logical conclusion the statements of the Senator from North Dakota and the Senator from Oklahoma, the farmer would, under this appropriation, be on a dole.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield again, I shall try to explain the matter a little bit further.

Mr. LUCAS. I wish the Senator would do so, because I think his statement needs an explanation.

Mr. FRAZIER. According to my definition of a dole, anything that is a direct appropriation from the United States Treasury for the farmer is a dole; or, if it is a direct appropriation for labor, it is a dole. That is my definition of a dole. If I am not correct, that is all right; but that is my definition.

Mr. LUCAS. I am very sorry that I cannot agree with the able Senator from North Dakota on the definition of a dole as he has defined it here to the Senate and to the country. It is not my notion as to what a dole is, and I do not think very many Senators will agree with him upon that definition. My understanding of a Government dole has always been such sums of money given by the Government directly to individuals who have no employment and depend entirely upon these sums to sustain themselves.

But I rose, Mr. President, primarily for the purpose of saying to the Senate that in this large appropriation bill at the present time we find millions upon millions of dollars appropriated which never reach the farmer's pocket. For instance, in running through the bill I find an appropriation for forest-fire control, an appropriation for Japanese beetle control, an appropriation for fruit insects, an appropriation for the Mexican fruitfly, an appropriation for citrus canker eradication, an appropriation for gypsy and brown-tail moth control, an appropriation for Dutch elm disease eradication, an appropriation for thurberia beetle control, an appropriation for cotton insects, an appropriation for foreign parasites, and an appropriation of $191,000,000 for the Bureau of Public Roads, none of which have a single thing to do with benefit payments to the farmer. Forestry gets $21,000,000, the Biological Survey $4,600,000, and the Bureau of Plant Industry $4,000,000. So we could go on down through the appropriation bill and find millions upon millions of dollars of which the farmer will never receive a single dime in benefit payments, or in any other way, unless he gets it indirectly.

My only reason for taking the time of the Senate is to discuss this matter in the light of the arguments made by the two Senators to whom I referred a moment ago. I now submit facts and figures which cannot be challenged. In 1933 the farmer in this country had a cash income upon all of the commodities produced of $5,117,000,000, which included the benefit payments he received through appropriations of the Congress. The total payments, figured as a percentage of the cash income from the farm marketings, was 3.3 percent. In other words, what the farmer got out of benefit payments, in comparison with the total income that year, was 3.3 percent.

In 1934 the total income of the farmer was a little over $6,000,000,000, and he received in comparison with that income, so far as benefit payments were concerned, 9.6 percent. In 1935 the farmer received nine-tenths percent in benefit payments. In 1936 he received 3.8 percent in benefit payments.

In 1937, with a total income of the farmer of a little over $8,000,000,000, the actual money he received through the checks, which it is said are going to put him on the dole, was the small sum of 4.5 percent.

In 1938 the total income of the farmer at $7,150,000,000, which was almost a billion dollars less than it was in 1937, how much do my colleagues suppose the farmer received out of the $500,000,000 we appropriated for soil-conservation payments, and out of the $212,000,000 we appropriated last year for adjustment payments, under what was known as the parity payment amendment to the legislation at that time? The farmer actually received out of the appropriation of $500,000,000 and $212,000,000, which made $712,000,000, the sum of $482,000,000, or about 6.6 percent of the total farm income in this country that year.

In other words, out of every $100 last year the farmer received as income, $93.40 was produced by his own labor and $6.60 came from the Federal Government.

Mr. President, I put these figures into the RECORD for the primary purpose of refuting the argument that these benefit payments are for the purpose of putting the American farmer on the dole.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. RUSSELL. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Barbour	Bulow	Chavez
Andrews	Barkley	Burke	Clark, Idaho
Ashurst	Bilbo	Byrd	Connally
Austin	Borah	Byrnes	Danaher
Bankhead	Brown	Capper	Davis

Donahey	Johnson, Colo.	Minton	Sheppard

Holman	Maloney	Russell	Vandenberg
Holt	Mead	Schwartz	Wagner
Hughes	Miller	Schwellenbach

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], on page 92, line 21.

Mr. RUSSELL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McNARY (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]. Not knowing how he would vote on the question, I withold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. AUSTIN. I desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS];

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON] with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH];

The Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK]; and

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] with the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS].

I am not advised how the Senators named would vote on the pending question.

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS] is detained from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HERRING], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] are absent on important public business.

The Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are detained in important committee meetings.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] is absent on official business for the Committee on the Judiciary.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] are unavoidably detained.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] are detained on business in various Government departments.

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 39, as follows:

YEAS—31

Andrews	Frazier	Lundeen	Schwartz

So Mr. MILLER's amendment was rejected.

LOUISIANA NATIONAL BANK AND HIBERNIA BANK & TRUST CO.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BROWN in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1515) for the relief of the Louisiana National Bank, of Baton Rouge, and the Hibernia Bank & Trust Co., of New Orleans, which was, on page 1, line 11, to strike out all after "Provided", down to and including "$1,000", in line 11 of page 2, and to insert—

That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. OVERTON. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5269) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture and for the Farm Credit Administration for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 47, line 20, it is proposed to strike out "$139,152" and to insert in lieu thereof "$199,152."

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Mr. President, on page 47 of the bill now under consideration, under the appropriations made for the Forest Service, we find, beginning at line 14, the following brief paragraph entitled "Forest Influences":

Forest influences: For investigations and experiments at forest experiment stations or elsewhere for determining and demonstrating the influence of natural vegetative cover characteristic of forest, range, or other wild land on water conservation, flood control, stream-flow regulation, erosion, climate, and maintenance of soil productivity, and for developing preventive and control measures therefor, $139,152.

The effect of the amendment I have proposed would be to increase the appropriation by $60,000. I may say that the Secretary of Agriculture requested an additional $60,000 for this work. The request, however, was declined by the Bureau of the Budget, and in turn was declined by the House committee. I appeared before the Senate committee in support of the increase. I wish to take this opportunity to thank the able Senator who was chairman of the Senate Subcommittee on Appropriations, which held hearings on this bill, as well as the entire committee, for the very courteous and fair hearing I received both in connection with this and with other items.

The matter is of vital importance to the West. It involves entirely experimental and research work and proposes an increase in the appropriation of only $60,000, which, I am perfectly certain from my conferences with representatives of the Forest Service and from the testimony given before the committee, is vitally needed. So, despite the courteous treatment I received before the committee, I desire briefly to explain the amendment to the Senate in the hope that the Senate may see fit to increase the amount carried in this item for the entire western section of the country by $60,000.

The $139,000 which the bill carries is now being distributed over the entire country in studies being made of watersheds and the headwaters of various streams with a view to preventing floods and erosion conditions resulting in floods. It can be appreciated that $139,000 for such a purpose does not go very far. Experiments are being conducted in the Great Lakes region, in the South, and in the Eastern States. Of the entire appropriation of $139,000, only $14,000 is presently available to the intermountain region, and very little in excess of that amount is available to the entire region west of the Rocky Mountains.

Most of our land is irrigated, and in recent years the sudden, rapid floods which come down our mountain streams, due to an early run-off of the melting snows, have been increasing year by year to such an extent that they have become a tremendous threat, and have cost the State of Idaho many million dollars a year, not to mention the cost to adjoining Western States. This flood condition, which has grown worse in recent years, is due to three causes: First, the misuse of the range lands which lie at the headwaters of the streams. That condition is improving, but the damage has already been done. Second, forest fires, which have burned over and destroyed the vegetation at the headwaters of the streams, permitting the snows to melt and run rapidly down into the valleys below. Third, the natural erosion which has been taking place at the headwaters of the various mountain streams.

A few years ago the President allocated money from emergency funds to the Forest Service for the study of ways to prevent disastrous spring floods at the headwaters of these streams due to freshets and quick run-off. Four experiment stations were built from emergency funds, one in Idaho, one in Utah, one in Arizona, and I believe one in California. The $139,000 included in the bill as presently drafted will not further maintain those stations. As I have heretofore explained, it goes for the regular routine work of investigations all over the United States. If those stations are to be maintained, the additional $60,000 is absolutely required, as appears from the testimony before the subcommittee.

The Forest Service has made remarkable strides in its research to date, enabling it to revegetate lands at the headwaters of the streams which have been burned over by forest fires, which have been overgrazed by sheep, and which the forces of erosion have stripped bare. Experiments are now being conducted at the experiment stations to ascertain, first, the proper kind of plant cover, the kind of revegetation best adapted to the use to which it is to be put, and secondly, to work out a system of supplemental engineering structures to hold in check the early melting snows, and consequently bring about a smoother, evener flow of water throughout the year.

Mr. President, in my section of the country, when a flood occurs not only do we suffer the damage which the flood occasions, but the water is gone, for the floodwaters flow over the dam and go on to the ocean. Unless we have a reasonably steady run-off we not only suffer the property damage from the flood itself, but we likewise lose the water, which is our life blood. If the $60,000 is not provided, every one of the forest research stations built from emergency funds, which stations are doing almost incalculably valuable work, will have to close down. I respectfully suggest to the Senate that to deny a small sum to protect hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of property in the future is really false economy.

I know the work which these stations have done; I know the progress they have made; and I hesitate to see the stations, which were built from emergency funds, practically shut down and their very valuable work discontinued.

I have nothing further to say. I know the committee considered the matter. I presume the committee will have to oppose the proposed increase in the appropriation; but, in all sincerity, I suggest to the Senate that it is a vitally needed item for the entire West, which today is receiving only an insignificant part of the $139,000 which the bill carries, and which it carried last year.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, this item was first considered by the House committee and rejected. I understand it was submitted to the Budget and disapproved. The Senate committee, while recognizing that there is much merit to the contention of the Senator from Idaho, has also rejected it.

The forest influence investigation, to which the amendment is directed, has for a great number of years received emergency funds from the Works Progress Administration. At least it has received such funds ever since the Works Progress Administration was instituted. In 1938 this investigation received an allocation of $85,840 from emergency funds. In 1939 it received an allocation of $57,200. We all know that in due course another appropriation will be made for carrying on the activities of the Works Progress Administration for the coming fiscal year, and undoubtedly an allocation will also be made from that appropriation for this purpose.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. I am advised—I do not know whether or not it appeared in the hearings—that the emergency funds will no longer be available. I do not know what the hearings show upon that question, but the Forest Service officials advise me definitely to that effect.

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not know how the Forest Service officials could tell this far in advance what will be done with an appropriation which has not yet been enacted by the Congress. In every emergency appropriation act to date the Congress has specifically earmarked a large sum of money for Federal activities. I anticipate that a similar course will be followed in the next emergency appropriation bill for the W. P. A.

In addition, Mr. President, other activities in the Department of Agriculture are carrying on similar work. In the Soil Conservation Service, which was established in 1935, a large unit has been established for carrying on practically the same type of work to determine the influence of forests on stream flow, the effect of forests on climate, investigations of the principles involved in soil and moisture conservation and methods for their practical application, and watershed investigations of the effect of land-use practices on run-off as related to the methods of control of erosion and floods. The total amount used by the Soil Conservation Service, the new agency for carrying on practically identical investigations, is $1,641,000. I suggest that the $1,641,000, when added to the $139,000 in the item which the Senator from Idaho seeks to amend, is as much as the Congress can possibly justify for investigations of this type.

Mr. President, every Member of this body has research stations of one kind or another in his State for which he would like to secure additional appropriations. However, it occurs to me that there must be an end somewhere to the matter of obtaining emergency funds, building an experiment station, and then coming to the Congress and asking for supplemental funds for maintenance from year to year. Otherwise we are merely starting a snowball which, as it rolls on from year to year, will accumulate so much in the way of expenditures that it will constitute a drain on the Treasury which the public credit will not be able to sustain. It would be very pleasing to me to be able to support the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CLARK]; but the committee went into the matter rather fully, and we could not see that it was as well justified as many other important items of appropriation in which other Senators are interested and which we rejected. I hope the Senate will reject the amendment now pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CLARK].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment on page 47, line 13, striking out "$121,295" and inserting in lieu thereof "$131,295" was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania. Does the Senator care to address himself to the motion to reconsider?

Mr. GUFFEY. That is the first question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the motion to reconsider is agreed to.

Mr. GUFFEY. I send to the desk an amendment to the committee amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 47, line 13, in the committee amendment, it is proposed to strike out "$131,295" and insert in lieu thereof "$149,295."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania to the committee amendment.

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, northeastern Pennsylvania, and more particularly the anthracite region, comprising approximately 12 counties and 50,000 square miles, is beset with problems of forestation for the purposes of fire protection, soil-erosion control, silvicultural management in the forests, forest pathological studies, tree diseases, wildlife management, and reforestation of denuded areas. In order to determine the full nature and extent of the needs, the Department of Agriculture suggests a preliminary survey at an estimated cost of $18,000. My amendment proposes an increase in the appropriation, the increase to be used by the Allegheny Research Station of the Department of Agriculture in making the necessary survey. I move the adoption of the amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania to the amendment reported by the committee. [Putting the question.] In the opinion of the Chair, the ayes have it, and the amendment to the committee amendment is agreed to.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I call up the amendment which has heretofore been presented by me and which has been printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of that part of the bill relating to "Disposal of surplus commodities" it is proposed to insert the following:

So much of such funds as may be devoted to encouraging the exportation of cotton or cotton articles, and any other funds which may be available or may hereafter be made available for the purpose of encouraging the exportation of cotton or cotton articles, shall be expended in accordance with the provisions of the following new section which is hereby added to the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933, as amended:

"SEC. 23. (a) The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to make payments in kind or in money to any person who exports any raw cotton or articles manufactured in whole or in part from cotton, at such rates and under such terms and conditions as the Secretary of Agriculture determines are necessary in order that the cotton, or the cotton content in cotton articles, so exported, shall be fully competitive in the world markets: Provided, That such payments shall be discontinued during any marketing year when exports of cotton from the United States during such marketing year equal the average of the exports from the United States during the 10-year period ending July 31, 1932. Such payments on raw cotton are authorized to be made only upon cotton bought in the open market, except that payments may be made upon cotton released from loans made or made available by the Commodity Credit Corporation when cotton of suitable classes and quantities to fill cotton export requirements is not available in the markets of the United States. The Secretary is authorized to decide when such free cotton is not so available; but no such payments shall be made, and no obligation to make such payments shall be incurred, prior to January 1, 1940, with respect to any cotton on which a loan has been made or made available by the Commodity Credit Corporation, nor shall such payments be made or obligations incurred during the period from August 1 to December 31, both inclusive, in any marketing year with respect to any cotton on which any such loan has been made.

"(b) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Commodity Credit Corporation is authorized and directed, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture, upon application by the owner, or his assignee, of cotton held under loans made or made available by the Commodity Credit Corporation to provide for the release to such owner, or his assignee, of any or all of the cotton of such owner, or assignee, during any marketing year, except during the period from August 1 to December 31, both inclusive, if the Secretary of Agriculture finds that the release of cotton held under such loans (1) is needed to supply suitable classes and quantities of cotton to meet the operating requirements of mills in the United States and is not available in the markets of the United States, or (2) is needed to supply suitable classes and quantities of cotton to meet export requirements and is not available in the markets of the United States. Such cotton shall be released at a cost to the owner, or his assignee, equal to the current loan rate, plus (1) interest, insurance, and storage, for the period beginning at the average time when cotton was put into the current loan and ending at the end of the month when the cotton is released from the loan, and (2) one-fourth cent per pound for miscellaneous charges.

"(c) The Commodity Credit Corporation is authorized and directed under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture to acquire and to make available to him such cotton as may be necessary to make payments in kind authorized by this section. The funds now and hereafter made available to the Commodity Credit Corporation are hereby made available to such Corporation to acquire and make available to the Secretary of Agriculture such cotton as may be necessary to make the payments in kind authorized under this section, and to provide for the release of cotton under this section. The funds now or hereafter made available to the Secretary of Agriculture for the purpose of encouraging the exportation of cotton or cotton articles, by, or for carrying out the purposes of section 32, as amended, of the act entitled 'An act to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes,' approved August 24, 1935, as amended, are hereby made available to the Secretary of Agriculture for payments authorized in this section, and for administrative expenses in accordance with the applicable provisions of this title. The determinations of the Secretary of Agriculture made pursuant to the provisions of this section and the facts constituting the basis for any payment when officially determined in conformity with the regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture shall be final and conclusive."

In order further to safeguard the expenditure of the funds appropriated in this item and any other funds which may be available or may hereafter be made available for the purpose of encouraging the exportation of cotton or cotton articles and for all other purposes, section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act (of 1933), as amended, is hereby amended by inserting the words "or are likely to be" after the word "being" in subsection (a), by striking out the expression "July 1, 1928, to June 30, 1933" and inserting in lieu thereof the expression "January 1, 1929, to December 31, 1933" in subsection (b), and by striking out the words "15 days after the date of" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "the date fixed in" in subsection (c).

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I think there is a very general misunderstanding as to the purpose of this amendment and certainly there is a misapprehension on the part of some in this Chamber and of some in the Cotton Belt. A great many people seem to have the idea that this amendment proposes to set up a cotton subsidy export program. I wish to call the attention of those who may be interested to the facts of the situation.

For a long time the agricultural laws have authorized the payment of export subsidies on agricultural commodities. Such a provision was contained in section 32, a part of what is known as the amendment to the Agricultural Adjustment Act passed in 1935. There is under that section an express authorization for the payment of funds appropriated by the Congress in carrying out export programs affecting agricultural commodities. That authorization, as is well known, was put into application in the matter of exporting wheat. More than 100,000,000 bushels of an exceedingly heavy surplus of wheat were exported, induced and encouraged by the payment of an export subsidy. That was done under the then existing law.

Section 12 of the present Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 contains another authorization for the payment of export subsidies in the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture when he deems it for the best interest of the producers.

So, Mr. President, these two laws, one passed in 1935 and the other passed in 1938, provide the subsidy plan. They not only provide the subsidy plan but the law of 1935, section 32, expressly made—not authorized, but expressly made—appropriations amounting to 30 percent of the receipts derived from tariff duties for the purpose of carrying out, in part, that provision of the law. So, we are not proposing any new plan. We are not trying to establish in the law a principle that is not already established. The only thing needed for an export program for either wheat or cotton is the money with which to finance it; and section 32 provides the money by mandatory statute, as far as that money may go.

The situation here is based upon a request for additional funds to be added to the section 32 funds; and the Senate has granted that request. Practically by a unanimous vote the Senate adopted the amendment which adds $113,000,000 to the amount of money heretofore appropriated under section 32. So the question now arises, with the original appropriations, which now amount to about $90,000,000, and with the new appropriation of about $113,000,000, what amount may be used for the exportation of cotton. Without any law, without any amendment, what amount may be used in the wide-open judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture?

If this amendment is not adopted, assuming the passage of this bill with the $113,000,000 retained in it, the amount available for cotton will be approximately $50,000,000. Under the authorization contained in the two sections, and with the money available under each of the sections, the Secretary of Agriculture is untrammeled, is entirely free to carry out an export plan under rules and regulations adopted by him, without any further amendment or authorization of Congress.

Recognizing that fact, Mr. President, the amendment offered here is not, as I have stated, for the purpose of creating the right to pay subsidies in exporting cotton, but it is in large measure for the purpose of laying down certain important rules and regulations for the administration of that power.

In the first place, this plan when first announced by the Secretary and approved by the President of the United States contemplated the exportation of cotton under the cotton loan. Everybody who has given any thought to this situation has become alarmed and disturbed over the large quantity of cotton that now rests in warehouses under the lien of the Government loan. No doubt that appalling situation was the inspiration for the suggestion by the administration to put into operation an export plan for cotton, as it did last year for wheat, and carried it out successfully. But that original program, as I said, contemplated the exportation of cotton under the loan.

I was unwilling to accept that program, as many other Senators from the Cotton Belt were unwilling to do, regardless of our views upon the fundamental question of the wisdom or good policy of engaging at any time and under any conditions in an export subsidy program. Regardless of that, a number of Senators were unwilling to go forward with a program to export loan cotton; and the reason for it was that if, as the Department of Agriculture believes can be done, we should export in excess of 6,000,000 bales of cotton and take it out of the loan, the question would arise, Where would the farmer sell his crop that is coming on the market, beginning in August, of approximately 12,000,000 bales under normal yield conditions?

If, through the export plan, the foreign markets had received all of the cotton they would buy from the United States, and if they had taken all of that cotton out of the loan, as they could do without this amendment, then I desire to know what would become of the 12,000,000-bale crop to be brought to the market beginning in August? The foreign market would be satisfied. There would be a domestic market for around 6,000,000 or 6,500,000 bales, and a supply of 12,000,000 bales from the new crop, plus whatever carry-over might exist of free cotton from the old crop. Inevitably a program of that sort would drive down the domestic price of cotton. That would mean that the farmer would do one of two things: He would get less return, a smaller income from the sale or his crop; or he would put it under the cotton loan, the very thing that all of us are trying to avoid.

If the plan were worked out in such a way as to create a large supply in excess of the domestic requirements, and with the world's foreign markets already satisfied, it is evident that, of course, large quantities of the new crop would go back into the loan.

So the method I have described is exactly reversed under this amendment. Instead of first exporting cotton under the loan, the amendment reverses the procedure and requires that cotton to be exported must be bought in a free market; that it must be bought from farmers as they bring the cotton to market, beginning in August, and that the loan cotton must be kept sealed up until next January. Assuming an export foreign market for 6,000,000 bales, and assuming it to be supplied from the free market, there would be only around 6,000,000 bales, or a little more, to supply the domestic market of six and a half to seven million bales of consumption. That tight situation in the cotton market would of necessity hold the domestic price of cotton around the point that is required to draw cotton out from the loan. A farmer has the right to have his cotton under the loan released at any time by paying the loan and the carrying charges. The crop of 1938, just put under the loan, cost around 9 cents a pound. So as soon as cotton is needed for domestic consumption, under this amendment the Secretary has power to call upon the Commodity Credit Corporation for the release of that cotton on the application of the owners.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to make an inquiry?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. ADAMS. Probably what I have in mind has been explained. My inquiry is on the point the Senator is discussing, as to the release of cotton to the owner at a cost equal to the current loan rate. If the Senator has already explained that matter, I will not ask him to repeat the explanation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have not done so. The current loan rate means the one now prevailing. There are some old loans. There is one old loan which was made away back in 1934.

Mr. ADAMS. The phrase means the amount that could be borrowed on cotton today?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is correct; the amount necessary to retire the loan or release it.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, in order to complete the record, I suggest to the Senator from Alabama that he state what that amount would be today.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It would be nine and eleven-one hundredths cents. That amount would be necessary to withdraw the cotton from the loan. So if there is a tight situation in the spot market, with no surplus to depress the price, and with the loan plan standing wide open for the cotton farmers next fall—a mandatory loan under the law—then it becomes self-evident that the domestic cotton mills will pay a price sufficient to prevent the cotton of the new crop going back into the loan, because they have to have that cotton.

There will not be an excessive increase in price. The present price of spot cotton, the average price, is 8.90 cents—approximately 9 cents—so that the necessity of the local cotton mills paying possibly a dollar a bale more should not weigh against this program, when consideration is given to the tremendous advantages to accrue from the administration of this export plan.

We have a horrible statistical situation in regard to cotton. I assume it is worse than in regard to any other agricultural commodity. A carry-over of nearly 14,000,000 bales will be on hand on August 1—the largest in all the history of the United States.

We have a constantly decreasing export market. Some years ago the export average was seven and one-half million bales. This year the exports will amount to scarcely 4,000,000 bales; indeed, it is thought that the total exports, when the end of the marketing year arrives, will not amount to 4,000,000 bales—a reduction in exports of cotton of three and one-half million bales.

What are we to do about it? This is not solely a cotton farmer's problem; this is not solely a southern situation. A great crop such as cotton, upon which the economy of 10 or 12 States is primarily based, is not solely a local problem.

I have heretofore pointed out—and I take the opportunity to do it again—that from the time the ports of entry in the United States were established, 150 years ago, the balance of trade, the net increase in national wealth of the United States during its entire fiscal history, was made up, to the extent of more than 90 percent, of cotton, raw cotton, and cotton textiles. If there had been no cotton, we would have traded in vain during all these years, so far as increasing our national wealth through foreign commerce was concerned.

I have mentioned heretofore the tremendous value to the industries of America of cotton farmers having a parity income, the value to the agricultural population of the West, because, year after year, we have bought from that section thousands of carloads of agricultural products, such as hay, hogs, meat, and lard.

As Senators all know, the South is not an industrial section, it is an agricultural area. One can enter the largest department store in the largest city in the South and go from the cellar to the dome and he will find but very few articles for sale that were produced within the Cotton Belt. It is astonishing how few local products of industry are used to supply the needs and comforts and requirements of all the people residing in the Southern States.

What does that mean? It means that the sole source of income of the cotton farmer is of tremendous importance to industry throughout the country. It means that every day throughout the year every mail carries remittances from the Cotton Belt to pay for the products of industries located in the industrial sections of this country. Likewise every mail carries checks to pay insurance premiums of all kinds, to pay interest on mortgages on the security of which money has been loaned by the great financial institutions of the East; to pay the dividends upon securities of railroads, electric companies, and other utilities in the South the stocks and bonds of which are all owned in the East.

When we had a parity income, cotton brought, for 17 years, on an average $1,400,000,000 to the South. Sixty percent of that great sum of money came from foreigners across the seas. But it did not remain in the South. As soon as it reached there it started to flow back to the industrial and financial centers of America.

Mr. President, I am pointing out these facts so as to emphasize the thought that our problem in the South is national in its scope. For many years during the period when we had parity income the railroads running into the South—the Illinois Central, the Frisco, the L. & N., the Seaboard, the Southern—could not get sufficient equipment to haul to the South the products of industry which merchants in the South were ordering to sell to their southern consumers. Consider the situation now. With the unhappy reduction in the income of our people because of the lesser amount of money received from our great basic cash crop, thousands of railroad employees are off the trains and off the rolls because income of the southern people has been so greatly reduced that they cannot buy as they did prior to 1930.

Mr. President, we have to find markets. We have lost much of our cotton market in the dictator nations. Germany and Japan have been two of our three greatest buyers of cotton during a long period of years. Now we have lost a market for a million bales in Japan, a market for a million bales in Germany, and a market for a million bales this year in Great Britain. We have lost practically all our former exports to Italy.

What can we do about it? The southern people have not been responsible for conditions which brought about the loss in foreign sales of their great cash crop. But we have lost three sales, and we have lost them in part because, we are told, other countries are selling cotton at lower prices than that for which we are selling. We have lost them and continue to lose them because former customers are now engaged in bartering with other nations to get their cotton, while we stand here upon a normal trade relationship with the nations of the world, a relationship which ought to exist and which I hope some day to see return. But while we are following the old trade program, trading in the open market, relying upon the quotations for cotton on the cotton exchanges at Liverpool, Alexandria, and Bombay, we are told that other countries are cutting prices and are engaged in cutthroat competition. They are offering their cotton, the Department tells us, at a little lower price than the market price put upon the exchange boards throughout the world, by which our people abide. They are not only doing that but foreign countries are increasing their acreage devoted to cotton production.

The Secretary of Agriculture and the President of the United States believed in the submission of this program, thinking it would be helpful from many standpoints; that it would give notice to the world that we would no longer acquiesce in trade conditions relating to cotton which are steadily putting us out of the markets of the world; that it would give notice to foreign countries that they need not proceed with their plans of increasing acreage planted to cotton because, forsooth, it would not sell so high, it would not be so profitable to them as it has been in recent years in competition with American cotton.

Mr. President, there are many reasons for a trial of this program, the chief one of which is the emergency under which we are laboring. The program, as I have stated, is not in accordance with the method of administration supported originally by Secretary Wallace, but after it was submitted to him, and after he and his assistants had carefully considered it, they reached the conclusion that it was a better program than the one they announced, and they are actively supporting it. There may be some exceptions, but most of the Senators from the cotton-producing States are in favor of the program.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator mentioned the falling off in our export trade in cotton. Is it not true that one reason why the export trade in cotton has fallen off is the price at which our cotton is held in loans?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is an argument, as I suggested just now, which the Department insists is correct.

Mr. CONNALLY. If we have the cotton, and foreign buyers want it, but we are not selling it to them, the price or the sales terms certainly have some effect on the matter.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It seems so.

Mr. CONNALLY. Under present conditions, if a European buyer of cotton can buy foreign cotton, he will buy it, will he not? That is, if it suits his needs he will buy the foreign cotton, if it is cheaper than ours?

Mr. BANKHEAD. He is buying the foreign cotton; there is no doubt about that.

Mr. CONNALLY. If we are to sell him any cotton must we not offer him some sort of a plan such as that now under consideration, or some sort of inducement, so as to make it desirable for him to buy American cotton?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have reluctantly come to that belief.

Mr. GEORGE. Why not sell it at the market price?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is the Senator in favor of repealing the law?

Mr. GEORGE. I am in favor of repealing parts of it; yes, sir.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The loan plan?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; if we have to do that to avoid the accumulation of cotton and to prevent the creation of a two-price system here.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator has fought several vigorous battles shoulder to shoulder with me to get the loan and to get as high a loan as possible.

Mr. GEORGE. Exactly. I have done that because when we circumscribe the farmer and restrict him so that he can produce only a limited quantity of cotton, the Government does owe him the obligation to see that his crop brings a livable price. But by this time we ought to be able to see what the loan is doing with respect to the cotton problem as a whole.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am not in accord with my dear friend on that subject. I always value his good judgment; I know he is sincere; but it seems to me that such basic agricultural commodities as cotton, wheat, and corn should be dealt with upon the same basis of protection against collapse in price. I think the loans have been of tremendous value to wheat, cotton, and corn producers, and I am not in favor of repealing any of the loan laws. Of course, that is not the subject which is now involved.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, we have provided in all of the agricultural bills for a loan feature, and we have also contributed in the way of benefit payments, recognizing, as the Senator from Georgia has said, the obligation of the Government to compensate the farmer in some way for the reduction in his production. But all of that has been done in order to help the farmer and to increase the price of his product because of the reduction in the quantity.

If there had been no reduction in acreage and in the production of any of these crops during the period in which the laws have been in effect, and the farmers had no inducement to reduce, and had produced to the fullest of their capacity, the chances are that prices would have been much lower than they have been. Not only would the market prices have been lower, but none of the benefits which have accrued by reason of the carrying out of the farm program would have resulted.

It is undoubtedly true that an unfortunately large amount of cotton has been accumulated because of the loans. It probably would have been sold at some price if it had not been for the loan feature. That price might have been much below the cost of production—much below what the cotton actually brought. No one can tell what the result would have been if something else had happened which did not happen. But we know that we have about eleven and one-half million bales of cotton now impounded under loans, and under the law as it now is that cotton cannot be sold below the loan figure placed upon it, plus the carrying charges up to date, which is what makes the price above the market price, as I understand. Is that correct?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is difficult to know what the market price is. We sell at one price, and Brazil sells at another price in the Liverpool market.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am speaking of the American market price. The American market price is lower than the loan on the cotton and the carrying charges, as I understand, on the average.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Very little at this time. As I stated a moment ago, the loan and carrying charges now, under the statement of the Commodity Credit Corporation, would be 9.11 cents. The average price just a day or so ago at the 10 spot markets for cotton was 8.90 cents. So there is only 20 points difference there, or a dollar a bale, between the market price and the amount necessary to withdraw cotton from the loan.

Mr. BARKLEY. The whole cotton situation is extremely complicated, and it is difficult for the ordinary layman to understand the economics of it. I do not know whether expert cotton men understand it. A few days ago I asked one of the ablest cotton men in the United States, if not in the world, who is opposed to the export subsidy——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Has he had any foreign interest?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know. He may have. I asked him how we are ever to start to sell the cotton now being held, and he confessed he did not know. I think he was perfectly honest about it. He said he did not know, and I certainly do not. However, I am anxious to do something that will start the cotton moving. If we could just skip 1 year of raising cotton altogether, and use what we have accumulated to meet the demands for American cotton, we could solve the problem in that way; but we have no power to prevent the cotton growers from planting it, and I know of no inducement which we can hold out that is sufficiently attractive to induce them not to plant. In the absence of anything of that sort, how are we going to get this cotton off our hands? What are we going to do with it?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is what all of us want to ascertain. We are groping. Here is a plan proposed which may have some beneficial results. We have the money provided, and a certain amount of it is available for application to cotton under the law. The administration proposes to use that money, which is already appropriated in this way, in the belief that it will cause an increase in our exports.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate that. In yesterday's mail at my home I received a special-delivery communication from an organization in Stoneville, Miss., in which were set forth a good many reasons why this export subsidy plan should not be adopted. Among other things, it was suggested that it would bring on a sort of trade war between our country and other cotton-producing countries, and that they would say to us, "If you are going to sell the cotton you have under the loan below the market price, we will start in and cut prices," and that there would be chaos in the world markets with respect to cotton. What is the Senator's reaction to that suggestion?

Mr. BANKHEAD. We did the same with wheat.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not defending the pamphlet. I am simply asking the Senator what he thinks about what it stated.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am answering it with a concrete case. I just stated that the administration last year exported wheat on a subsidy plan, which averaged about 21 to 22 cents a bushel for 100,000,000 bushels. It offered it in the foreign markets and sold it. No one made any complaint that that unsettled or disturbed the general wheat market.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know the amount of wheat involved in that transaction by comparison with the amount of cotton that might be involved, and whether it was sufficient to have any appreciable effect upon the wheat market. The Senator probably has looked into that matter. It might depend somewhat on the proportion of the commodity unsold and hanging over the market, and perhaps it would also depend upon the supply that is available in other countries.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I assume the letter the Senator referred to was written by Mr. Oscar Johnston?

Mr. BARKLEY. It was not signed by him.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I know his views on the question.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is signed by four or five gentlemen who are members of the organization.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Johnston sends out material dealing with cotton. The name of his company is the Delta Pineland Co. When I say it was written by him I do not mean to speak in derogation of him. He is a very able man, one of the ablest men I know. But he has had those views on this particular subject for many years.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator referred to the fact that there was a difference of only about 20 points between the loan price and the market price.

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; I said that the farmer would draw the cotton out at the amount of the loan plus the carrying charges. The market price is now above the loan price. The loan price is 8.30 cents and the market price 8.90 cents.

Mr. RUSSELL. Does not the Senator from Alabama think the rate of loan that is fixed has a very great effect on the market price?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Oh, yes; I think it does; just as it does with respect to corn. I think everyone will admit that a high loan figure for corn, much higher than wheat or cotton, has held the general price for corn higher than it would have been but for that loan figure. I have heard from leading corn representatives that that is true.

Mr. RUSSELL. So far as competition for European markets is concerned, we have put the world on notice as to just what the American market would be, and all that was necessary for foreign competitors to do to capture markets which had belonged to the American producer was to reduce their price slightly under the loan price that was fixed in this country.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is what the cotton traders report—the very fellows who do not want any export program. They say they cannot now sell cotton, and that they have been losing sales because foreign cotton, principally Brazilian cotton owned in large measure by American interests, is offered and sold slightly below the price of American cotton.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the Senator permit me to give him the name of the organization to which I referred? It is the Delta Council, Stoneville, Miss. The letter is signed by John Petty, president; W. T. Winn, chairman of the executive committee; and Howard Stovall, chairman, Federal program and foreign trade section, committee on agriculture. I do not know any of those gentlemen.

Mr. BANKHEAD. As I stated in the beginning of my remarks, the question is not whether or not we are to have subsidized cotton. There is general confusion on that subject, and from the statement of the majority leader I see that he is confused. We shall have subsidized cotton exports whether or not we adopt this amendment. It was announced by the administration, by the Secretary of Agriculture, and by the President of the United States that they favored a subsidized export cotton program, and the Secretary of Agriculture came before the committee advocating an increase in the appropriation under section 32. The committee has allowed that increase. So under the general law doubtlessly cotton will be exported this year just as it was last year. So the question now is whether we shall follow the general program and export under the judgment and discretion of the Secretary, or whether we shall adopt the plan now proposed fixing certain protective provisions for the protection of the domestic cotton price and the loan cotton plan.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. In connection with the Senator's statement that we would have an export cotton subsidy under the present law I find in section 32 this language, which does not quite agree with the statement made by the Senator.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I know to what the Senator is referring. He will find that the provision to which he refers has been repealed.

Mr. MILLER. That is what I was asking about. When was it repealed?

Mr. BANKHEAD. In the Agricultural Act of 1938, the last provision, with respect to raw cotton. I was responsible for the original provision. The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] and Representative MARVIN JONES always opposed it. It was taken out.

Mr. MILLER. Why was the provision which prevented the use of section 32 funds in connection with the subsidized exportation of cotton originally put in the act?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Frankly, I will say to the Senator, that I am responsible for it. At that time more normal trade relations existed throughout the world. I thought that if we had any export business for cotton we ought to do it on cotton textiles, so I had that provision added.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the Senator from Arkansas that, as I recall, section 32 as originally adopted was offered on the floor of the Senate by myself.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. The purpose of it originally was to take part of the money received from tariffs and say to the farmer, "You do not receive any benefit from the tariff. You pay increased rates on everything you consume, but you do not receive any benefit. We are going to take part of the tariff money and give it back to you as a subsidy or bounty to aid you in exporting your cotton abroad, where you have to sell it in a world free market." So the language to which the Senator refers was not originally in the amendment. I think it was added later by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I had it added in conference.

Mr. MILLER. I am in hearty accord with the intent of section 32. It was a bona fide effort on the part of Congress to divert the tariff for the benefit of the farmer. I am heartily in favor of that kind of operation if it can be provided. However, we have the provision in the original law, and now we are seeking to do exactly the reverse of what we said we wanted to do. That is the question I was raising.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I understand what has confused the Senator. The situation, concretely, is this: Congress has twice provided for the export of agricultural commodities on a subsidy basis. In the original act raw cotton was the only thing excepted. Then in 1938 a farm bill, which had more careful consideration than any bill with which I have ever been associated or have observed since I have been a Member of the Senate, was on the floor of the Senate for 4 long weeks, under debate and scrutiny, section by section. It was before the conference committee for 4 long weeks. The conferees worked morning and evening, all day, earnestly, faithfully, and conscientiously going over the programs of the two Houses, and carefully considering every section put into the new law. In the 1938 act, which had all that careful consideration, and in which the subsidy for exports was reiterated and again written into the law, the provision against paying export subsidies on raw cotton was deliberately repealed. In that act we have the judgment of Congress on the question and the action by Congress. After being in the law from 1935 to 1938, the exception against paying subsidies on export cotton was removed from the law in a most carefully considered general agricultural program.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. As I understand the Senator, he takes the position that under the general law, section 32, the President and the Secretary of Agriculture, without any further action by Congress, may use these funds to pay subsidies on export cotton?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Just as they have been doing on wheat. There is no doubt about it. Nobody disputes it.

Mr. CONNALLY. What the Senator proposes to do is to limit that authority, and try to preserve the price for the present crop by making the export subsidy apply only to the new crop rather than to the loan cotton. Is that the situation?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is correct. That is the crux of the whole situation.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thought so.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The basis of the countersuggestion was that instead of taking loan cotton, as they have the power to do if the farmers withdraw it, the exporters should be required to go into the open market. When that suggestion was carefully and fully considered, it was agreed that it was a better plan than the original one; and I was asked to present the matter to the Congress.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me ask the Senator one other question. Suppose under the present loan the Government should acquire title to the loan cotton. It would then become Government property. Under section 32, could the Secretary of Agriculture and the President then use the funds to export that cotton, and take a loss if necessary?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not know of any reason why they could not do so after the 1st of July. They could not take over the cotton until the 1st of July.

Mr. CONNALLY. I understand; but when they took it over they could do as I have indicated?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], who is familiar with the problem, introduced a bill relating to it this year. The farmers may withdraw the cotton when it reaches a certain point.

Mr. CONNALLY. But if they do not withdraw it, the title goes to the Government.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Not only is that true, but the loan of 1934 is past due, and the cotton may be taken over at any time by the Commodity Credit Corporation. The maturity of the loans on the 1937 and 1938 crops has been extended until the first of August; but the crop of 1934 is subject to capture by the Government at any time.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. Awhile ago I understood the Senator to say that the crop this year would reach approximately 12,000,000 bales.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is the normal yield.

Mr. DANAHER. About how much of that crop will find a market in this country?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Judging by the experience of this year and last year, I should say, in round figures, 6,000,000 bales, or perhaps a little more than that this year. Last year the figure was 5,600,000 bales, but the consumption in this country has increased over that of the preceding year.

Mr. DANAHER. If the same system of loans as in the past were to be offered to the farmers, rather than the proposed plan, can the Senator tell me about how much it would cost?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not quite understand the Senator's question.

Mr. DANAHER. To put it in another way, as I recall, there was some testimony before the committee of which the Senator is a member to the effect that there is now approximately $550,000,000 in loans outstanding against loan cotton.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is correct.

Mr. DANAHER. About how how much more in additional loans would be offered to the cotton growers for this year's crop?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I repeat that I have tried to impress the view that under the plan contained in the amendment no more cotton will go into the loan, because if through a subsidy we take half of this year's crop out of the market and ship it abroad, we shall have such a demand for this year's crop for domestic consumption that instead of the cotton going into the loan the price will go slightly above the loan value, as we all think, and the mills will be bidding for it. That will keep the cotton from going into the loan.

I will say to the Senator that the primary purpose of the amendment is to hold the domestic price of cotton around the loan level, so that no more will go into the loan.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Senator. In view of that answer, if the plan proposed by the Senator were not adopted, how much would be offered in loans?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is purely speculative.

Mr. DANAHER. Can the Senator give me an estimate?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; I cannot. I will say to the Senator that since the amendment was offered, the price of cotton has gone up $2 a bale, or from 40 to 50 points, on the theory that if the amendment is agreed to, or if there is a prospect of its being agreed to, the cotton situation will be tight. As I stated a while ago, the price is now up to within a dollar a bale of the price necessary to get it out of the loan. Of course if we exported the loan cotton, and left the whole 12,000,000 bales to be sold on a market having a demand of only 6,000,000 bales, we should probably have 4- or 5-cent cotton.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BANKHEAD. A large quantity—probably all of it—would naturally go into the loan until the price again rose.

Mr. President, I am not going to take any further time about this matter. It has been under very careful consideration for some weeks not only by the Department of Agriculture but evidently by the President, by the cotton States, and by Senators. We have talked about a cotton program. We have presented from time to time cotton programs. I frankly think the plan offered by the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] the best program that has been presented. I should be glad to work for that program, but we decided, as I think everyone else decided, that there was no chance to have it passed by the House.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question about his amendment?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. As I understand the amendment, it does not apply to any cotton that is now held by the Government until after January 1 next?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is correct; that is intended to prevent competition with the farmers' crops this year.

Mr. BARKLEY. And between the months of August and December in any other year it will not apply to any cotton that is held under loan?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is correct; that is, during the marketing season.

Mr. BARKLEY. So that during the months from August to December, which constitute the cotton marketing season, preference is given to what we call free cotton in the granting of this subsidy. Then, after that, if the world demand has not been supplied, the Commodity Credit Corporation, under rules provided by the Secretary of Agriculture, may release cotton then held under loan.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. But only on the payment of the cotton loan rate, that is, the current, that is the original rate plus interest charges——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Plus carrying charges.

Mr. BARKLEY. Plus carrying charges, and plus one-quarter of a cent in addition for miscellaneous expenses.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is to protect the interests of the Government in the loan.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course that would mean that if the market price were below all these charges the farmer would get the difference by having his cotton returned to him by the payment of that amount. For instance, if the loan that is already on the cotton amounted to 10 cents, I will say, and the current loan value of the cotton at that time plus the charges was 9 cents, the farmer would get his cotton back at 9 cents a pound, thereby gaining 1 cent. Is that correct?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Suppose the amount outstanding already plus the charges amounted to 10 cents, but the current rate of the loan in the course of a year, we will say, plus the same charges, was only 9 cents.

Mr. BANKHEAD. He would get it at what it cost the Government and any profit would be his. I am sure nobody can object to that.

Mr. BARKLEY. He would not get it at what it cost the Government; he would get it at the amount of the current loan rate, which might be less.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It might be, but there is not much prospect for a good long time, for the loans are at the minimum permitted by law.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the market price of cotton should go up so that its value would be greater than the current price, say, next year, plus these charges, the farmer, of course, would have a greater incentive to withdraw his cotton and pay all the charges so that he might obtain whatever profit would accrue to him by selling at the higher market price?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Broadly speaking, yes. Of course, the farmer could take his cotton at any time when he could get a little profit on it. He has no hope of getting any as matters now stand.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. Can the Senator tell me whether under this plan there would be much difference between the domestic sale price of cotton and the sale price of cotton abroad?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; the subsidy would reduce the price of American cotton abroad. That is the object of the subsidy.

Mr. MALONEY. Has the Senator given much thought to what effect that would have on domestic textile manufacturers?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes. While the textile manufacturers export only 1 percent of the total production of America, this bill provides that they shall have a compensating subsidy on their exports to equalize conditions as the result of the subsidy on raw cotton sold abroad. The manufacturers are protected under the provisions of the bill.

Mr. MALONEY. Has the Senator given any thought to the effect the adoption of the proposal might have on the importation of textile products?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am happy the Senator asked me that question. That is one of the reasons I am very frankly for this amendment. It is one of the important reasons why the administration cannot get along without this amendment and fully protect the textile industry of this country. The Senator will note the last paragraph in the amendment which amends section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933, as amended.

Mr. MALONEY. That is what I did not understand.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It amends section 22, which is the section authorizing the President, after investigation by the Tariff Commission, whenever any agricultural commodity is coming into the country in excessive quantities to establish quotas. This amendment is intended to provide and does provide that it is not necessary to wait until the exports are coming in, but action can be taken immediately. Now it is necessary to wait, under the language of the section. The amendment proposes to change that section so that when the President has cause to believe that exports will start to come into the country he can take action.

Mr. MALONEY. How does that differ from existing law? Is not that the situation now?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; under the existing law the only basis for action is that imports are now coming in, presently coming in in excessive quantities. So, if we do not change the law, cotton goods could be shipped here and would be shipped here before action could be taken. The pending amendment, as will be noted, changes that and removes the necessity for waiting until the flow has started and is coming into this country and gives the power to anticipate such importations.

Mr. MALONEY. May I ask the Senator whether or not anyone has talked with him about or if he has given any thought to the possible conflict with reciprocal-trade agreements?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The only thing I know about that is that the administration has publicly announced support of this program, and it would not do so if the program were in conflict with the trade-agreement program, for we all know how loyally the President has stood by Secretary Hull in that program. So it is quite evident that that phase of the matter has been given careful consideration.

Mr. MALONEY. I should like to ask the Senator one more question, because he is conversant with the subject and I am not. Has he given any thought to the possible consequences on the American textile workers or allied workers in this connection?

Mr. BANKHEAD. In what respect?

Mr. MALONEY. In connection with the importation of cheaper foreign goods.

Mr. BANKHEAD. We are not going to import them.

Mr. MALONEY. The Senator feels that that feature is properly covered by the amendment?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly. The administration in connection with the chairman and general counsel of the Tariff Commission drafted the amendment, and if it was not drafted to accomplish that, then, they did not know how to draft it. That is all I can say to the Senator.

Mr. MALONEY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not see how what the Senator suggests can happen. The administration of the law, if it shall become a law, will be in the hands of experts.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question? I dislike to intrude on him, but I am seeking information.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly, I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The amendment provides, among other things, that when the farmer is to be paid in cotton, instead of in cash, for his export subsidy, the Commodity Credit Corporation is authorized to use any funds available to it for the purchase of cotton for that purpose. Does that contemplate purchasing cotton outside the cotton they already hold, or could they use, or would they be authorized to use, a part of the cotton they already hold in payment to a farmer in kind?

Mr. BANKHEAD. They would use the cotton that they now hold. We do not expect it to amount to anything, because it is generally believed that the cash basis will be used and that the alternative will not be invoked; but it was thought advisable to give that latitude anyway.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. When I first rose the Senator had been discussing, or had mentioned, the bill introduced by the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. The Senator from Alabama had expressed his own favorable views of that bill, and said that he preferred that measure over the one now pending which he is sponsoring. I agree with the Senator in his expression of preference for the Smith bill. Is there anything in the pending amendment that will prevent the consideration of the Smith bill?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; except that the pending measure is an appropriation bill. We knew we could not pass the Smith measure through the House, and we did not want to hold up the agricultural program and break it down.

Mr. HATCH. I presume the Senator's amendment, if adopted, then, would not preclude the adoption of the so-called Smith bill?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; it would not.

Mr. HATCH. Would it preclude action on it by either the Senate or the House?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; it would have no effect on it at all. It deals with foreign subjects; the pending proposal deals with domestic subjects for the farmer.

Mr. HATCH. Then, according to the Senator's view, there is no reason why the pending amendment should not be adopted and also the Smith bill passed?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is so; there is no conflict between the two at all.

Mr. HATCH. I wish to say to the Senator that I am quite in accord with what he says about the Smith bill. I hope the Senator from South Carolina will not abandon it, but will urge action on his bill, regardless of what action is taken on the pending proposal. I hope the Smith bill will pass the Senate, that it will pass the House, and will be approved by the President. If that shall happen, I venture the opinion that no action will be necessary under the pending amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am in full accord with the statement made by the Senator from New Mexico. I have actively supported the bill of the Senator from South Carolina every time he has introduced it—that phase of it—and I should like very much to see it passed.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the Senator allow me to get from him a little clearer idea than I have as to the phrase "fully competitive in the world markets?" That is, the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to make payments in order that the cotton shall be "fully competitive in the world markets."

Mr. BANKHEAD. There are two reasons for the use of that language. One is to avoid having it appear that this is a dumping program. It makes this program consistent with the trade-treaty program. It is simply competing; it is not dumping. The reason why it is necessary to make cotton fully competitive is the statement heretofore made on the floor by me and other Senators that the loan price is said to be—I do not know whether or not it is true—a fixation that enables the foreign producers of cotton to bid slightly under it, and therefore fill the markets with their cotton, when American owners of cotton cannot do that because their farmers will not sell cotton at that price; so it creates a real price-competitive situation.

Mr. ADAMS. But if the purpose of the Senator's amendment is to be accomplished, American cotton will have to be put on the market at a lower rate than foreign cotton. That is, if it is really competitive at exactly the same market price, you may or may not sell your cotton.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Let me say to the Senator from Colorado that this is the situation:

American grade and staple has an established place in the cotton trade of the world. It is superior to most cotton and ordinarily brings a higher price. Until recent years it always brought a higher price than any cotton except the long-staple Egyptian cotton because of its superior quality, grade, staple, and fiber. Cotton is not a new thing in the world outside the United States. It has been produced in 57 countries of the world. For 50 long years foreign countries have been in a race to increase their cotton production. Foreign production has gone up at an average rate of 150,000 bales a year for 46 long years. With that going on the cotton mills of the world, which have heretofore used American cotton and had their machinery equipped to use our staple and our grade, preferred, as the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] has often said, the warp and woof of American cotton. So over long periods, with free competition in world cotton, America exported around an average of seven and a half million bales annually.

Now, it is said that the loan price fixation gives foreign competitors an opportunity to bid just below that price, and from time to time our cotton exporters have complained that we did not have a truly competitive situation in the foreign market. A flexibility, a latitude, is given to the Secretary under the formula of creating a competitive situation under which prices can be made which will put American cotton back in its former position of favoritism, with comparable prices established abroad.

Mr. ADAMS. Then the idea is to make the price here such that American cotton can successfully meet foreign competition?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is the idea; and I do not think it has to be done by underbidding.

Mr. ADAMS. But it will amount to underbidding when quality and other things are considered.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; it will be a better bargain, so to speak.

Mr. ADAMS. It means underbidding when quality is considered.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is correct, because it is a better bargain, just as Colorado sugar is a little better than Puerto Rican sugar.

Mr. ADAMS. I appreciate the Senator's comprehension.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Surely.

Mr. SMITH. I have sat here and listened to this discussion. It may be that I shall have to leave the city, because of conditions over which I have no control.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will yield the floor now, if the Senator wishes to take it.

Mr. SMITH. Very well.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, before the discussion goes any further, I make the point of order that the pending amendment is clearly legislation on a general appropriation bill. I do not think the point will be controverted, because notice of a motion to suspend the rule has already been given by the proponent of the amendment; but if there is any question of doubt in the mind of the Chair, and any disposition upon the part of the proponent of the amendment to resist the point of order, I should like to know it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEE in the chair). The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I anticipated that ruling, and I have no counter argument to present. I now move to suspend the rule, under the notice previously given.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, as I understand, that is a debatable question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is a debatable question.

Mr. GEORGE. If the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] wishes to proceed this afternoon, he may do so.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I do not know of any commodity produced on the farm or elsewhere about which there is such crass ignorance as there is about cotton. Even the Senators from the cotton-producing States are about as ignorant regarding cotton and its marketing as are those who never have seen a stalk of cotton.

I have listened to misstatements on this subject—honestly made, but made from pure ignorance of the subject. It is very discouraging when one who has had a lifetime of experience with cotton hears certain statements made which are absolutely without any foundation whatever.

I have heard a good deal said about the competitive price of cotton. Every man who has any knowledge of cotton and the cotton market knows that the present situation has grown out of two unfortunate conditions. One was the unexpected and tremendous crop made in 1937, when we had reduced our acreage from 40,000,000 acres plus to 30,000,000 acres plus; and instead of our making about 14,000,000 bales, according to the average production per acre over a period of 10 years, we made 19,000,000 bales. Of course, the result was disastrous to the price of cotton.

A loan was asked for and granted, disappointing to those who had cotton, ranging from 8.3 cents a pound, according to grade and staple, to something like 7 cents and some points. The cotton went under the loan; and under the terms of the law by reason of which it went under the loan nobody knew what was going to be the policy of the Government in disposing of it. It can be seen from the legislation that is now proposed that the trade is demoralized; and no sensible man is going to buy cotton or invest in cotton when he does not know what is going to be the policy of the Government, which has a lien on eleven and a half million bales.

How did the trade know whether we were going to dump 2,000,000 bales on the market, or whether we were going to open the floodgates and sell the whole amount? Consequently, representatives of the spinners of Europe came to my office and said, "It is not so much a question of price; it is a question of knowing what you are going to do with the cotton." What are we going to do with it?

Now it is said that we want to meet the competition in price. That is exactly what we have been doing for all these years, and I want the opportunity now to do it. How are we going to do it? By going into the un-American, absurd, ridiculous plan of offering cotton to foreigners at from $10 to $15 a bale less than the price at which we are offering it to our own people?

Let us analyze that a moment. I make the assertion, as a man experienced in the marketing and growing of cotton, that if the Senate were to decide today that it would sell at the world price 100,000 bales of the loan cotton a month, beginning now, without regard to the current crop which has come in, cotton would rise a cent a pound.

Talk about us competing with foreign cotton, when even now, with the absurd reduction in acreage, and regimenting everything and everybody, with our reduced acreage and the so-called foreign production, we are making 46 percent of all the cotton of the world. It has been stated here on the floor that our exports have dropped to 50 percent of those of the year preceding. That is true, and why? Anyone who will go to the Department of Commerce and get Mr. Zimmerman's bulletin on the supply and distribution of cotton will find that the amount of American cotton consumed abroad for the same period in which it has been stated that our exports have dropped 50 percent is practically the same amount consumed the preceding 6 months.

Mr. BILBO. American cotton?

Mr. SMITH. American cotton. Why is that? It is because they did not know what we were going to do with our present supply of cotton. A man says, "I cannot buy American cotton now because I do not know what policy they are going to have in reference to the disposal of what they have on hand. I do not know whether they are going to dump tremendously, or whether they are going to withhold. I am just going to sell at the market, and consume my stock." And the foreigners have consumed the foreign stock of American cotton to the same extent that they previously consumed American cotton. Now they are practically out of cotton, and it is proposed to say to them, "Very well, we will just dump this cotton on you to the tune of about 2 cents a pound or 3 cents a pound," according to the splendid judgment of Mr. Wallace, who knows about as much about cotton and the cotton market as Senators know. I am not underrating my colleagues, but they do not know a thing about it. Yet they are ready to take the action now proposed. It is analogous to the situation which existed when two men claimed to have discovered the North Pole, and we were asked to judge which one really did discover it. We had not been to the North Pole, but we knew all about it. They were before a jury which did not know a thing about it, and the man who happened to have the pull got the credit for discovering the Pole. I always did believe the other man discovered it, too.

Mr. President, I am laying a foundation to appeal to my colleagues. Whatever you do, in the name of reason, do not begin this export subsidy business. If the Government has any money with which to subsidize, let us, by all means, subsidize our own people.

I maintain that if we will now declare that we are going to put on the market—not export, but put on the market—a definite quantity of loan cotton, together with the current crop which comes in, and let it find its competitive relation with world cotton, we will see every bale of the cotton consumed in 3 or 4 years, to the benefit of the American producer and the American spinner.

Why all this haste and paralysis and fear about us having eleven and a half million bales, if we will use common sense in feeding it out to the world market as it is willing to take it? Whenever we decide how much we are going to put on the market in conjunction with the current crop, the world will take it.

Of course, there are certain laws which are very helpful to the export and consumption of American cotton, such as the Smoot-Hawley tariff law, the Johnson Act, and the antidumping clause. We have tried in every way possible to turn the tide against us. But, despite all that, if we will use common sense and say to the world, "We are going to dispose of so much of this cotton periodically," and stick to it, the competition for American cotton, which is superior to any cotton in the world, will result in our getting rid of it to the benefit of the American spinner and producer.

There may be some in another part of the Capitol who say that they would not take a bill which bears my name; but that bill is the result of the work of every element in the United States engaged in the processing and consumption and production of cotton. We got around a round table and wrote a bill, an American bill; not a miserable subsidy bill. Complaint is made that it will cost too much money. I would rather it would cost double what it would cost than to go into subsidizing the foreigner at the expense of the American producer and consumer and taxpayer.

Mr. President, I am astounded that anyone should say that the present price of American cotton is out of line with that of foreign cotton. I invite my colleagues to get the report of the price of foreign cotton up to date compared with the price of American cotton. It will be found that for every point American cotton has risen the cotton of Argentina, Peru, Brazil, India, all commercial cotton, has gone up exactly the same; and when ours receded, the others receded. So the American price determines the price of the world cotton. I defy any man to dispute that.

We set the price; and now, because of crass ignorance, if not worse, an attempt is made to make us believe that we Democrats—God save the mark—in order to get rid of our cotton, have to sell it at such a low price that foreign countries can spin it and sell the goods back to us at prices lower than what must be charged by our people, who have to pay the higher price; and therefore we must put a tariff on the imported goods. Having created the condition for a tariff, then, please God, let us invoke the tariff. In other words, put the foreigner in such a situation that he can spin our cotton and make the goods and ship them back to us for sale at prices below those for which our own citizens can spin the cotton and sell the goods here. And in order to keep them from doing that, when we have sold them the cotton so cheap that they can process it and bring the products to our market, it is proposed that we forbid our people getting the advantage of that nefarious trick.

Mr. President, that puts us in a beautiful light, does it not, imposing an import duty on goods made from American cotton in order to keep the foreigner, to whom we sold the cotton so cheap that he could manufacture it and send the goods back here, from selling the goods made from American cotton? All who subscribe to that doctrine should vote "aye."

Mr. President, what is the occasion for this export subsidy? Why is there a desire that we get rid of cotton in that manner? I can tell how it is possible to get rid of every bale of it. Just give it to the Europeans.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. CHAVEZ. The question in my mind is not what is the occasion for getting rid of the cotton in that manner, but how are we to help the cotton farmer?

Mr. SMITH. We can help the cotton farmer since we have promised him parity——

Mr. CHAVEZ. I am for it.

Mr. SMITH. Very well; we have promised him parity. If the supply of cotton, both American and world cotton, must of necessity, under the law of supply and demand, be selling at a price away below parity, if we have any subsidy to grant, let us say to the American farmer, "Sell your cotton at what it will bring in the world market and we will make up the difference to you between that price and parity."

Does that answer the Senator?

Mr. CHAVEZ. It would satisfy me. Nevertheless, I ask the question, Are we doing anything for the cotton farmer? Is the problem one of subsidizing exports or subsidizing domestic consumption, or is the problem something else?

Mr. SMITH. All I know about the situation is that cotton is indestructible. I had my photograph taken beside a bale of cotton 67 years old.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Let me ask the Senator whether the problem has changed since then?

Mr. SMITH. No.

Mr. CHAVEZ. It is still the same?

Mr. SMITH. It is still the same.

Mr. CHAVEZ. The cotton problem was the same 60 years ago?

Mr. SMITH. Oh, no. I did not understand the Senator. No; it was not. I used to receive 6 cents a pound for cotton and could take the 6 cents and buy clear rib sides at 6 cents a pound. Now I get 8 cents a pound for cotton and give 21 cents a pound for the meat.

Mr. CHAVEZ. In connection with the cotton problem—and there are farmers in my State who produce cotton which is generally disposed of in foreign countries, so we do not compete with domestic consumption—are we not neglecting the competing factors? After all, the world is moving, and there are many things happening today which did not happen 60 years ago. There are many competing factors, such as rayon, for instance, and, what has been talked about lately, products made from glass or milk competing with cotton. Is it not a fact that the cotton farmer today is trying to conduct his business and production as he did some time ago, without taking advantage of the technical improvements that have been brought about by other competing factors?

Mr. SMITH. If the Senator will go into a store, I think he will find that the competition with cotton of rayon and the other products of which he speaks is not so great as he assumes it to be. The fact is that rayon and wood fiber have been worked to a fare-you-well, while the consumption of cotton has steadily increased, and more cotton is consumed today than ever before in the history of the world.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I should like to ask the Senator another question: When the average girl in Washington, or in the Senator's State, or my State, goes into a store to buy a pair of stockings—we are dealing with the human element, and it is a million years old—what will she buy?

Mr. SMITH. She will buy the rayon stockings; and if the Senator thinks that that is the major part of her covering——

Mr. CHAVEZ. I do not think it is. I am thinking about a fact.

Mr. SMITH. I am also thinking about a fact. But does the Senator think that the stockings that women wear are the cause of the decline in cotton goods, when the Senator is covered with cotton right now, and so is the Senator next to him, and so is every woman in the country?

Mr. CHAVEZ. But we are not going to keep a girl from buying rayon stockings.

Mr. SMITH. No; and I should not want to do so because the stockings used in this country would not represent 100,000 bales of cotton.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Suppose we approach the question from the jute end.

Mr. SMITH. From the jute end?

Mr. CHAVEZ. Yes.

Mr. SMITH. Jute has nothing more to do with it than the number of teeth in a handsaw has to do with the price of chickens.

Mr. CHAVEZ. There was some testimony produced before the committee——

Mr. SMITH. Oh, yes, we can get testimony everywhere. We have had jute since cotton was first planted, and the consumption of jute has not increased one particle, while the consumption of cotton has increased.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Nevertheless, the committee will have to take the testimony that is given before it, and testimony was offered before the committee that 2,000,000 bales of cotton could be used to take the place of jute.

Mr. SMITH. Oh, yes, but that has not been done, and there is no necessity for doing it so long as we can get a reasonable price for cotton.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator that there is no need for it, but nevertheless the fact still remains that 2,000,000 bales of cotton could be used where now jute is used.

Mr. SMITH. Oh, yes; and 4,000,000 bales of cotton could be used if women had never during the last 100 years worn silk or linen, but they do so, and cotton is still consumed.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, with all deference to the Senator from South Carolina, and although I desire to protect cotton, I must say that it will never get back on its feet unless it faces the stern reality that it has a competing factor by way of progressive technical improvements throughout the country. That is the whole trouble with cotton now. Cotton is competing with rayon and is competing with other commodities.

Mr. SMITH. I will leave the Senator to cultivate his own ideas and lie down with his own thoughts. I am just taking the situation as it stands, and am protesting against the foolishness of trying to rush into such an un-American, such an undemocratic thing as dumping our cotton while we have a law against dumping. The Senator from Alabama tried to explain the matter just now by saying it was a form of competition.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I may say that in that particular instance I am in full agreement with the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SMITH. I knew the Senator's views were sound fundamentally. This other thing did not worry me a bit.

Mr. President, I sponsored a bill, and everyone I have spoken to about it has said it was a good bill. But it failed of passage in the other House. Therefore, it is asserted that we must pass an absurd measure in order to say we have done something for the cotton farmer. It is just as reasonable to go in to a sick child and say, "I do not know what sort of medicine to give him. We cannot give him the right kind of medicine. Let us give him a dose of strychnine. He must have some medicine. Let us give him strychnine. If it kills him, all right; but we will give him the medicine."

Mr. CHAVEZ. May I encroach upon the good nature of the Senator again? I have tried to gain as much information at the committee hearings as anyone else, but it appears to me that while technological improvements are being brought about in connection with rayon and other materials, very little research work has been done with respect to cotton in order to provide some other means of disposing of cotton.

Mr. SMITH. I do not know what further research cotton needs. God knows it is the basis of the clothing of 900,000,000 people. Controvert that statement. Nine hundred million persons, more or less, throughout the world, use cotton.

Mr. CHAVEZ. May I interrupt the Senator at that point?

Mr. SMITH. I should like to go on with my speech. Cotton fiber is without a competitor in the world of fibers. It grows prolifically. It comes in a form that needs no extra handling. It is already the attenuated fiber ready for spinning. Under the modern process of loose weaving it takes an expert to tell the difference between a woolen and a cotton garment. With the tight-weave process and the modern laundry it has practically driven linen off the market. Under the mercerized process it is a substitute for silk. It is the most adaptable, the most universally used product for wearing apparel. America is the premier in the production of quality cotton, which commands a premium the world over. Yet, merely because we happen to have in store eleven and one-half million bales of cotton, with another crop coming on, we become demoralized when we ought to be proud of the fact that we have such a wonderful banking asset.

Mr. President, the Senate may not be aware of the fact, but it is a fact, that under the Federal Reserve Act cotton, like gold, is made the basis for the issue of temporary currency. We could issue temporary currency on our holdings of cotton and circulate it, and have something as the basis of redemption just as we have in gold. Yet cotton is a despised fiber. We can take our cotton, as I said, and distribute it all over the world market, and let the world know our basis of distribution, and the difference between the price we get for it and the percentage of parity which we promise to make up to the farmer. The House said it cannot be done unless we have the money with which to do it. Under the pending bill we will have the money. We will have $253,000,000 for the purpose of making up to the farmer the difference between 60 or 65 percent of parity and what he may happen to get in the market. Who would not rather spend $500,000,000, if necessary, to subsidize the cotton farmer and let cotton find its level in the competitive market, rather than to subsidize the foreigner and exporter? The members of my committee now before me will testify to the fact that the Secretary of Agriculture came before our committee and practically endorsed that bill; and in less than 2 weeks he was a thousand miles away from it.

I state without fear of contradiction that if we adopt a policy which will give confidence—mark my words—confidence to the cotton-purchasing world, and let it know definitely what it may depend on, within a reasonable time we can get rid of every bale of cotton we have at from 1 to 2 cents a pound higher than our present price.

I do not know what excuse the body at the other end of the Capitol may now have. We have the money. Why not subsidize our people on the current crop and hold the loan cotton until next January? Let the current crop find a market, and let us subsidize the farmer to the extent of the difference between what we promise him in parity and the price he receives. In January let us begin to turn loose the loan cotton with a definite policy rather than go into this absurd thing of involving us in a retaliatory tariff both on cotton goods and on the reimportation of cotton. If it were not for the law, it would be easy to let the cotton producers sell cotton abroad, and those of us who plant it could simply reimport it in lieu of a crop. We could do so more cheaply than we could grow cotton.

Mr. President, I hope that every genuine American in this body—and I believe every Member is a genuine American—will so emphatically put his seal of disapprobation on this absurd move that it will never again raise its head in the American Congress.

Mr. President, if I stay over and feel more like speaking tomorrow than I do this afternoon, I shall go further into the matter.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I express the hope that he will be able to stay over.

I ask the majority leader if he is not willing to take a recess at this time until tomorrow?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes. Has the Senator from South Carolina concluded?

Mr. SMITH. I have concluded.

REORGANIZATION PLAN NO. II—RESOLUTION OF DISAPPROVAL

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I submit a concurrent resolution disapproving reorganization plan No. II, submitted by the President today.

I am heartily in favor of the plan. I am submitting the concurrent resolution at this time solely for the purpose of enabling the Senate to have an opportunity to vote upon the matter. It will be my purpose to ask the Reorganization Committee to report the concurrent resolution, and, when it is reported, to ask for its consideration at the earliest possible date, in order that the matter may be disposed of, and that the officials of the executive departments and bureaus affected may know what disposition is to be made of reorganization plan No. II.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 16) was referred to the Select Committee on Government Organization, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress does not favor the reorganization plan No. II, transmitted to Congress by the President on May 9, 1939.

THE JUDICIARY—HARRY J. LEMLEY

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, as in executive session, I ask unanimous consent that the President be immediately notified of the confirmation of the nomination of Harry J. Lemley to be United States district judge for the eastern and western districts of Arkansas. The nomination was confirmed yesterday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears none, and the President will be notified.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 53 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Wednesday, May 10, 1939, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, MAY 9, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God of grace, Thou hast overlaid the tokens of Thy power with great gentleness and with great love. Oh, how wonderful is Thy goodness which Thou hast wrought for them that trust in Thee before the sons of men. We beseech Thee to enable us to meet temptation unafraid and unharmed; keep us from all pride, deception of innocence; cleanse Thou us from secret faults. Teach us, O Lord, to be patient and long-suffering. Give us such a sense of humility that we shall rejoice each day that we have so many blessings instead of complaining that we have so few. Heavenly Father, clothe us with fine conceptions of manhood that the ideals of truth, honesty, and purity may grow clearer to us. We praise Thee that Thou dost deal with us in affection and Thy chastisements are for our good. In the name of our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 5762) entitled "An act to provide for temporary postponement of the operations of certain provisions of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act," disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. CLARK of Missouri, Mr. PEPPER, and Mr. McNARY to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H. J. Res. 221. Joint resolution authorizing the President to invite other nations to participate in the Sacramento Golden Empire Centennial commemorating the one hundredth anniversary of the founding of Sacramento by Capt. John A. Sutter.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COCHRAN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday the chairman of the Committee on Labor gave notice that on Monday next she would move to suspend the rules and pass amendments reported by her committee to the wage-hour bill.

I want to give notice to the House that a vote for that bill will be a vote against the farmers and the small-business men of this country. It will be voting the dictations of Mr. Andrews, the Administrator of the Wage and Hour Division. [Applause.]

PAYMENT OF SALARIES OF OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES OF CONGRESS

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, from the Committee on Accounts, I offer a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 280) authorizing the payment of salaries of the officers and employees of Congress on the first workday preceding the last day of any month when the last day falls on Sunday or a legal holiday, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

House Joint Resolution 280

Resolved, etc., That the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution authorizing the payment of salaries of officers and employees of Congress for December on the 20th day of that month each year," approved May 21, 1937, is amended by adding at the end thereof a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives are authorized and directed to pay to the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives, including the Capitol Police and Office of Legislative Counsel, and employees paid on voucher under authority of resolutions, their respective salaries on the first workday preceding the last day of any month (except the month of December) when the last day of such month falls on a Sunday or a legal holiday."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, do I understand the gentleman asks that this may have a privileged status?

Mr. WARREN. No; this is not the matter the gentleman has in mind. This does not cost anybody anything.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for about 2 minutes preparatory to asking for a unanimous-consent agreement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], although I know how he feels about this, and also the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. Speaker, from the Committee on Accounts I am today reporting by unanimous vote of that committee the bill (H. R. 6205) to provide for additional clerk hire in the House of Representatives, and for other purposes, without recommendation.

This bill would increase the clerk allowance to Members of the House from the present $5,000 to $6,500 and would permit the employment of either one, two, or three clerks, with the proviso that no one clerk could receive over $3,900 annually, this being the present law. It also provides that it shall become effective on January 1, 1940.

In reporting this bill to the House without recommendation the committee unanimously takes the position that as it directly affects the privileges of all the Members of the House, the House at least is entitled to express itself on this question.

This is not a privileged matter. In view of that statement and after having consulted with the Speaker of the House, the majority leader, and minority leader, I desire to submit this unanimous-consent request in reference to this bill, and I may say that if the request is granted it will be my purpose to call it up on next Tuesday morning. The request that I now make is as follows:

I ask unanimous consent that it may be in order to consider the bill (H. R. 6205) to provide for additional clerk hire in the House of Representatives, and for other purposes, as a privileged bill from the Committee on Accounts; that such bill shall be considered in the House and that debate on said bill be limited to 1 hour, at the conclusion of which the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill to final passage.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I agree with the committee in its procedure. I believe this is a matter on which the entire membership of the House should have an opportunity to express itself. Therefore I shall not object to giving it the privileged status asked, but I want it understood thoroughly that my failure to object to that does not mean that I personally favor the legislation.

Mr. WARREN. That, Mr. Speaker, I might say, is also thoroughly understood on this side of the House. This merely gives the Members the right to express themselves.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, to ask this question. Very few Members are on the floor at the present time, and unless they notice this in the RECORD they are not going to have an opportunity to study the question except during the time between now and next Tuesday. If it is the gentleman's purpose to allow only 1 hour of general debate, let us suppose there is some reasonable objection to the bill. The people who are opposed to it should have an opportunity, as well as those who are favoring it, to thoroughly discuss the matter. It seems to me that 1 hour is not sufficient time.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman knows, all privileged resolutions coming from the Committee on Accounts have only 1 hour granted for discussion. If this request is granted, it will be my purpose on Tuesday next to immediately yield half of the time to the ranking minority Member, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WOLFENDEN].

Mr. RICH. But that would be giving only half an hour to this side and half an hour on the other side. That is not a reasonable time to devote to a question as serious as this is. It seems to me that we ought to have 2 hours' time.

Mr. WARREN. During the gentleman's service in the House this matter has been up at least twice, and during my service I think it has been considered three times, and on all occasions the procedure was established just as I am now asking; that is, an hour's debate. That is the usual time and I think the only time that is ever allowed on these resolutions from the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman give at least half the time to those who might be opposed to this bill?

Mr. WARREN. Indeed, I will.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I shall not object, but I still think the gentleman ought to grant 2 hours' time for debate.

Mr. WARREN. I guarantee that at least half the time will be given to those who may be opposed to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

ELECTION TO COMMITTEE

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 186

Resolved, That the following-named Members be, and they are hereby, elected members of the standing committees of the House of Representatives:

Post Office and Post Roads: Clyde T. Ellis, Arkansas.
District of Columbia: William R. Poage, Texas.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LEAVE TO SIT DURING SESSION OF THE HOUSE

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, at the request of the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, that the Subcommittee on Public Health of that committee may sit during the session of the House today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SHIPMENT OF SCRAP IRON TO JAPAN

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I am addressing my few remarks today to the House in general, but in particular to the Foreign Affairs Committee. Word has come to me that there are at this moment in my own district in the San Pedro Harbor, the port of Los Angeles, Calif., three ships being loaded with scrap iron for shipment to Japan. Last week we were horrified to read in the daily press of the killing of hundreds of defenseless men, women, and children in the southern part of China.

Could there by any chance be any connection between the selling of scrap iron and the maiming and killing of these human beings? Where do you suppose the gasoline that furnishes the power for these dastardly attacks originates?

We all know the answer to both of these questions, and as Members of this body we certainly have a responsibility to shoulder. If I supply a weapon to a man whom I know to be a murderer, I believe I am just as guilty of the crime that he subsequently commits as the man who actually commits the deed. At least I am an accomplice. If I have it in my power to prohibit his getting possession of that weapon, and I do nothing about it, I am guilty of a sin of omission, which, I believe, to be just as great as a sin of commission.

If what I have said be true in the case of one man, I believe it to be also true in the case of two or three men. If it be true in the case of two or three men, it is true in the case of many millions of individuals that make up a nation. You and I have the direct responsibility, even though we may not have thought of it in that light before. What are we doing to stop the putting of the weapon in the hand of the murderer? I know the Foreign Affairs Committee is wrestling with this very grave problem, and I have faith that a way will be found to stop the sale of oil, scrap iron, and other materials used in war, as well as the actual implements of warfare, from going to the nation that is already a violator of one of the treaties to which both countries, the United States and Japan, are signatories.

I hear some reply, "That may be true what you say, but we had better mind our own business." To these people I make this answer: "That was the burden of Hitler's answer to the Roosevelt pleas for nonaggression, and that is the plea of the un-American Bund and other like organizations within our gates."

To this same excuse for refusing to be a party to the murder of the innocent, namely, that we must mind our own business, I again reply: "That is just the trouble; we are minding our own 'business' when we are shipping these death-dealing materials—the business of making money." I believe that this is one business that should stop.

So, my colleagues, while we are delaying, my own port of Los Angeles, San Francisco's port, and the port of Seattle are busily engaged in the shipment of these supplies and the innocent human beings are being slaughtered like sheep while we look on.

This is something for which you and I must take our responsibility; and I, for one, do not care to have the blood of the innocent upon my hands. I have faith in our committee, but I beg of you gentlemen make haste.

ADDITIONAL COPIES OF HEARINGS ON INVESTIGATION OF THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY ACT OF 1933

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Speaker, from the Committee on Printing I report back favorably (Rept. No. 571) a concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 7), and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 7

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That in accordance with paragraph 3 of section 2 of the Printing Act, approved March 1, 1907, the special joint congressional committee of the Congress appointed pursuant to Public Resolution No. 83, approved April 4, 1938, to make a full and complete investigation of the administration of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933, as amended, be, and is hereby, empowered to procure the printing of 1,000 additional copies of the hearings held before the said committee during its investigation.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PRINTING OF ADDITIONAL COPIES OF THE REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE APPOINTED TO INVESTIGATE TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Speaker, from the Committee on Printing I report back favorably (Rept. No. 572) a concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 9), and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 9

Resolved, etc., That there be printed 3,000 additional copies of Senate Document No. 56, current session, entitled "Report of the Joint Committee of Congress Appointed To Investigate the Tennessee Valley Authority", which was submitted to the Congress on March 31, 1939, of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate document room, and 2,000 copies for the use of the House document room.

The Senate concurrent resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PRINTING ADDITIONAL COPIES OF THE HOUSE REPORT ON INVESTIGATION OF UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES AND PROPAGANDA

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Speaker, from the Committee on Printing I report back favorably (Rept. No. 573) a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 16), and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 16

Resolved, etc., That there be printed 25,000 additional copies of House Report No. 2, current Congress, entitled "Investigation of Un-American Activities and Propaganda", of which 3,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate document room, and 22,000 copies shall be for the use of the House document room.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in two particulars: First, on the subject of the vanishing farmer, and include therein a short letter less than a page; second, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks on the money question.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the requests are granted.

There was no objection.

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include a letter from a leading agricultural writer, J. D. Glover, in Hoard's Dairyman.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial appearing in the New York Inquirer, issue of May 8, 1939, on the subject of democracy in Cuba.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

SALARIES OF EMPLOYEES OF W. P. A.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I have today introduced a resolution calling upon Administrator Harrington of the W. P. A. to give the House the names and salaries of all persons on the administrative staff and supervisory rolls of W. P. A. receiving salaries of $100 per month or more. I have also requested the names of those who in recent months have had their pay increased, and the amount of such increases.

I had heretofore requested this information from Colonel Harrington for the State of Massachusetts. I was surprised when the request was turned down because it "might be embarrassing to the officials receiving the salaries in their communities."

I presume the same might be said in the case of any public official. However, it has been the American custom and certainly an American privilege to have the salaries of public officials a matter of public record. Certainly there should be no departure from this wise policy.

And certainly Members of Congress who are called upon to make appropriations should be given this information. Above all, the people who pay the taxes are entitled to have the information.

Only an unwholesome spirit of bureaucratic dictatorship would seek to deny this information to the Congress and the people. I demand, in the public interest, that the secrecy be swept aside and the high salaries in W. P. A. be made public.

I am hopeful the House will see the situation in its true light and safeguard the rights of Congress and the people by making it possible to obtain the facts concerning the administration of an agency of the Government which, our investigations show now, fairly reeks with inefficiency, corruption, scandalous waste, and un-Americanism.

I see several members of the distinguished Rules Committee present, and I hope I can create some interest in that group concerning my resolution. [Applause.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. COX. Has the gentleman felt out the sentiment of the House sufficiently to form any opinion as to whether there is the slightest objection to the adoption of his resolution?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. In reply to the gentleman from Georgia, I cannot see how any man on either side would object to Members of Congress knowing what the Government is paying its public officials.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GILLIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GILLIE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the House to the following resolution which I have just placed in the hopper:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the House of Representatives that the Administrator of the Works Progress Administration shall, upon the written request of any Member of Congress, provide said Member with a list of the names, positions, and salaries of noncertified employees of the Works Progress Administration in said Member's congressional district.

Mr. Speaker, I know that it will surprise many of my colleagues to learn that such a resolution is necessary. It is difficult to believe that information of this type, which should be available to elected representatives of the people, is being withheld by officials of the Works Progress Administration. I would not believe it myself had I not already been refused this information by Col. F. C. Harrington.

In asking support of this resolution by every fair-minded Member of the House, I wish to insert in the RECORD two letters from Colonel Harrington and a newspaper article, which explain very fully why this resolution is necessary.

Letters and newspaper article follow:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., April 24, 1939.

Col. F. C. HARRINGTON,
Works Progress Administration, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR COLONEL HARRINGTON: Republican Members of Congress from Indiana have recently requested a full and complete investigation of the Works Progress Administration in their State.

Most of the complaints on which this request are based had to do with irregularities in the supervisory and administrative personnel of the W. P. A. in Indiana.

These charges, in general, are that relief pay rolls have been padded with Democratic Party workers and relatives of local W. P. A. officials.

In the belief that these charges should either be proved or disproved, I would appreciate being provided with a list of nonrelief employees in the Fort Wayne W. P. A. district, together with their respective salaries.

Thanking you in advance for your cooperation in this matter, I am,

Sincerely,

GEORGE W. GILLIE, M. C.

WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D. C., April 26, 1939.

The Honorable GEORGE W. GILLIE,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. GILLIE: The receipt is acknowledged of your letter of April 24, 1939, requesting a list of nonrelief employees in the Fort Wayne W. P. A. district, together with their respective salaries.

I am entirely willing to furnish information regarding our administrative personnel giving numbers of persons and salaries which they are receiving, but hesitate to give lists of names, as I believe that such information subjects the individuals concerned to embarrassment.

At this particular juncture an investigation of the Works Progress Administration is being conducted by a subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives under the authority of House Resolution No. 130. This subcommittee has called upon the Works Progress Administration for a large amount of information concerning our administrative staff which is now being supplied and which I presume will be embodied in the report of the investigating committee.

In view of the fact that this committee has been designated by the Congress to investigate this matter I would like to defer furnishing the information which you have requested until after the investigation is completed.

Very truly yours,

F. C. HARRINGTON,
Administrator.

WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D. C., March 23, 1939.

General letter No. 36, supplement No. 2.
To: All Works Progress administrators.
Subject: Requests for names and salaries of W. P. A. administrative and supervisory employees.

This supplement is to clarify the provisions of general letter No. 36, dated June 2, 1936, with reference to requests which may be received by the State Works Progress Administration for the names and salaries of W. P. A. administrative or supervisory employees.

The names and salaries of such personnel shall be considered as confidential, and shall not be furnished in response to requests which you may receive. However, all such requests shall be referred at once to the Washington office of the Works Progress Administration, for the attention of Mr. Dallas Dort, Assistant Administrator, and the person or agency making the request shall be informed of this action.

You are authorized, however, to furnish information as to the numbers of employees and salary rates without giving names in the case of requests the basis of which you consider to be reasonable. Doubtful cases should be referred to this office for decision.

F. C. HARRINGTON,
Administrator.

CLELAND BACKS GILLIE'S DEMAND THAT W. P. A. PAY ROLLS BE PUBLIC

Samuel C. Cleland, Democratic leader here and a former chairman of the Allen County Democratic Central Committee, today addressed a letter to Col. F. C. Harrington, W. P. A. Administrator, at Washington, D. C., remonstrating against Harrington's alleged refusal to grant the request of Congressman GEORGE GILLIE, of the fourth district, for a copy of pay rolls of W. P. A. administrative and supervisory employees on the ground that it would subject "such employees to embarrassment."

The full text of Mr. Cleland's letter follows:

"I read a Washington dispatch in the Fort Wayne News-Sentinel in which you are alleged to have refused Congressman GILLIE, of the Fourth Indiana District, a copy of pay rolls of W. P. A. administrative and supervisory employees on the ground that it subjects 'such employees to embarrassment.'

"I confess that is a naive but not a very sound reason.

"The salary of every school teacher, every employee of our city and county government is public property. The pay rolls are public records and open to the inspection of any taxpayer. The pay rolls of county employees are published bimonthly.

CITES SCHOOL TEACHERS' POSITION

"The school teachers and public employees are not embarrassed because all of them, as well as the public, proceed upon the theory that they earn the salaries paid and are entitled to receive them.

"The secretiveness of your department serves only to breed suspicion and distrust, which is already deep-seated enough to have caused Congress to reduce what I personally believe to be a necessary request for funds.

"I did not subscribe to the reduced appropriation because I do not think it sound to punish those in need of employment for sins—if there are any—on the part of those administering the funds, and I do not even mean to insinuate that there are any.

"I do say, however, that if there are any, they ought to be corrected.

"The W. P. A. has had no more ardent supporter than myself. I shudder to think what might have happened had we not had W. P. A. during these years of distress.

BELIEVES ERRORS MADE

"I think some errors have been committed, perhaps not intentionally but unwittingly. Chief of these are discriminations on the part of supervisors and bosses against men to whom they may have taken dislike. I draw this conclusion from the fact that complaints have come to me, not in isolated instances but by the dozens. Not a week passes that I am not approached by from 5 to 25 of these employees.

"No small part of the difficulty arises from certifying employees and clerks who have had no experience other than book-learning, professional social workers who never paid a dollar in taxes and never even approached the seamy side of life close enough to even get a look at it. Consequently they are utterly lacking in that human equation which manifests itself in sympathy and understanding patience.

"The superior attitude of the social worker does not contribute anything to the successful administration of W. P. A.

"Kindness and courtesy toward the worker costs nothing, contributes much, and yet is almost unknown in the handling of these men.

NOT LOOKING FOR A JOB

"I write you this letter as a New Deal Democrat, who is neither seeking a job for himself, a relative, or friends.

"The charge of politics in administration, I think, is very greatly exaggerated, particularly in this district.

"If anything, our opponents had the advantage in the last election. At any rate the results demonstrated that most W. P. A. workers must have voted the Republican ticket. There must have been a reason for it.

"These men want only kindly and decent treatment. This they are entitled to. This it is your obligation to see they get. This is exactly the reason why I oppose civil service in this sort of work. All employees in supervisory and clerical jobs should be subject to immediate discharge, and a single act of discourtesy or unkindness should be sufficient cause for discharge or dismissal.

"I did not agree with my Congressman in voting for the reduced appropriation. I commend him highly on his stand in demanding pay rolls and encourage him to immediately introduce a resolution in the Congress requiring the W. P. A. offices to furnish to any Member of Congress any and all reasonable information regarding the administration of W. P. A.

DON'T NEED WORK

"In this district jobs are held by persons who have adequate incomes without this work, with many people in need just as competent to hold these jobs.

"If you desire to keep your department free of suspicion and unjust charges, the only honorable course to follow is to lay it open to the duly elected representatives of the people who provide the funds with which to operate it.

"Dr. Gillie is eternally right in his demands for this information, and when I believe him to be right, I shall even stand in his defense, notwithstanding our differences politically.

"I hope you will reconsider your position and approach this request from the point of view which will have the approval of the people of the Fourth Congressional District of Indiana."

[From the Fort Wayne News-Sentinel of May 3, 1939]

A W. P. A. ERROR

Any Allen County taxpayer may go to the Allen County courthouse and there see the salaries paid to persons employed by either the county or the city.

The accessibility of such salary records is justified by the fact that taxpayers, being the ones to pay public salaries, have a right to ascertain what they are paying.

This newspaper has never believed that there should be any encouragement given to the widespread publication of publicly derived small salaries purely for idle gossip purposes; but it does not believe, either, that proper persons seeking proper information for proper purposes should be interfered with by bureaucrats exercising improper authority.

The case in point is the refusal of the W. P. A. here to provide Congressman GEORGE W. GILLIE with lists of the salaries received by W. P. A. administrative officials in the Fort Wayne area.

A Member of Congress is a proper person to seek such proper information, and his purposes are exceedingly proper. If Members of Congress are not informed with respect to such items of expenditures, they are almost obligated to accept the conclusion that the W. P. A. is wasteful and extravagant—and perhaps even corrupt.

Samuel C. Cleland, local Democratic leader, who can hardly be accused of being anti-New Deal, has himself written to Colonel Harrington, national W. P. A. Administrator, finding fault with the W. P. A. reasoning which denied the request of Congressman GILLIE.

It is to be hoped that Mr. Cleland's letter will incline the W. P. A. to see that not all of the opposition to its methods stems from politically partisan opposition.

W. P. A. officials should never take a high-handed attitude toward any American citizen, but least of all should they take such an attitude toward a man who has been elected by the people of eight large counties to represent them in the making of national laws.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an article by Arthur Sears Henning entitled "Hands Out Favors to Friendly Press."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the exemption of small telephone exchanges from the Fair Labor Standards Act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

RUMANIAN WAR DEBT

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, in the midst of diplomatic chaos and confusion worse confounded it is refreshing to note the desire of the Rumanian Government to begin the payment on its debt to us and, in addition, to attempt to square its accounts with our own bondholders. Officially here is the story in formal diplomatic language:

"The Rumanian Government has notified the United States Government that it has decided to submit an arrangement for paying its war debt to America.

"It was also decided that on the basis of the arrangement between the Rumanian Minister in Washington and the association of American holders of Rumanian post-war bonds placed in the United States regular payment on this public debt should begin within the framework either of the present transfer possibilities or those that are created through the development of economic relations between Rumania and the United States."

Back of this, however, is the fact that our Minister, Franklin Mott Gunther, has already attended a conference with Premier Armand Calinescu and the officials of the Ministries of Finance and Commerce. There he learned of the desire of the Rumanian Government to enter immediate negotiations with our Secretary of the Treasury for a funding arrangement as part payment of the debt to the United States.

Step by step with this, the distinguished Rumanian Minister credited to our country, Mr. Radu Irinescu, has been instructed to negotiate with the Foreign Bondholders Protective Council of New York for the payment of arrears on Rumanian state bonds held privately in the United States.

None of us who is aware of the financial stringency of the Rumanian capital can help but welcome this magnificent gesture which began at the initiative of King Carol. We cannot expect much, but the gesture itself is of the highest importance.

Mr. Speaker, the ultimate duty in this matter rests with the Congress of the United States. Our Chief Executive himself, in his great war-debt speech on June 1, 1934, closed with this paragraph:

Recognizing that the final power lies with Congress, I shall keep the Congress informed from time to time and make such recommendations as may later seem advisable.

The President himself said:

These obligations furnished vital means for the successful conclusion of a war which involved the national existence of the borrowers, and later for a quicker restoration of their normal life after the war ended.

The money loaned by the United States Government was in turn borrowed by the United States Government from the people of the United States; and our Government, in the absence of payment from foreign governments, is compelled to raise the shortage by general taxation of its own people in order to pay off the original Liberty bonds and the later refunding bonds.

It is for these reasons that the American people have felt that their debtors were called upon to make a determined effort to discharge these obligations. The American people would not be disposed to place an impossible burden upon their debtors, but are nevertheless in a just position to ask that substantial sacrifices be made to meet these debts.

We shall continue to expect the debtors on their part to show full understanding of the American attitude on this debt question. The people of the debtor nations will also bear in mind the fact that the American people are certain to be swayed by the use which debtor countries make of their available resources—whether such resources would be applied for the purposes of recovery as well as for reasonable payment on the debt owed to the citizens of the United States, for the purposes of unproductive nationalistic expenditure, or like purposes.

I have introduced a bill today creating a commission to handle the projected proposals of the Rumanian Government and to report back their recommendations to the Congress of the United States. There is ample precedent for this in the World War Foreign Debt Commission, originally defined in the act of Congress approved February 9, 1922, and amended by the act of Congress approved February 8, 1923.

Mr. Speaker, it is my fond hope that mightier nations than Rumania, with a population of 18,000,000 people and an area of little over 100,000 square miles, just about the size of Arizona, might follow this example. That country has had a heroic existence from the time she gained her freedom from the Turks in 1877, after four centuries of Mohammedan domination. Her entry in the World War was in 1916; although she reaped terrific set-backs by the German and Austrian troops, she was awarded Hungarian Transylvania and Russian Bessarabia as a reward for her Herculean efforts.

In the post-war period she has been a friend of Hungary and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. As a member of the Little Entente she has a close affinity to France, and the utmost cordiality exists with Poland.

Grain and petroleum are her chief products, with the Government and private capital owning her rich oil wells.

For that small nation to have manifested this willingness to make a "determined effort" and "substantial sacrifices" is praiseworthy indeed. Would that it were possible for those so-called democracies for whom the administration is exerting every effort for them to manifest the same zeal.

It might not be amiss for us to point out the possessions of two of these nations in our own hemisphere—France and England—and I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks and include therein French and British island possessions in the Western Hemisphere.

FRENCH AND BRITISH ISLAND POSSESSIONS IN THE WESTERN HEMISPHERE

GREAT BRITAIN

West Indies group: Bermuda, Bahamas, Barbados, Jamaica, Cayman Island, Turks and Caicos Islands, Trinidad.

Leeward Island group: Antigua, Barbuda, Redonda, the Virgin Islands, Dominica, St. Kitts, Nevis, Anguilla, Montserrat.

Windward Islands group: Grenada, St. Vincent, St. Lucia.

Northern group: Falkland Islands, Newfoundland, Labrador.

FRENCH

Mandated territories: Guadeloupe, Martinique, St. Pierre, Miquelon.

[From the Handbook of Commercial Geography]

British Islands: The total area of these is a little more than 12,000 square miles and the population under 1,500,000.

(1) Jamaica, an island about two-thirds of the size of Yorkshire, south of eastern Cuba, capital and chief port Kingston; (2) the Bahamas; (3) the Leeward Islands—the Virgin Islands (Tortola, Virgin Gorde, Anegada) (part of the group), St. Christopher (St. Kitts), Nevis, Antigua, Montserrat, and Dominica; (4) the Windward Islands—St. Lucia, St. Vincent, Grenada (with the Grenadines); (5) Barbados; (6) Trinidad and Tobago, the former an island lying opposite the delta of the Orinoco, the latter a little to the northeast. In almost all of them sugar takes an important place among the exports, but cacao and spices are the chief products of Grenada, and since 1885 fresh fruits have risen to the first place among the exports of Jamaica. Cacao is also largely grown in Trinidad, Dominica, and St. Lucia; Montserrat is well known for its lime juice; and Antigua has a large trade in pineapples. The fruits mainly exported from Jamaica are bananas, oranges, and coconuts. The principal market is the United States, but a huge trade in Jamaica bananas has been built up in the United Kingdom and Europe. In many of the islands cotton cultivation (especially of the valuable sea-island variety is increasing. The chief port for the fruit trade is Port Antonio, on the north coast, which is only about 1,500 nautical miles from New York, as against 4,350 miles from Liverpool. From 1900 to 1910, however, the fruit trade with the United Kingdom was stimulated by a bounty granted to a steamship company for maintaining a direct trade with Jamaica by means of ships provided with refrigerating apparatus suitable for the trade. Among the mineral products of the group are asphalt, obtained from a large lake in the interior of Trinidad; phosphates from Sombrero, a small island to the east of the Virgin group; and salt from the Turks Islands, a dependency of Jamaica in the southeast of the Bahamas. But of still greater importance is the petroleum industry of Trinidad. In 1925 Trinidad ranked second (after India) amongst oil-producing countries of the British Empire, the output being 154,000,000 gallons, or 0.44 percent. of the world's total.

Other islands: Guadeloupe and Martinique, with some smaller islands, and half of St. Martin, belong to the French. The products are similar to those of the British islands. The importance to the United States of the acquisition of the Virgin group lies in the fact that the principal island, St. Thomas, has a fine harbor, with the port of Charlotte Amalie lying on the direct route from the Atlantic end of the Panama Canal to Europe. In former times this port, having been made by the Danes a free port more than a century ago, became the chief depot for the West Indian Islands and the east coast of South America, but this trade dwindled away when direct steamer routes were established in increasing numbers between West Indian and South American seaports and those of Europe and America. It is now, however, likely once more to become an important entrepot.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include therein an article entitled "Is the Government That Rotten?"

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—REORGANIZATION PLAN NO. II (H. DOC. NO. 288)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read:

To the Congress of the United States:

Pursuant to the provisions of the Reorganization Act of 1939 (Public, No. 19, 76th Cong., 1st sess.) approved April 3, 1939, I herewith transmit reorganization plan No. II, which, after investigation, I have prepared in accordance with the provisions of section 4 of the act; and I declare that with respect to each transfer, consolidation, or abolition made in reorganization plan No. II, I have found that such transfer, consolidation, or abolition is necessary to accomplish one or more of the purposes of section 1 (a) of the act.

In my message to the Congress on April 25, 1939, transmitting reorganization plan No. I, I took occasion to say that, it being obviously impracticable to complete the task of reorganization at one time, I had decided, in view of the declaration of the Congress that it should be accomplished immediately and speedily, to undertake it in several steps.

Plan No. I had to do with overall management. Plan No. II, transmitted herewith, is designed to improve the work of the executive branch for which, although carried on through executive departments and agencies, the responsibility to the people is through the President. It is concerned with the sole purpose of improving the administrative management of the executive branch by a more logical grouping of existing units and functions and by a further reduction in the number of independent agencies.

I am transmitting reorganization plan No. II as the result of studies that have been made for me and of my own experience over a period of several years, as the best way in which to regroup the agencies affected so as to fulfill the purposes of the act:

(1) To reduce expenditures;

(2) To increase efficiency;

(3) To consolidate agencies according to major purposes;

(4) To reduce the number of agencies by consolidating those having similar functions and by abolishing such as may not be necessary; and

(5) To eliminate overlapping and duplication of effort.

The plan I now transmit I shall describe briefly as follows:

I propose to transfer the Foreign Commerce Service of the United States and its functions now in the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce and the Foreign Agricultural Service of the United States and its functions in the Department of Agriculture to the Department of State, and to consolidate them with the Foreign Service of the United States under the direction and supervision of the Secretary of State.

By this transfer and consolidation there will be a single Foreign Service in the Department of State, but this does not mean that the interests of the commercial and agricultural communities are to be neglected, for it is a part of the plan that representatives of the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of Commerce shall be placed on the Board of Foreign Service Personnel and that specific investigations relating to commerce and agriculture shall be initiated directly by the Secretaries of these two Departments, who will receive directly the results of investigations in their own fields.

A much greater degree of coordination and effectiveness in our foreign establishments can be achieved under the plan than has ever before been possible. The needs of the different departments and agencies of the Government will be met more efficiently and the responsiveness of the foreign establishments to these needs will be greatly improved.

The plan presupposes that it may be necessary from time to time for various departments and agencies of the Government to send abroad specialists and technicians for relatively temporary duty. While these will not be in the Foreign Service, strictly speaking, they will be given a suitable commission by the Department of State, on a temporary basis, so that they may have the same obligations as other officers of the Foreign Service while on duty abroad.

The plan also presupposes a special training period within the Department of Commerce and the Department of Agriculture for Foreign Service officers selected to specialize in commercial or agricultural work and contemplates the fullest utilization of the experience gained abroad by Foreign Service officers in the work of the Departments of Commerce and Agriculture in this country. There will be stationed in the Department of State a liaison officer of the Department of Commerce and of the Department of Agriculture to make effective the proposed cooperation.

The plan specifically leaves undisturbed the relationships of the Department of Commerce and of the Department of Agriculture with the commercial and agricultural communities. What it does do is to consolidate the foreign services into one Foreign Service in the Department of State, where it ought to be, with the resulting advantages of economy, efficiency, better functional grouping, elimination of overlapping and duplication of effort, and greater service to our commercial and agricultural interests.

There is also transferred to the Department of State the Foreign Service Buildings Commission and its functions. This Commission is advisory to the administrative work of the Department of State and should no longer have the status of an independent establishment.

The Bureau of Lighthouses, now in the Department of Commerce, is transferred to the Treasury Department and consolidated with the Coast Guard in that Department. The advantages of this consolidation are obvious and fall clearly within the provision of the act requiring me to consolidate agencies according to major purposes. This will save money on equipment and administration and will permit the better use of personnel.

The plan also includes the abolition of the Office of the Director General of Railroads and of the War Finance Corporation and the transfer of their functions to the Secretary of the Treasury to be wound up by him as rapidly as may be. In the case of the War Finance Corporation, it is directed that the final dissolution shall be accomplished not later than December 31, 1939.

I further propose to transfer to the Department of Justice the Federal Prison Industries, Inc., and the National Training School for Boys, and at the same time to abolish the Board of Trustees of the National Training School for Boys. Responsibility for the Federal penal and correctional institutons is in the Department of Justice and these two independent establishments should be consolidated therein. None of the other Federal penal or correctional institutions has a board of trustees and there is no need of further continuing the Board of the National Training School.

The plan also provides for the abolition of the Codification Board established for the purpose of codifying existing administrative law and the transfer of its functions to the Division of the Federal Register in The National Archives. The work of this Board has now progressed to the point where a separate board is no longer necessary and the future work of keeping the codification up to date can more efficiently and economically be carried on by the editorial staff of the Federal Register.

I find it necessary and desirable in order to accomplish the purposes of the Reorganization Act to abolish the National Bituminous Coal Commission and to transfer its functions to the Secretary of the Interior. Thus the task of conserving the bituminous-coal resources of the country may be carried on directly by the head of the Department principally responsible for the conservation of fuel and other mineral supplies. The Congress placed this Commission in the Department of the Interior, but experience has shown that direct administration will be cheaper, better, and more effective than through the cumbersome medium of an unnecessary commission.

The transfer to the Department of the Interior of the Bureau of Insular Affairs in the War Department and its consolidation with the Division of Territories and Island Possessions in Interior is a functional transfer of obvious desirability. Under the provisions of existing law, however, I shall direct, where necessary, that certain correspondence from the Governor General of the Philippines shall be transmitted to the President through the Department of State.

The plan provides for the transfer to the Department of the Interior of the Bureau of Fisheries from the Department of Commerce and of the Bureau of Biological Survey from the Department of Agriculture. These two bureaus have to do with conservation and utilization of the wildlife resources of the country, terrestrial and aquatic. Therefore, they should be grouped under the same departmental administration, and in that department which, more than any other, is directly responsible for the administration and conservation of the public domain. However, I intend to direct that the facilities of the Department of Agriculture shall continue to be used for research studies which have to do with the protection of domestic animals from diseases of wildlife, and also where most economical for the protection to farmers and stockmen against predatory animals.

The plan also provides for the transfer of the Mount Rushmore National Memorial Commission to the National Park Service in the Department of the Interior in order that this great memorial may be administered as a part of the similar work of the Park Service.

Included in the plan is a provision to transfer to the Department of Agriculture the Rural Electrification Administration, now operated as an independent establishment. The work of this Administration in its educational as well as its lending functions is clearly a part of the rural life activities of the country and should, therefore, be administered in coordination with the other agricultural activities of the Government.

The Inland Waterways Corporation is transferred to the Department of Commerce from the War Department. This Corporation, which operates inland waterways transportation facilities, should be coordinated with the administration of other aids to commerce and industry.

I propose to transfer to the Federal Security Agency, for administration in the Office of Education, the film and radio functions of the National Emergency Council. These are clearly a part of the educational activities of the Government and should be consolidated with similar activities already carried on in the Office of Education. Similarly, Government participation in the work of the American Printing House for the Blind, except fiscal functions relating to trust funds, is transferred from the Secretary of the Treasury to the Federal Security Agency, in order that this work may be coordinated with the other work for the blind now being carried on in the Social Security Board.

The plan provides for the abolition of the National Emergency Council and the transfer to the Executive Office of the President of all its functions with the exception of the film and radio activities, which go to the Office of Education. Subject to appropriations by the Congress, these activities transferred to the White House would be administered in the manner best designed to give the President the information he requires from all parts of the country.

The National Emergency Council was established by Executive order in 1933 and is composed of the President, the Vice President, the members of the Cabinet, and the heads of some 23 independent establishments. Its usefulness as an actual council, which met weekly under my chairmanship, was very great in the period of the emergency which then confronted the country, but as time has gone on it no longer operates as a council but does continue to carry on important activities which are indispensable to the President of the United States, as well as to other branches of the Government and the public. It maintains an information service and a press intelligence service, it publishes the United States Government Manual, and it carries on through State and central staffs an important work of coordinating and reporting.

The information service makes available general information concerning all phases of governmental activity and is provided for all who submit questions or inquiries by mail, by telephone, or by personal call. In one sense, it may be called a post-office address—"Uncle Sam, Post Office Box No. 1, Washington, D. C."—to which persons who want information about the Government but do not know the exact division or agency of the Government to which to apply may write with confidence that their questions will be answered or else sent on to the proper agency for direct reply.

The press intelligence service carried on in the Council is not a service for giving intelligence to the press but rather for making available to responsible persons in the Government, both in the executive and in the legislative branches, a clipping service which shows what the press of the country has printed. The partial consolidation of clipping services in this unit—a consolidation which should go further—already has resulted in economy and convenience. A clipping service of this kind, on a smaller scale, was maintained for many years in the White House, but it was not then available to other branches of the Government. Its return to the White House, with the additional feature of availability to all the rest of the Government, will promote efficiency without violating tradition.

The publication of the United States Government Manual makes available to every citizen a simplified textbook of information as to the organization and availability of the Federal agencies. Published in loose-leaf form, it is sold by the Superintendent of Documents of the Government Printing Office.

The coordinating and reporting functions of the Council have to do with the presentation to the President of factual information, independently gathered, as to the progress and effect of our governmental activities. Through its State offices the Council has been able to facilitate the various Federal programs particularly with respect to State and local governments.

The plan also includes certain general provisions in order to accomplish fully the purposes of the act. In addition to the transfer of bureaus and other units, it is necessary also to transfer certain functions of heads of departments; to transfer records, property, and personnel; to transfer funds; and to provide that the power of appointment occasionally, and sometimes apparently quite accidentally, vested in a subordinate official of a department, shall be vested in the head of the department. It is impossible to exercise the proper direction and supervision over subordinate units unless the definite power of appointment, fixing of compensation, transfer, and promotion or dismissal of personnel is vested in the principal responsible head. In no other way can the purpose of consolidating similar functions under a single head as required by the act be accomplished in practice.

It is one of the five purposes of the Reorganization Act "to reduce expenditures to the fullest extent consistent with the efficient operation of the Government." This is an important purpose in each phase of the plan here presented. The Reorganization Act prohibits abolishing functions—in other words, basic services or activities performed. Therefore, the reduction in expenditures must necessarily be brought about chiefly in the overhead administrative expenses of the agencies affected. In a great many cases the economies to be effected by reorganization plan No. II will be the result of improved efficiency, which will, as the plan works out, require fewer persons to perform the work or will require the employment of less temporary assistance.

In the case of the consolidation of the foreign services, it is estimated that the administration by a single administrative unit in the Department of State will achieve a saving of $20,000 a year and that consolidation of the three field forces will make it possible to drop alien employees and, by a more effective use of personnel, to save an additional $100,000 a year when the readjustments have been made.

The total administrative expense of all of the agencies affected by this plan is about $25,000,000 per annum.

The reduction of such expenditures, which it is probable will be brought about by the taking effect of the reorganizations specified in the plan, is estimated at $1,250,000 per annum. Certain of these economies can be brought about at once. Others will require a gradual readjustment in machinery and business practices of the agencies affected.

May I repeat what I said in my message transmitting reorganization plan No. I, that in this as in future reorganization plans not every person will agree on each and every detail. Out of the many groupings and regroupings proposed, a few of the individual agencies conceivably could be placed elsewhere, but I have been seeking to consider the functional purpose of each agency as required by the Reorganization Act itself and have made this plan with the sole purpose of improving the service rendered by the Government to its citizens in accordance with the purposes set out in the act.

In view of the fact that it is now May 9, and that any reorganization plan must lie before the Congress for 60 calendar days, and because the reorganizations of an intradepartmental character require a great deal of research and careful painstaking detail work, I do not propose to send any further general reorganization plans to the Congress at this session.

However, there are certain transfers, abolitions, and consolidations of committees, commissions, and boards which I propose to do by means of Executive and military orders under existing law as complementary to reorganization plan No. II when it becomes effective.

Then, also, by mere administrative procedure, some small agencies which have been listed in various publications as independent establishments, but whose independence has no basis in law or in formal Executive or military orders, may be reassigned to an appropriate placement by administrative procedure on the part of their respective heads.

Not all of the interdepartmental transfers and consolidations that are necessary and desirable have been accomplished in this reorganization plan No. II. I am directing the Bureau of the Budget to study these problems in order that they may be included in plans to be transmitted to the Congress at its next session.

For example, in order to save money and to do the work more efficiently there are some units which should be divided so that a part of the work may be done by one agency and a part by another. Take, for example, the business of mapping. It is obviously important that the work of making surveys and accumulating data for maps should be done in the various agencies which are concerned primarily with the purpose for which the map is being drawn. On the other hand, the business of manufacturing maps might very well be consolidated in order to save money and to manufacture better maps.

I have considered the desirability of transferring the jurisdiction over deportable aliens from the Immigration and Naturalization Service in the Department of Labor to the Department of Justice, but I find that this matter will require further study, or perhaps legislation, and therefore it is not included in this plan.

I have also considered the problem of certain public lands insofar as they present overlapping jurisdiction between the Departments of the Interior and Agriculture.

Insofar as crops, including tree crops, are involved there is something to be said for their retention in the Department of Agriculture. But where lands are to be kept for the primary purpose of recreation and permanent public use and conservation they fall more logically into the Department of the Interior.

I hope to offer a reorganization plan on this early in the next session.

There are other types of work carried on in the Federal Government where it may prove necessary and desirable to divide the functions now being carried on by a particular unit so as the better to serve the basis purpose for which the work was undertaken. Such problems I shall continue to study with the view of sending other reorganization plans involving both interdepartmental and intradepartmental reorganizations to the Congress at its next session.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 9, 1939.

REORGANIZATION PLAN NO. II

(Prepared by the President and transmitted to the Senate and the House of Representatives in Congress assembled, May 9, 1939, pursuant to the provisions of the Reorganization Act of 1939, approved April 3, 1939)

PART 1. DEPARTMENTS

SECTION 1. State Department: Transfers and consolidations relating to the Department of State are hereby effected as follows:

(a) Foreign Commerce Service and Foreign Agricultural Service: The Foreign Commerce Service of the United States and its functions in the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce and the Foreign Agricultural Service of the United States and its functions as established by the act of June 5, 1930 (46 Stat. 497), in the Department of Agriculture are hereby transferred to the Department of State and shall be consolidated with and administered as a part of the Foreign Service of the United States under the direction and supervision of the Secretary of State.

(b) Functions of the Secretary of Commerce and the Secretary of Agriculture transferred to the Secretary of State; exceptions: The functions of the Secretary of Commerce with respect to the Foreign Commerce Service and the functions of the Secretary of Agriculture with respect to the Foreign Agricultural Service (other than functions with respect to such services pertaining to activities in the United States and to the compilation, publication, and dissemination of information) are hereby transferred to, and shall be exercised by, the Secretary of State, except and provided that under regulations prescribed by the President—

(1) The Secretary of State shall cause to be made such investigations relating to commercial and industrial conditions and activities in foreign countries and such other specific investigations relating to foreign commerce as the Secretary of Commerce shall determine to be in the public interest, and shall report to the Secretary of Commerce the results of, and the information secured through, such investigations. He shall also cause to be made such investigations relating to world competition and demand for agricultural products, to production, marketing, and disposition of such products in foreign countries, and to farm management and other phases of agricultural industry in foreign countries, and shall conduct abroad such activities (including the demonstration of standards for cotton, wheat, and other American agricultural products), as the Secretary of Agriculture shall determine to be in the public interest, and shall report to the Secretary of Agriculture the results of, and the information secured through, such investigations and activities.

(2) The Secretary of Commerce may from time to time when he deems it in the public interest designate any officer in his Department to render temporary service under the provisions of, and subject to the conditions named in, section 5 of the act of March 3, 1927 (44 Stat. 1396).

(3) The Secretary of Agriculture may from time to time when he deems it in the public interest designate any officer in his Department to render temporary service under the provisions of, and subject to the conditions named in, section 2 of the act of June 5, 1930 (46 Stat. 498).

(4) The Secretary of Commerce and the Secretary of Agriculture may each designate an officer in his Department, acceptable to the Secretary of State, to serve in the Department of State as liaison officer in connection with the administration of the foreign service of the United States.

(5) One officer in the Department of Commerce designated by the Secretary of Commerce and acceptable to the Secretary of State and one officer in the Department of Agriculture designated by the Secretary of Agriculture and acceptable to the Secretary of State shall be added to the membership of the Board of Foreign Service Personnel for the Foreign Service.

(c) Status of Foreign Service officers: Foreign Commerce Service officers and Foreign Agricultural Service officers who by reason of transfer to the Foreign Service of the United States and by appointment according to law acquire status of Foreign Service officers therein shall not be included in the total number of officers in such Service for the purpose of determining the percentage limitation established by section 10 of the act of February 23, 1931 (46 Stat. 1207), as amended.

(d) China Trade Act registrar: Such officer of the Foreign Service as the Secretary of State shall make available for that purpose may be authorized by the Secretary of Commerce to perform the duties of China Trade Act registrar provided for in the act of September 19, 1922 (42 Stat. 849), under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce.

(e) Foreign Service Buildings Commission: The Foreign Service Buildings Commission and its functions are hereby transferred to the Department of State. The Commission shall exercise advisory functions, but all other functions (including administrative functions) shall be exercised under the direction and supervision of the Secretary of State by such division, bureau, or office in the Department of State as the Secretary shall determine.

SEC. 2. Treasury Department: Transfers, consolidations, and abolitions relating to the Department of the Treasury are hereby effected as follows:

(a) Bureau of Lighthouses: The Bureau of Lighthouses in the Department of Commerce and its functions are hereby transferred to and shall be consolidated with and administered as a part of the Coast Guard in the Department of the Treasury.

(b) Director General of Railroads: Office abolished and functions transferred: The office of Director General of Railroads is hereby abolished. The functions and duties of the Director General of Railroads are hereby transferred to the Secretary of the Treasury to be exercised and performed by him personally or through such officer or officers of the Department of the Treasury as he may authorize. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby designated as the agent provided for in section 206 of the Transportation Act, 1920 (41 Stat. 461).

(c) War Finance Corporation abolished: All of the functions, property, and obligations of the War Finance Corporation not heretofore transferred by statute to the Secretary of the Treasury are hereby transferred to the Department of the Treasury. The War Finance Corporation is hereby abolished and the Secretary of the Treasury shall complete the winding up of its affairs and shall dispose of its assets in accordance with the act of March 1, 1929 (45 Stat. 1442), not later than December 31, 1939.

SEC. 3. Department of Justice: Transfers, consolidations, and abolitions relating to the Department of Justice are hereby effected as follows:

(a) Federal Prison Industries, Inc.: The Federal Prison Industries, Inc. (together with its board of directors), and its functions are hereby transferred to the Department of Justice and shall be administered under the general direction and supervision of the Attorney General.

(b) National Training School for Boys: The National Training School for Boys and its functions (including the functions of its board of trustees) are hereby transferred to the Department of Justice and shall be administered by the Director of the Bureau of Prisons, under the direction and supervision of the Attorney General.

(c) Board of trustees of the National Training School for Boys abolished: The board of trustees of the National Training School for Boys (including the consulting trustees) is hereby abolished.

SEC. 4. Department of the Interior: Transfers, consolidations, and abolitions relating to the Department of the Interior are hereby effected as follows:

(a) Functions of the National Bituminous Coal Commission transferred: The functions of the National Bituminous Coal Commission (including the functions of the members of the Commission) are hereby transferred to the Secretary of the Interior, to be administered under his direction and supervision by such division, bureau, or office in the Department of the Interior as the Secretary shall determine.

(b) National Bituminous Coal Commission abolished: The National Bituminous Coal Commission and the offices of the members thereof are hereby abolished and the outstanding affairs of the Commission shall be wound up by the Secretary of the Interior.

(c) Office of consumers' counsel abolished and functions transferred: The office of consumers' counsel of the National Bituminous Coal Commission is hereby abolished and its functions are transferred to, and shall be administered in, the office of the Solicitor of the Department of the Interior under the direction and supervision of the Secretary of the Interior.

(d) Bureau of Insular Affairs: The Bureau of Insular Affairs of the War Department and its functions are hereby transferred to the Department of the Interior and shall be consolidated with the Division of Territories and Island Possessions in the Department of the Interior and administered in such division under the direction and supervision of the Secretary of the Interior. The office of the Chief of the Bureau and offices subordinate thereto provided for in section 14 of the act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat. 769), are hereby abolished and all of the functions of such offices are transferred to, and shall be exercised by, the Director of the Division of Territories and Island Possessions.

(e) Bureau of Fisheries: The Bureau of Fisheries in the Department of Commerce and its functions are hereby transferred to the Department of the Interior and shall be administered in that Department under the direction and supervision of the Secretary of the Interior. The functions of the Secretary of Commerce relating to the protection of fur seals and other fur-bearing animals, to the supervision of the Pribilof Islands and the care of the natives thereof, and to the Whaling Treaty Act are hereby transferred to, and shall be exercised by, the Secretary of the Interior.

(f) Bureau of Biological Survey: The Bureau of Biological Survey in the Department of Agriculture and its functions are hereby transferred to the Department of the Interior and shall be administered in that Department under the direction and supervision of the Secretary of the Interior. The functions of the Secretary of Agriculture relating to the conservation of wildlife, game, and migratory birds are hereby transferred to, and shall be exercised by, the Secretary of the Interior. The provisions of the act of May 18, 1934 (c. 299, 48 Stat. 780), as amended by the act of February 8, 1936 (c. 40, 49 Stat. 1105), insofar as they relate to officers or employees of the Department of Agriculture designated by the Secretary of Agriculture to enforce any act of Congress for the protection, preservation, or restoration of game and other wildlife and animals shall apply to officers and employees of the Department of the Interior designated by the Secretary of the Interior to exercise and discharge such duties.

(g) Officers of Biological Survey may administer oaths: The provisions of the act of January 31, 1925 (c. 124, 43 Stat. 803), shall be applicable to such officers, agents, or employees of the Department of the Interior performing functions of the Bureau of Biological Survey as are designated by the Secretary of the Interior for the purposes named in the act.

(h) Migratory Bird Conservation Commission: The Secretary of the Interior shall be chairman of the Migratory Bird Conservation Commission and the Secretary of Agriculture shall be a member thereof.

(i) Mount Rushmore National Memorial Commission: The Mount Rushmore National Memorial Commission and its functions are hereby transferred to the National Park Service in the Department of the Interior. The functions vested in the Commission by sections 3 and 4 (a) of the act of June 15, 1938 (c. 402, 52 Stat. 694), shall continue to be exercised by the Commission. All other functions of the Mount Rushmore National Memorial Commission shall be administered by the National Park Service under the direction and supervision of the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 5. Department of Agriculture—Rural Electrification Administration transferred: The Rural Electrification Administration and its functions and activities are hereby transferred to the Department of Agriculture and shall be administered in that Department by the Administrator of the Rural Electrification Administration under the general direction and supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture.

SEC. 6. Department of Commerce: Transfer of Inland Waterways Corporation: The Inland Waterways Corporation and all of its functions and obligations are hereby transferred to the Department of Commerce and shall be administered in that Department under the supervision and direction of the Secretary of Commerce. The capital stock of the Corporation shall continue to be held for the United States by the Secretary of the Treasury, but all other functions, rights, privileges, and powers, and all duties and liabilities of the Secretary of War relating to the Inland Waterways Corporation are hereby transferred to, and shall be exercised, performed, and discharged by, the Secretary of Commerce. The Secretary of Commerce shall be substituted for the Secretary of War as, and shall be deemed to be, the incorporator of the Inland Waterways Corporation.

PART 2. INDEPENDENT AGENCIES

SEC. 201. Federal Security Agency: Transfers and consolidations relating to the Federal Security Agency are hereby effected, as follows:

(a) Radio service and United States film service transferred: The functions of the Radio Division and the United States film service of the National Emergency Council are hereby transferred to the Federal Security Agency and shall be administered in the Office of Education under the direction and supervision of the Federal Security Administrator.

(b) American Printing House for the Blind: The functions of the Secretary of the Treasury with respect to the administration of the appropriations for the American Printing House for the Blind (except the function relating to the perpetual trust fund) are hereby transferred to the Federal Security Agency and shall be administered under the direction and supervision of the Federal Security Administrator. The annual report and vouchers required to be furnished to the Secretary of the Treasury by the trustees of the American Printing House for the Blind shall be furnished to the Federal Security Administrator.

SEC. 202. National Archives: Transfers, consolidations, and abolitions relating to the National Archives are hereby effected as follows:

(a) Functions of Codification Board transferred: The functions of the Codification Board, established by the act of June 19, 1937 (50 Stat. 304), are hereby transferred to The National Archives and shall be consolidated in that agency with the functions of the division of the Federal Register and shall be administered by such division under the direction and supervision of the Archivist.

(b) Codification Board abolished: The Codification Board is hereby abolished and its outstanding affairs shall be wound up by the Archivist through the division of the Federal Register in The National Archives.

PART 3. EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT

SEC. 301. Transfers and abolitions relating to the Executive Office of the President are hereby effected as follows:

(a) Functions of National Emergency Council transferred: All functions of the National Emergency Council other than those relating to radio service and film service (transferred by section 201 (a) of this plan to the Federal Security Agency) are hereby transferred to the Executive Office of the President and shall be administered under the direction and supervision of the President.

(b) National Emergency Council abolished: The National Emergency Council is hereby abolished and its outstanding affairs shall be wound up under the direction and supervision of the President.

PART 4. GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 401. Transfer of functions of heads of departments: Except as otherwise provided in this plan, the functions of the head of any department relating to the administration of any agency or function transferred from his department by this plan, are hereby transferred to, and shall be exercised by, the head of the department or agency to which such transferred agency or function is transferred by this plan.

SEC. 402. Transfer of records, property, and personnel: All records and property (including office equipment) of the several agencies, and all records and property used primarily in the administration of any functions, transferred by this plan and, except as otherwise provided, all the personnel used in the administration of such agencies and functions (including officers whose chief duties relate to such administration) are hereby transferred to the respective departments or agencies concerned, for use in the administration of the agencies and functions transferred by this plan: Provided, That any personnel transferred to any department or agency by this section found by the head of such department or agency to be in excess of the personnel necessary for the administration of the functions transferred to his department or agency shall be retransferred under existing law to other positions in the Government service, or separated from the service subject to the provisions of section 10 (a) of the Reorganization Act of 1939.

SEC. 403. Transfer of funds: So much of the unexpended balances of appropriations, allocations, or other funds available for the use of any agency in the exercise of any function transferred by this plan, or for the use of the head of any department or agency in the exercise of any function so transferred, as the Director of the Bureau of the Budget with the approval of the President shall determine, shall be transferred to the department or agency concerned for use in connection with the exercise of the function so transferred. In determining the amount to be transferred the Director of the Bureau of the Budget may include an amount to provide for the liquidation of obligations incurred against such appropriations, allocations, or other funds prior to the transfer: Provided, That the use of the unexpended balances of appropriations, allocations, or other funds transferred by this section shall be subject to the provisions of section 4 (d) (3) and section 9 of the Reorganization Act of 1939.

SEC. 404. Transfer of functions relating to personnel: Except as prohibited by section 3 (b) of the Reorganization Act of 1939, all functions relating to the appointment, fixing of compensation, transfer, promotion, demotion, suspension, or dismissal of persons to or from offices and positions in any department vested by law in any officer of such department other than the head thereof are hereby transferred to the head of such department and shall be administered under his direction and supervision by such division, bureau, office, or persons as he shall determine.

The SPEAKER. The message of the President is referred to the Select Committee on Government Organization and ordered to be printed with accompanying papers.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, would a motion be in order that the message of the President be sent in its various parts to the appropriate committees of the House with a request that they report to the Select Committee on Government Organization?

This message is all-embracing, it embraces all things terrestrial and aquatic. The last message of the President dealing with Government organization was referred to the Select Committee but no hearings were held, no consideration was given to its ramifications and implications. Would a motion be in order that the several parts of the President's message be referred to the appropriate committees for recommendation?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that the motion would not be in order. The Reorganization Act of 1939 in section 23 places discretion in the Speaker to refer these messages to the Select Committee, and this has just been done.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, in the President's reorganization plan just reported I find much that pleases me tremendously. On its face it is ideal. I believe it to be a clear, fair, and masterful handling of the problem, and I trust no opposition will develop. [Applause.]

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I feel that the message of the President will be welcomed by the American public just as the first plan was welcomed, which the House approved by a very large majority.

Answering the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD], let the House distinctly understand that a resolution of disapproval was introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]. Under the rules of the House, such a resolution must be acted upon within 1 week's time by the committee to which it was referred. If it had not been acted upon within that time, it automatically became a matter of the highest privilege. The gentleman from New York could have taken the floor, moved its consideration, and he would then have controlled the time. That is the reason that matter was disposed of in the manner in which it was. Therefore no criticism should be directed to the committee for bringing in that adverse report; it was absolutely necessary under the rules of the House.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that as soon as the American public have read the message just submitted, it will be universally approved by the press and the taxpayers of this country, as was the first message. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein a short speech on peace made on yesterday by His Royal Highness the Duke of Windsor.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein a copy of a bill I have introduced.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'TOOLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein an address made by my colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEOGH].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. GILLIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include in my remarks of this morning three letters and two editorials.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. CURLEY] may have permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on next Tuesday the gentleman from New York [Mr. LORD] may address the House for 15 minutes after the disposition of the legislative program for the day and any previous special orders.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, we must not allow the spread of any system of espionage which may prove as harmful to us now as it did when this country was at war with Germany in 1917 and 1918. Our vital national-defense secrets must not come into the hands of any foreign nations. The continued existence of Nazi camps in the United States and the inculcating of foreign ideologies into children born of foreign parents is particularly harmful and may be destructive to this country as a whole. The German Government maintains a thorough organization in Stuttgart, where every person of German blood is listed and cataloged.

In last Sunday's issue of the New York Herald Tribune this system was described in great detail. It was shown how every person in the United States whose name sounds German will receive some sort of communication from the foreign office in Stuttgart. It may be only a pamphlet telling him about the beauties of the fatherland, or it may be a Christmas card or an Easter card. The purpose of any such communication is to preserve inviolate the ties binding native Americans to their ancestral home. The organization is concerned with listing all of the resources owned by German-Americans, and whether or not the eventual desire is to levy a tax on American citizens of German origin, there is no question but that the office operates efficiently and that they have in their files hundreds of thousands of names of persons who, in the event of war, might be used to the detriment of the United States.

I do not wish to appear as an alarmist and do not wish to create a bogey to frighten our people by reading the article I have just mentioned, but I cannot refrain from comparing the methods of the German office in Stuttgart with those of German-American Bund in this country. Both organizations seem to be concerned with one object, and that is to keep alive artificially an attachment to the country from which our citizens of German extraction have long since emigrated and with which they have absolutely no ties.

I know that the bulk of our Americans of German origin are patriotic and sincerely devoted to the interests of the United States, and that there is no divided loyalty among them. The exceptions which are found in the membership of the German-American Bund and other similar organizations do not destroy my faith in Americans of German blood. Simply because the bulk of the population are patriotic and liberty loving, however, we must not close our eyes to the fact that there are hundreds of thousands who are not. And it is with these traitors to America that our people must cope and whom they must eradicate from our midst.

I am sure my good friend from Texas [Mr. DIES] should by this time be fully aware of the danger and be alert to every possible opportunity to stamp it out. I am sure the Committee on Un-American Activities has found sufficient material to propose proper legislation to do away with the easy-going manner used by our Government in prosecuting and convicting spies.

Let us hope that as a result of its labors and the intense alertness of our citizens, we will not permit America to become the clearing house for spies in the event affairs in Europe will result in another devastating war. But even the nondescript public release of a few weeks ago could not very well overlook the fact that Nazi camps are the seat of sedition against our Government; that there leaders indulge in fiery speeches against inoffensive citizens of our Government and under the guise of combating communism preach quite openly doctrines of totalitarianism, extolling fascism in one form or another.

I believe that a search of all the available files in our Department of Justice as well as proper reading of our daily newspapers will convince us that we must not become indifferent to the continuance of espionage on our soil.

Mr. Speaker, for some weeks past the press has been carrying news and headlines relating to the strength of the Nazi movement in the United States. It seems that a release which gained some publicity put the total number of all Nazis and members of the bund at between 6,600 and 8,300 individuals. This figure appears to be so ridiculously low that I cannot refrain from stating on the floor of this House how impossible it is. To place the strength of the German-American Bund at this low figure is to do an injustice to America, because the impression is allowed to go abroad that there is no real danger from this quarter to the continuance of our institutions or to the well-being of our citizens. Such is not the case, however.

Let us see how these figures were actually obtained. Agents of the Department of Justice went to this so-called leader of the bund, Fritz Kuhn, and asked him, "How many members have you got?" And he answered, "Between 6,000 and 8,000." So the so-called investigators put down between 6,000 and 8,000 without even going through any of the documents, the books, or papers of the organization to check up on the actual membership. Mr. Kuhn's statement to the Department of Justice was a direct contradiction to previous statements of his bragging of a membership of 200,000, without the women's auxiliary and without the so-called youth camps in this country.

The country as a whole and the Dies committee swallowed that hook, line, and sinker. They are satisfied.

Mr. HAWKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. HAWKS. Does not the gentleman realize it was published in the paper the other day that there are admittedly over 6,000,000 Communists in this country?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is poppycock. It is ridiculous, and the gentleman could not establish it.

Mr. HAWKS. I think I could.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. You establish that and I will present a pedestal for you if I am alive. Do not give me those figures without any proof, because there has been too much hot air, there have been too many unsubstantiated charges from Members on both sides of the aisle on aliens and Communists. If there are 6,000,000 Communists in this country, they are dangerous, and we ought to get rid of them.

Mr. HAWKS. Why does the gentleman continue the "hot air", then?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. For your information, I do not consider my statements on the bund "hot air," because I have evidence to support them.

Mr. Speaker, as I said before, there is no question that the number of adherents of the bund is decidedly greater. Early this year a former operative of the Department of Justice, Leon J. Turrou, published a book entitled "Nazi Spies in America," in which he shows the wide ramifications of the German spy system in this country and the part which the German-American Bund plays in the cooperative help given to this foreign government.

You see, our public investigation of this menace has barely scratched the surface. We went through a long-drawn trial of German spies in the city of New York, and all we were able to convict were a few underlings working under orders from Berlin. The real heads of the spy system are either beyond our reach or out of the United States.

Nothing has been done by any committee or any governmental agency to destroy this menace in our country.

Mr. Speaker, I know the Members are not interested in any leader who represents a foreign government. You do not like Fritz Kuhn, and I do not like him. You do not like Communists, and I do not like them. But are we doing anything constructive to get rid of them?

Let me tell you something: Fritz Kuhn, who is the leader of the German-American Bund, has been in this country since 1932. I have some definite information, and I want to address my remarks to the members of the Rules Committee who happen to be present. Fritz Kuhn came here in 1932. He did not come to New York. He fled from Germany to Mexico as a criminal, having been guilty of a crime involving moral turpitude. He had to leave Germany. He got to Mexico and presented himself to the American consul there, making application to enter the United States under the German quota. He told a falsehood, namely, that he had never been convicted of any crime. He then came to the United States after having stated that falsehood. This may also help the committee which is investigating un-American activities.

He applied for citizenship in Detroit in 1934, and again stated he had never been convicted of a crime. He obtained his citizenship, not because he desired to become an American citizen but because he wanted the protection of the Government of the United States to carry on his un-American activities right under our noses.

Mr. Speaker, I have that proof, but what I need is a subpena to bring these people in to identify Fritz Kuhn, to show that he is the one who committeed certain crimes in Germany before entering the United States; to show that he is the same Fritz Kuhn who stole 3,000 or more marks worth of merchandise in Germany and that he is the same person who was convicted and served 4 months in prison for larceny. I appeal to the members of the Rules Committee in the name of this country. Give me a rule and give me some power to subpena the persons who will not only identify Fritz Kuhn as the same person who entered this country through subterfuge but that he is also the same Fritz Kuhn who is now leading 200,000 so-called bund members in an attack upon democracy and our cherished form of government.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. MOTT. What would be the remedy if the gentleman did establish the fact that Fritz Kuhn entered the United States upon a false affidavit, that did not state he had been convicted of a crime?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I am happy to answer that question. My answer is that he would be deportable. He would be deported back to Germany, where he could carry on his so-called bund or Nazi business among his fellow countrymen.

Mr. MOTT. But he is a citizen now.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. True. But if my committee or anybody else can establish the fact that he had been guilty of a crime involving moral turpitude, and that he did not state that fact in his affidavit, he could not have become a citizen of the United States.

Mr. MOTT. No; but since he did, is there any provision in existing law whereby his citizenship can be canceled and he can be subject to deportation?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes; on petition by the department, if it can be established that he has failed to disclose the true facts in the case.

Mr. MOTT. May I ask another question? If the gentleman has these facts, as he has stated—and I am sure he has them—why does he not present them to the Department of Justice and let the Department proceed in the regular manner?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I tried that. The gentleman is a lawyer, I assume. There are certain people now here from Germany from whom Fritz Kuhn stole money. If I had the power of subpena I would subpena those persons, first, to identify Fritz Kuhn as the person who committed that crime, and secondly, to prove his criminal record before his entry into the United States. These persons should be brought here or some place else to testify under oath as to the actual events that took place in Germany. Thirdly, it can be shown that he entered this country through fraud and is therefore subject to deportation since the statute of limitations does not run against fraud. He obtained his citizenship papers on a false petition since he stated therein that he had never been convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude. We can establish by these witnesses, that this is the same Fritz Kuhn who is guilty of a crime involving moral turpitude.

Mr. MOTT. The Department of Justice has jurisdiction to subpena these persons. Why does not the gentleman present this information to the Department?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The gentleman has been very active in the last 5 years in asking me questions along this line. I believe I have made myself very plain that the Department of Justice has no power to issue subpenas. I have said that on this floor, I think, a dozen times. The Department of Justice has no power of subpena, and the Department of Justice cannot do all the things one might lay at its door. Unless there is a crime committed interstate or there is a violation of the law that you have empowered them to investigate, the Department has no jurisdiction. Therefore, I submit to the gentleman that all we need—and I do not care personally; I am merely presenting the facts—is a little power from the Rules Committee under the Schulte resolution to subpena all these people who can identify Mr. Fritz Kuhn, who is the leader of the Nazi movement in the United States and a representative of the Hitler ideology in this country; to identify him as the same Fritz Kuhn who is guilty of an offense involving moral turpitude committed in Germany prior to his entry into the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Does not the gentleman believe that from his experience as chairman of the Committee on Immigration he could draft a law which would effectuate the purpose he has in mind; that is, getting rid of undesirable aliens, without having to come to Congress and ask for a special investigation to determine the facts relative to each individual case? I am sure if the gentleman put his mind to it he could draft a law and report it out of his committee that would remedy the situation not only as to Fritz Kuhn but a great many other undesirable and criminal aliens in this country. I believe I can safely assure the gentleman that if he will direct his energies in that direction he will have no difficulty in getting a rule from the Rules Committee for the consideration of such a bill, and we will have no difficulty in passing it on the floor of this House.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I have great admiration for my friend, the distinguished gentleman from Virginia, but if the gentleman from Virginia, and a few more gentlemen who seem to control the Rules Committee, would just go a little bit my way and cooperate with me I would be more than happy to cooperate with them to bring about the making of such a study as may be required to remedy the situation.

May I say to the gentleman that it is not my purpose to trespass on any of the rights of the Dies committee. I have great admiration for all the members of that committee and their activities. I want to go into the question of naturalization, the smuggling into this country of aliens, and other matters that I believe we ought to go into, which we have not had a chance to do for 31 years. I may say to the gentleman that if he will subpena these people to Washington or anywhere else they will give definite and positive evidence under oath that this so-called Nazi bund leader, who is a menace to this country, more so than the gentleman believes, is the same man who is guilty of a crime involving moral turpitude. I would like to deport him. I would like to set an example to all such persons, including some of the Communists who act along the same lines, and some of the leaders of the Communists. We have no use for them in this country. Give me something on which I can build a case before I can bring a bill before this Congress so the gentleman and other Members of the Congress will have a chance to vote for it.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia and Mr. HAWKS rose.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I believe if the gentleman will support the bill I have introduced, H. R. 5138, he will accomplish the major purpose he has in mind. I can speak only for myself as a member of the Rules Committee, but I can assure the gentleman that any matter he brings before that committee which has to do with getting rid of undesirable aliens, and that I believe will accomplish that purpose, will meet with support.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Let me say this to my colleague: Here is Fritzie Kuhn. You do not like Fritzie. He represents an organization that is Fascist in character and is trying to destroy your Government and mine. Here is a chance to deport Fritzie back to Germany to carry on his activities there.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I want to help the gentleman.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Then please give me a rule.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I want to help the gentleman get rid of Harry Bridges, too, but let us pass some law that will do it; and we can pass a law without any further investigation.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I do not quite agree with the gentleman. Let me say to the gentleman I would not care if he gave me no power. It does not mean anything to me. I am not seeking to get into the headlines. They mean nothing to me.

I am not a candidate for President, nor am I interested in having clubs all around the country boost me for some other office. I am just a simple, humble citizen and a member of this honorable body. I come here to tell you now, as I have done in the last 4 or 5 years, just what is going on in this country. You and others pay very little attention to it. Sure enough, we created a committee and everything was hunky-dory and they were given $100,000 and $125,000. Now I am not asking for any money. I am simply asking you to give me some power to destroy the agents of foreign governments in this country who are obtaining their citizenship papers under false pretenses or under false premises. As a lawyer you know that there is no one who can pass a bill on this floor by simply coming in here and saying that this ought to be done.

They must develop some definite proof as to why it should be done, and you and I know that a number of bills that should have been passed when brought up on the floor here were defeated simply because they had the word "immigration" in them.

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield for a brief question.

Mr. HAWKS. Can the gentleman tell the House how we are going to deport an American citizen when for the past several years we have been unable to deport an alien, namely, Mr. Bridges?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I do not know whether the gentleman is a lawyer or not, but I assume he is.

Mr. HAWKS. No, thank God.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. You do not have to thank God; we thank you. [Laughter.]

What the gentleman ought to get first is that a man who obtains his papers under false pretenses is not a citizen in the true sense of the word and that his papers could be canceled. If a petition is presented, upon proper legal evidence before a court that this man has failed to disclose a material fact, his papers are canceled, and this can be done by the Department of Labor. The next step is, that if a person obtained his admission by fraud, not being entitled to come to this country because he was guilty of an offense involving moral turpitude, in that he was convicted in his own country of larceny or some other crime which would have excluded him from this country had he disclosed the true facts—if he is guilty of either of these two charges, we can dispose of him by canceling his citizenship papers and deporting him. This would apply to Fritz Kuhn as well as to others who find themselves in similar circumstances.

Mr. HAWKS. Will that include Mr. Bridges?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. If you can find a way to deport him I will help you to do so. I have no use for Bridges.

Mr. HAWKS. It should be easier to deport him than a man who is a citizen.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Maybe the gentleman can show us some way by which the House can do it.

Mr. HAWKS. Probably I could.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, the Schulte resolution I referred to has been pending before the Rules Committee and should be considered. I have no quarrel with anyone, but we should be given an opportunity to check on these matters.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. O'TOOLE]. Under a previous order of the House the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] has 30 minutes to address the House.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I have no objection to the request, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, if we want to accomplish anything at all, we have to give these problems more serious consideration. Members of this House may not always agree upon the methods to be used in dealing with this important issue, but there ought to be some way of meeting the common enemy of our form of government.

I submit these facts for your consideration because I believe that if you will cooperate with the Committee on Immigration, without interfering or trespassing upon the prerogatives of any other committee of this House, we can definitely and positively eradicate the menace of nazi-ism, fascism, and communism.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the address I made today may be printed in the Appendix instead of the body of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the previous order of the House the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, in the time allotted to me I shall try to touch on some of the social and legislative problems arising from the establishment of the T. V. A. and from its policies and activities. I shall scarcely have time to treat any one single problem exhaustively.

To the older Members of Congress, Muscle Shoals and the Tennessee Valley Authority are old subjects, and what I say probably will not even be interesting to them. However, as the new Members represent a cross-section of the American public, they no doubt have many times wondered just what the T. V. A. is.

I have a map upon which I might be able to point out the physical T. V. A. and the scope of its activities from a geographical standpoint. In the first place, you will note from these State boundary lines that the T. V. A. activities touch seven States. They extend from the mountains of Virginia and North Carolina clear across the State of Tennessee, touch the corners of Georgia, Alabama, and Mississippi, and extending north across the State of Tennessee and across the corner of Kentucky to the Ohio River. The Tennessee Valley proper comprises nearly 41,000 square miles and has a population of just a little over 2,000,000. The Tennessee River is, of course, the basis of the Tennessee Valley Authority and every activity springing therefrom. The Tennessee River is a most unusual river in that it runs in three general directions. Its course is steep and tortuous as it ripples down from the mountains of Virginia and North Carolina, and is slow and placid as it wends its way lazily across some of the level lands of Alabama and Mississippi. And its abrupt turn northward is unusual, for only a few miles westward the mighty Mississippi takes its course in a completely opposite direction. The Tennessee River attracted the attention of pioneers because of the many peculiarities of its course. Swift shoals and swift currents mark its course in many places. Because of these physical peculiarities, navigation on the Tennessee River has always been very limited. The Federal Government, through the Army engineers, has given this river much study. The population along this river is not very dense. Probably 80 percent of the population is located on the upper half of the river, the principal cities being Knoxville and Chattanooga. The lower half of the river runs through sparsely settled territory.

The Federal Government has from its establishment had full control over the navigable rivers of the Nation. It is generally considered that there is something in the Constitution which specifically grants this power to the Federal Government. This is not the case. There is no direct mention of navigation in the Constitution. The Government has taken its control of navigable streams through that section of the Constitution which gives to Congress the power "to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States and with Indian tribes" and that section which provides that "Congress shall have power to provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States." Congress has assigned the responsibility of the exercise of physical authority over navigable rivers to the War Department which in turn has assigned it to the Army engineers. Nowhere in the Constitution is the authority given to the Federal Government to exercise control of the rivers except as an aid to commerce and except as a means of national defense. Nowhere in the Constitution is the right given to the Federal Government to engage primarily in the power business. I grant that the Supreme Court has held that the Federal Government may dispose of power which is created by reason of improvements which the Federal Government has a legal right to make as such aid to navigation or to national defense or to flood control. The Supreme Court has not yet decided that the Federal Government may enter primarily into the power business.

More than a hundred years ago the Federal Government exercised jurisdiction over the Tennessee River. Very little improvement, however, was made on this river until after the Civil War. When the great Muscle Shoals project was begun the Federal Government had already expended considerable sums of money by way of improvements for the benefit of navigation. The Riverton Lock, about 225 miles from the mouth of the river, had been constructed, also extensive developments had been made by way of canals around some of the most difficult shoals. These canals were used for many years before the construction of the gigantic improvements at Muscle Shoals. By reason of these improvements more than 250 miles of the river channel could be navigated with light barges.

By reason of the great World War it developed that the United States should provide itself more amply with facilities for the manufacture of munitions of war. It appeared especially desirable that the Government should provide itself with facilities to manufacture chemicals and to be prepared for emergencies. The Wilson Dam was built at Muscle Shoals at a cost to the Government of over $50,000,000. Near Wilson Dam preparation was made for the manufacture of nitrates and chemicals on a very extensive scale. Approximately $75,000,000 was spend in improvements of this kind. Large towns sprang up in the Muscle Shoals territory. By the time these great improvements had been made, representing an expenditure of many millions of dollars, the war was over and the American people found themselves in the paths of peace. An effort was made to manufacture fertilizer, but the whole project was so colossal that it gradually fell into disuse like many other gigantic projects that had been established during those stressful years. The great dam at Muscle Shoals is yet the king of all of the dams in the Tennessee Valley program. While it has a great capacity for the production of electricity it has never been pressed to its full capacity because there is yet room for several turbines to be installed which would greatly increase its capacity.

What to do with the great improvements at Muscle Shoals was a question that worried Congress through several administrations. Mr. Coolidge and Mr. Hoover rejected all plans that carried with them provisions that would put these great improvements into the production of power in competition with private industry. They were supported in this position by the Congress of the United States. Finally Mr. Henry Ford made the Government a proposition to pay $5,000,000 for the nitrate plant and offered to lease the dam and power activities from the Government for 100 years. His proposition at one time was accepted by the House of Representatives but the same was not accepted by the Senate. It is quite probable that our country would have been better off financially if we had turned over all of these Muscle Shoals activities to Mr. Ford or someone else and would have given them a bonus to take them off our hands.

At that time the public mind was well set that any program that would provide for the improvement of the Tennessee River must be along constitutional lines. The Army engineers were requested to make a survey, which they did, and reported to the Seventy-first Congress by a document known as House Document No. 328. This is probably the most comprehensive study ever made of the Tennessee River and the Tennessee Valley and all of their activities. Through this document the Army engineers made recommendations to the Congress for the improvement of this river. They followed the same course as they had followed in improving the great Ohio River from its source to its mouth. They followed the same course that they had followed with the improvement of the Mississippi and other great rivers of the Nation. To my mind their recommendations still stand as the most feasible and most sensible recommendation for the improvement of the Tennessee River that has ever been made. Congress itself, in the Rivers and Harbors Act of July 1930, authorized the improvement of the Tennessee River for navigation so as to provide a 9-foot channel from Paducah to Knoxville, and in taking this action the Congress followed the judgment of the Army engineers. If this plan had been carried through we would have been saved this tremendous expenditure of money that may soon prove to be a national calamity.

They recommended the construction of 32 low dams with locks that were sufficient, and more sufficient in many cases, than the present expensive high dams later constructed in the Tennessee River by the T. V. A. These 32 low dams would have provided a 9-foot stage for the Tennessee River from its mouth near Paducah over 600 miles to Knoxville, Tenn. It would have provided for larger and wider locks in the dams than are now provided in some of the large dams in the Tennessee. All of this improvement would have been the standard improvement employed in providing for navigation in the Ohio. All of this improvement could have been done for the sum of $75,000,000.

If this plan had been followed the Tennessee would have been navigable long before this time, and hundreds of thousands of acres of valuable bottom land would still be tillable by the farmers and would be carrying its former burden of taxation for the benefit of the States in which it is located. No proof has been produced in any of the exhaustive hearings of the committee which has been investigating the activities of the T. V. A. that will refute the statement that more complete and more satisfactory navigation facilities could have been provided for the Tennessee for the sum of $75,000,000 than will be provided when nearly $700,000,000 shall have been expended. Why should the steep and treacherous Tennessee River be furnished with navigation facilities that were not standard and were not proved when the other facilities had been tested and proved for many years by the river traffic on the Ohio? The construction of large dams means the impounding behind these dams of great lakes of water. Deep, wide pools of water raise navigation problems that are not common to smaller and more shallow pools. There is no question but that the barges that now ply the Ohio will not be able to ply these big, deep, treacherous lakes in periods of storm and high waves. Beyond any question, Maj. Rufus W. Putnam, a West Point graduate and a former member of the Army engineers, was the most capable navigation expert to testify before the Tennessee Valley Authority Investigating Committee. He says in his statement:

After making a thorough study of the T. V. A. unified plan it is my belief that the T. V. A. have spent and are spending many millions more than is justifiable or required for a satisfactory navigation project on the Tennessee River. In fact, the T. V. A. development in dams, reservoirs, and power-generating facilities (excluding Wilson Dam) will cost some $400,000,000 in excess of that of a satisfactory project constructed solely for the benefit of navigation.

Further in his statement Major Putnam says:

With the total proposed expenditure of about $520,000,000 for the T. V. A. unified program (excluding transmission), a 9-foot channel will be made available for the 650-mile length of the Tennessee River. By way of comparison, with an expenditure of about $650,000,000 the War Department will have completed a 9-foot channel in the Mississippi River from the Gulf of Mexico to Minneapolis, the Illinois Waterway to Chicago, the entire length of the Ohio River, and that portion of the Missouri River lying below Kansas City—a total of 3,500 miles of inland waterway.

For navigation purposes the low dams have many advantages over the high dams. Some of these high dams provide for such tremendously high lifts as to render the same clear beyond the recommendations of safe engineering. Major Putnam expresses his opinion and says that a program such as that provided by the T. V. A.—

Leads me to the general conclusion that the program does not have as its primary objective the benefit of navigation. Rather, this T. V. A. project takes on the aspect of a project undertaken by a power company to construct power dams and reservoirs on a navigable stream.

Major Putnam expresses the opinion of every practical river man in the country. I challenge anyone to come forward with any other proof except through the persons biased by reason of employment with the T. V. A. or some other similar reason.

The Tennessee Valley program not only rides over the recommendation of practically all experienced engineers, but in carrying out their ruthless program for power, both political and electrical, they destroyed many valuable improvements that the Government had already made and paid for in the Tennessee Valley. The low-dam plan of navigation, with its larger locks and its minimum of danger, would encourage river transportation. It is well known that river transportation has not increased as the advocates of navigation facilities had hoped. If the river transportation agencies must provide themselves with different equipment to come into the Tennessee River, the chances are that they will not come. It would be a difficult task to get them to come with the low dams and the large locks, which will enable them to navigate longer tows through with much larger cargoes than they can haul through the high and more dangerous dams.

Major Putnam states emphatically that the low-dam projects sufficient to provide a 9-foot stage to Knoxville would cost in the neighborhood of $75,000,000. This would be a saving of nearly $400,000,000 against the T. V. A. plan.

The traffic on the Tennessee River up to this time offers practically no hope for the future. It is little short of a joke. About 82 percent of the local traffic has consisted of sand and gravel in the vicinity of Chattanooga and Knoxville, and out of the remainder 9 or 10 percent consists of a few rafts of poles and crossties being occasionally floated down the river. Practically all of the burden of the river at this time consists of shipments for the construction of the dams.

The T. V. A. improvements must justify themselves constitutionally from the standpoint of navigation, national defense, or flood control.

There is a well-recognized principle among hydraulic engineers that flood control and power are incompatible. I can show you on this map the reason. Here is the highest dam in the whole territory. That is Norris Dam. It is nearly 200 feet high. Back of Norris Dam, of course, there is no navigation. There are no locks in the dam and of course it cannot be navigated.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I will yield because the gentleman is such a good fellow.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman says the only constitutional ground we have for development of power is flood control and navigation. As a matter of fact, they are both implied powers, just as the right to develop water power is implied.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman probably did not hear me say that. I said they are both implied powers, but they are implied by innumerable court decisions. But there is no court decision anywhere which says that the Government can primarily enter into the power business.

Mr. RANKIN. But the Supreme Court of the United States in the Ashwander case said that the water power in those streams was property belonging to the Federal Government. Therefore they had a right to develop it and sell it.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. But they are not selling water power here. They are selling electric power.

Mr. RANKIN. They said "electric power."

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. No.

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, yes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I beg your pardon.

Mr. RANKIN. The court in the Ashwander case was talking about electric power.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. No. The gentleman stated it correctly in the first place when he said water power. The water power belongs to the Government, but the electric power cannot belong to the Government unless the Government makes it. God Almighty made the water power and it belongs to the Government. The Ashwander case is a simple case. The gentleman and I cannot disagree about that. That case holds that because electric power was being manufactured at the Wilson Dam, and there was surplus power left over there, the Government had the right to dispose of it just as it does at the Boulder Dam; just as it does anywhere else. Boulder Dam is not primarily a power dam, although in effect it is one of the greatest power dams in the world. Primarily it is not a power dam, because Boulder Dam is not two-thirds full yet. Boulder Dam is a flood-control dam; it is an irrigation dam. There is no question about that.

The decision in the Ashwander case was that inasmuch as the Government had this power available, it would not be expected that the power would be allowed to go to waste, but that the Government should have a right to sell this power; and the Government did sell the power. That power was created by a dam built for national defense.

Let us have no more argument about that.

Mr. RANKIN. All right, but I ask the gentleman where the Government got any constitutional right to build dams for irrigation on private property? These powers are all implied. It is not a question of whether it is water power or electric power; it has the right to control the power of these navigable streams.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. That is disposed of by saying that no court yet has made such a finding.

Now, let us get back to flood control.

Probably the best flood expert to testify before the T. V. A. Investigating Committee was Mr. Ford Kurtz. Mr. Kurtz is a nationally known flood expert and is recognized as one of America's great flood engineers. In the first page of his statement to the committee he says:

That even upon completion of all of the 11 dams of the unified plan recommended to the Congress the T. V. A. will not obtain adequate flood control on the Tennessee River and its tributaries; that the T. V. A. could have obtained adequate flood control on the Tennessee River and its tributaries for $81,133,600—a small fraction of the $520,960,000 which T. V. A. unified plan will cost; that the T. V. A. unified plan violates basic principles of flood-control design; and that the T. V. A. dams are not primarily flood-control dams at all, but are primarily power dams and as such do not give adequate flood-control protection to the Tennessee Valley.

Further Mr. Kurtz states:

I further found that the annual cost of operation and maintenance of the works of my recommended flood-control system would be only $400,000, as contrasted with an estimated total annual operation and maintenance expense of $3,257,110 for the works of the T. V. A. unified plan, based upon official T. V. A. statements.

Further Mr. Kurtz sets forth most cogently that his proposed flood-control program would render far more efficient flood control than the mixed program of the T. V. A. planned primarily for the production of power with flood control only as an incident. In his discussions Mr. Kurtz shows the fallacy of constructing the gigantic Norris Dam which has practically no flood-control capacity whatever, but has great power potentialities. The dam that Mr. Kurtz would construct where Norris Dam is located, would be one built for flood control only. The result would be that Chattanooga would receive the maximum of flood control and at the same time it would not have been necessary to have purchased the thousands and thousands of acres of land that were purchased to be inundated by the waters of great Norris Lake. The Norris Lake is a thing of beauty, but its utility aside from power is of no value except that upon its peaceful bosom ply the yachts and motorboats of the sporting people of the Nation who can afford such luxuries and who receive them at the expense of small-business men whose backs are bent to the breaking point by the burden of taxation. Mr. Kurtz claims that he could have constructed at the site of Norris Dam for $8,000,000 a dam that would have impounded 1,000,312 acre-feet of storage water, which is more than that impounded by the Norris Dam at a cost of $36,000,000. He is supported in his testimony by statements of the United States Bureau of Reclamation. Mr. Kurtz in his plan of flood control has sought to protect the populous sections in the central reaches of the river where about 80 percent of the population is located. Mr. Kurtz in contrasting the volume of the flood water which his plan will withhold as against the flood value of the T. V. A. program, submits figures to show that his system will provide a dependable flood storage of 6,024,000 acre-feet as contrasted with 620,000 acre-feet of the T. V. A.

When we were down in Tennessee making our investigation of the T. V. A., we of the minority talked a lot about taxes. Nobody down there, of course, paid much attention to us because they were getting this seven or eight hundred million dollars free. Certainly they are for the T. V. A. down there. But just as soon as we had gone, what took place? Why, the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee introduced a bill in Congress asking the United States to refund to the State of Tennessee three or four million dollars for taxes that Tennessee did not get because the Federal Government took about 1,000,000 acres of its fine land off the tax duplicate. This Tennessee Congressman is a wonderful fellow, one of the finest men in Congress, and everybody would recognize him at once were I to mention his name—but when he made this call for help from the Federal Government they heard it way over yonder in North Carolina, and another fine Congressman introduced a bill asking the United States of America to refund to North Carolina taxes that she had lost. Down in Georgia they also seem to have heard the call, but over in Alabama—I do not know whether the Speaker of the House or any of the distinguished Congressmen from that State have heard the call, or whether over in Mississippi they have heard the call. I do not know whether the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi, who is never bashful about electric power, has introduced a bill for this purpose or not. If he has not, it is because he has not yet heard the call. He will be introducing a bill asking us to make a refund.

No, Mr. Speaker, I am not jesting, this is not a joke. There is a grave situation in this tax matter. Congress voted to set up this gigantic octopus and it marches right across these States. It knows no State lines. It knows no State boundaries. It fears no legislature, city council, or banking institution, clothed, as the President said it should be, with the cloak of government, yet having the flexibility of a corporation that the gentleman despises so thoroughly it moves about without regard to anybody or anything. The President said it would be a majestic arm of the Government. It can defy the States because it is part of the Government. At the same time it can steal around in the night like the most corrupt corporation in the land, because it is flexible. It can come and go.

Here is the point I want to bring out. This great octopus that is endangering the very perpetuity of the States down there is growing. The people do not know it yet. They take this organization to themselves because they get great sums of money for nothing, but the time will come when there will be a reckoning over this taxation problem. How can we in Congress give to this Congressman from Tennessee a certain refund? How can we give to this Congressman from North Carolina a certain refund? Who is going to determine what each shall have? Why did they not think about that when we were telling them it was an improper invasion of their rights? We told them it would become a gigantic operation which would not stay within State boundaries. Out in the western country they have anticipated this kind of a situation. I understand out there they have guarded themselves against it; but down here they were so anxious to receive this money they have thrown discretion to the winds. But the day of accounting is with us now, and we are going to have to do something about it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. May I call the attention of the gentleman to a most extraordinary statement made by Under Secretary of the Treasury Hanes at the Indianapolis Bankers' Association the other day on this very point, in which he virtually showed that the States have already sold their birthright to the Federal Government? The Assistant Secretary of the Treasury is now putting that out to us. He has it in his speeches.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes; that is a sad fact. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. SPARKMAN. With reference to the mention of the various bills relating to these refunds, I believe if the gentleman will examine those bills he will find that they simply ask that the tax levied in the very beginning on the sales from T. V. A. be reallocated so that all the States can share in it, not only Alabama and Tennessee, and it does not call for any additional tax refund.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman overlooks the fact that in the original T. V. A. Act there was a provision that 5 percent of the gross sales from the dams in Tennessee be paid to the State of Tennessee and 5 percent of the gross sales in Alabama be paid to the State of Alabama. As I understand it, this is merely a movement to reallocate those funds.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Here is the proposition, and we can get to it very quickly. When the T. V. A. has discovered it could not buy these competing lines as it has been advertising for a long time it could do, it was decided to have the Norris bill introduced which would enable the T. V. A. to purchase the Tennessee Power & Electric Co. I understand now that the bill is to be amended so that the tax figure be increased from 5 percent to 10 percent. That shows there is needed a 100 percent increase in taxes and that the T. V. A. is going to have to pay it out of its receipts—that means the Government will have to pay it.

They have already sent all over the world this great yardstick idea that they have been talking so much about. They have planted that idea every place they possibly could. There is much fallacy to that yardstick. I stated at one time it was worse than a joke. I stated it was worse than a fraud and it has proven itself to be worse than a fraud. They said that a 5-percent tax rate would be proper, but now they come and say that this is not enough. They have not one-half of the dams finished. They have not spent half the money they will eventually spend. Yet they say they have got to have 10 percent out of the receipts to meet taxes. Who knows how much it will be eventually?

Would it be fair to give Tennessee the tax out of the proceeds of its dams and Alabama the tax out of the proceeds of its dams? What would they do about some State which has lost much of its fine taxable land yet has no dam located within its confines? This tax problem is giving them grave concern. The State authorities and the legislatures of the States are greatly agitated and the newspapers are giving the matter big headlines.

The point I make is you cannot fix a fair, honest allocation of taxes because the man who has a little grist mill far up at the head of a creek is as much entitled to a reduction as the man who has a big grist mill over here near the dam. Each one of them is entitled to be reimbursed for what he has lost if others in the same condition are entitled to it. You cannot handle this tax allocation. Why? Because the Government has gone into a business it has no right being in. It has gone into the power business. If it had stayed in navigation, it would only have to stay on the river and within certain boundaries. If it had stayed in flood control it would only have to stay on the river. But it has gone over the hills and hollows to many places. Thousands upon thousands of dollars are being spent to sell the people on the T. V. A.; to show them how to buy fly swatters, how to buy all kinds of crazy doodads they had never seen before. I know they have done this because I have never seen some of them and I come from one of the greatest States in the Union so far as electricity is concerned.

Mr. RANKIN. That is what the T. V. A. has done for the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. This program of the T. V. A. to sell the farmers is absolutely senseless, silly, and useless.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. The 5- or 10-percent provision in the bill does not benefit the community that actually suffers. That is the counties. It goes into the Treasury. This money is not allocated back to the counties that really suffer. I understand the present T. V. A. recognized the justice of assuming the loss in taxes that these counties have suffered and they intend to work out a formula whereby these counties will be paid.

Mr. RANKIN. And it will be paid by the power consumers who buy this power.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Yes; of course, it ought to be.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. That is all by the board. The proposition is that the people have awakened to the fact the T. V. A. has taken out of taxation a great deal of land. How much land do you suppose the T. V. A. owns outright down there? It owns over a million acres, and this land has cost the T. V. A. over $50,000,000—just the land alone. How much of this was good land? Well, it was the best land in the State. The best land in the State for agricultural purposes has been taken; there is no question about that.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. I should like to ask the gentleman if there is anything to a remark I read recently that the T. V. A. waters 5 States and drains 48?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes; that is very appropriate. I know that is a fact. And the draining must stop. [Applause.]

Although it was a well-established national policy that the Government should not itself engage in competition with any legitimate enterprise, and although it had been a well-recognized national policy that the National Government in its control over rivers should confine this work purely within well-defined constitutional limitations, and although up to 1933 these plans and programs had been adhered to by all Presidents, regardless of political parties, still the people were due to a rude awakening when the New Deal began to put forth its program. Those of us who were in Congress then well remember the strange manipulations that were carried on under the hush of emergency. We Republicans, wishing to encourage rather than impede, gave our passive support to some of the New Deal philosophies as they were rapidly forged by the brain trusters and branded with peculiar alphabetical combinations. We remember the N. E. A., meaning the National Economy Act; we remember the N. R. A. and its notorious brother the A. A. A. At that time we did not appreciate that all of these things were a part of a well thought-out centralization program that had been prearranged. It is now plain to us of the small vision that at that time their plea for support because of an emergency was only an opiate to lull us into a sense of patriotic cooperation and away from the dangers that were threatening. On March 9 the President convened Congress in special session. On April 10, after numerous other messages had been sent to the Congress, the President sent a message which today he probably would not send even to his most supine followers. He says:

> I therefore suggest to the Congress legislation to create a Tennessee Valley Authority—a corporation clothed with the power of government, but possessed of the flexibility and initiative of a private enterprise.

In other words, the President proposed to Congress that there should be set up a corporation clothed with the power of the Government. That means, of course, all necessary powers of the Government. That means sufficient power to override the States through which this gigantic octopus should move with omnipotent tread. He proposed to give to this Authority more than the sovereign State of Tennessee enjoyed and more than the combined sovereignty of the seven States through which it operated enjoyed. He says that this great New Deal monstrosity should move with the power of government but with the flexibility and initiative of a private enterprise.

In other words, it should be a perfect Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde. It should be the Federal Government when the States might want to tax it. It should be a private corporation when it seeks to escape from the rigid control which the Federal Government must have over such activities. In other words, it should be a new creature created not in the image of anything that had heretofore been created, and not in the image of truth and honesty and patriotism. It should be hydra-headed and run in every direction at once. It should have many legs so that it could assume any position and any posture at any time and in any place that would appear most desirable to those in charge of it. Its management should be trusted only with those who had been selected with the greatest care. No one should be permitted within the inner circles of its management who had not first proved his entire fitness by a solemn profession of a belief in the feasibility and wisdom of the plan. The exact language of the act is:

> All members of the Board shall be persons who profess a belief in the feasibility and wisdom of this act.

With the construction of Wilson Dam and the lack of need for munitions for national defense and with the failure of the nitrate plants, the whole project became the subject of much public discussion. The money had been spent just as millions upon millions had been spent in Army camps and munitions factories such as those at Nitro, W. Va., and many other places. Mr. Coolidge refused to turn Muscle Shoals into a national power plant to oppose legitimate investment. Mr. Hoover followed the same course. The majority of the Congressmen, both Republicans and Democrats, shared the same views.

But on March 4, 1933, a new administration came into power. This bill establishing the T. V. A. was introduced about the 10th day of April 1933.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 15 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DELANEY). The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] is entitled to recognition to address the House at this time. Is this request agreeable to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I shall be very pleased to have the gentleman's time extended.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I thank the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I was saying that the bill was introduced about the 10th day of April 1933.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman state to which bill he refers? Is it the Senate bill?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. No; I refer to the bill that was introduced in the House.

Mr. RANKIN. That is not the bill that became law, if the gentleman is referring to the bill that was introduced by Mr. McSWAIN. The bill that was introduced in the Senate by Senator NORRIS and in the House by me became law. It was a different bill entirely.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. It is of very small importance anyway. I am only trying to show with what speed this momentous legislation was passed.

The President sent his message to Congress on the 10th day of April, and the bill was passed within a month. You know, we Republicans acted magnificently in those days. We responded because the urge was that we should do the best we could to uphold the hands of the President, and we did that. Now, I wish we had not been so blind; I wish we had had a little more vision. We passed that bill.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman from Ohio did not follow that course. He did not vote for it.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. No; I know I did not vote for it—that is one thing I shall never have to answer for—but some people did, and now a lot of them wish they had not voted for it.

Mr. SECCOMBE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. SECCOMBE. Under these power rates, is it not a fact that down there in the valley they have been using electric manure spreaders, didy laundries, and things of that sort?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes; they are trying to do all these fancy things, but the people want to spread the manure in the old-fashioned way. [Laughter.] The people are not fooled by these manure spreaders, whether mechanical or animated. The people down there, or at least some of them, are as good spreaders as I know. [Applause.] They are as good as we have in Ohio.

Those were the days when legislative legerdemain was practiced with the greatest of ease. "Must" and "emergency" were the magic words. In a short time the Tennessee Valley Authority was a full-fledged instrumentality of the Government ready to join in the wild race of extravagant money spending. Although this was a Government agency, yet, as the President said, it was to be a flexible one. Indeed it was a flexible one, for it soon wiggled itself into all kinds of contortions under the order of the master, Mr. David Lilienthal.

This bill contained the following preamble:

> That for the purpose of maintaining and operating the properties now owned by the United States in the vicinity of Muscle Shoals, Ala., and in the interest of national defense and for agricultural and industrial development and to improve navigation in the Tennessee River and to control the flood waters in the Tennessee River and the Mississippi River Basins, there is hereby created a body corporation by the name of the Tennessee Valley Authority.

It is plainly to be seen that the draftsman who drew this bill was doing his best to include within its enumerated purposes sufficient statements that, if true, would make the bill constitutional on its face. The preamble states that the bill was in the interest of national defense and navigation and flood control. The word "power" appears nowhere in the opening pages of the bill. Far over in the pages of the bill, after providing that no one should be appointed to membership on the Board without first professing in all humility and meekness and with complete resignation his most fervent "belief in the feasibility and wisdom" of the act, is the language putting the Government in the power business.

Power is given to the Authority—

> To acquire real estate for the construction of dams, reservoirs, transmission lines, powerhouses, and other structures.

From there forward the remaining three-fourths of the pages of the bill are devoted to the production and transmission of power. By this bill the question of the right of the Federal Government to go into the power industry in competition with private industry and private capital is raised. The Government, under the guise of improving navigation and controlling floods, has constructed dams costing at least $400,000,000 more than is necessary, and under the guise of protecting from waste the power produced from these dams, the Government goes into the power business. This is a fraudulent procedure on its face, and cannot be justified in honesty or in ethics. It might be argued that the Supreme Court sustains the power of the T. V. A. to manufacture power as a business. The Supreme Court does not so decide. The Supreme Court holds in the famous Eighteen Power Co. case that the power companies not having franchises which guarantee them the right to operate without competition have no standing to enjoin competition. The Court holds in effect that even though the power companies have and will suffer great damages and loss by reason of the competition of this Government agency they cannot have a standing to complain because their case is one known in law as damnum abseque injuria a damage not consequent upon the violation of any legal right.

A vigorous dissenting opinion is rendered by Justice McReynolds in which Justice Butler concurs. They claim that the power companies do show that they have valuable rights which will suffer irreparable injury by reason of the programs and acts of which they complain. They maintain that the power companies have raised constitutional questions which the Court should consider and decide.

The T. V. A. has been unconstitutional from its very beginning. In an effort to foist itself upon the people with this illegitimate background, it has been dishonest in its purpose. Encouraged by its capacity to flout the law, it has become the most blatant and most arrogant activity of the Government. Already it spends almost as much as some of the most essential departments of the Government. It stalks from State to State as an uncontrolled giant paying heed neither to law nor to government. It is beyond reach of the court or legislature. It knows not the responsibility that comes to the average corporation when it comes to making up a pay roll. The T. V. A. draws upon Uncle Sam. The T. V. A. knows nothing of the insatiable nature of accumulating interest. It has no fears of the enemy of all mankind in all generations—the ever-present tax collector. It knows that it is clothed with the power and majesty of Government and it also knows that it can move about with the irresponsible flexibility of a thief in the night.

For instance, the T. V. A. Act especially provides that the Comptroller General shall audit the transactions of the T. V. A. at such times as he shall determine. Believe it or not, our investigation disclosed the fact that the General Accounting Office had failed to audit the books of the T. V. A. since 1934. The reasons assigned was the recalcitrant attitude of this New Deal child who is clothed with the majesty of government. Not until the minority members of the investigating committee developed this appalling state of affairs from the accounting standpoint were we able to get the facts. Although many millions of dollars in exceptions have been made by the General Accounting Office to the accounting activities of the T. V. A., and although many of these have been explained away, still several million dollars remain unexplained.

The T. V. A. law specifically relieves this agency from the provision of the civil-service law and makes it an organization unto itself in that respect. This opens the door to jealousies and favoritisms beyond belief, all to the disadvantage of the administration of the act. The T. V. A. is wonderfully and fearfully put together. With its great organization of 14,000 employees, it is virtually in political and social control of the activities of the States through which it operates. It has behind it what appears to be the unlimited capacity of the Federal Government to go into debt. Its hundreds of automobiles fly over the roads of these seven States, piling up thousands upon thousands of miles in a ceaseless and useless game of investigators investigating each other. The members of the Board at the time of the hearings in Knoxville came into the courtroom supported by a more elaborate retinue than King Solomon had in all his glory. Department heads and assistant department heads, chiefs and assistant chiefs, and secretaries and assistant secretaries without number, world without end, spent their time and energy in attempting to justify the T. V. A. and its existence. Practically everything that is done by the T. V. A. official force is done with the view of its carrying favorable publicity.

It was against this glittering, unnatural showmanship that Dr. Morgan complained so bitterly. He demanded honesty of purpose and candor of conversation. Instead of tearing off this mask of insincerity as he should have done, the general counsel of the investigating committee fell into a companionship with the Tennessee Valley Authority higher-ups. This seriously nullified his usefulness as an investigator. Soon it became evident to even the casual observer that probably the best and most ardent advocates the T. V. A. had in the courtroom procedure was the counsel for the investigating committee and his assistants. The record does not disclose one single instance where the chief counsel for the committee brought forth one single shred of evidence that reflected upon the activities of the T. V. A. leaders. The investigating proceedings were frequently enlivened by sparks that sent off verbal conflagrations, which occasionally furnished considerable heat and some light to the committee as it made its unsteady march through the intricacies of this investigation. There is little wonder that the majority report is free from any suggestion as to how Congress might curb the activities of this outlaw organization. The majority report fails to make any suggestion with reference to the expenditures of this, the most profligate activity of the Government.

The highlights of the investigation were reached by reason of the failure of the general counsel of the committee to conduct a vigorous, fair, and aboveboard investigation. From the beginning it was evident that there was some understanding between the general counsel for the committee and the higher-ups in the T. V. A. organization as to how the investigation should be carried on.

For instance, it developed from the very beginning that the General Counsel and the counsel for the T. V. A. had an arrangement whereby any employee of the T. V. A., before he could make any statement with reference to T. V. A., must first submit himself to close examination by the counsel for the investigating committee with the knowledge, if not in the immediate presence, of some representative of the T. V. A. This was a star-chamber practice that would rank with the days of the Spanish Inquisition. This practice was brought out upon the examination of one Mr. Hoffman, who was assistant to Mr. Fly, who was the secretary of the Board of Directors. Mr. Hoffman showed signs of wanting to tell the whole truth, which was a very refreshing change from the usual poll-parrot recitations by the witnesses called. I took him up for cross-examination. He unburdened his soul and told of the numerous changes that he had been ordered to make in the minutes of the directors' meetings by his immediate superiors, and he told of many other irregularities. This revelation threw consternation into the T. V. A. camp and caused the chief counsel of the committee to threaten to resign his position. On that day 14,000 American citizens, working under a mean system of slavery, were freed and again restored to their right of free speech. I had the honor of writing the resolution which the committee adopted unanimously and which was to be the emancipation proclamation of these employees. Many of these employees are high-class and highly qualified individuals. They resented these high-handed procedures. As proof that the high-ups still feel that they should be permitted to carry on after this fashion, one needs only to cite the fact that Mr. Hoffman, who opened up this disgraceful situation, soon lost his job and was put out upon the street with the millions of those that we now call the unemployed.

These are the tactics against which Dr. Arthur Morgan rebelled. This is the kind of dishonesty and reprehensible conduct that he complained against publicly. This sort of conduct breeds a dangerous spirit among the employees. Everywhere it was evident that the employees fortify themselves against their fellow employees by making copies of records so as to protect themselves at all times.

This institution also from its very nature finds itself engaged in the political and social and financial activities of every community. It must deal with mayors and city counsels and consequently it feels free to engage in contests so as to elect to these positions those who are known to favor it and its policies. It extends those activities to the election of Governors and State officials and county officials. It is especially interested in boards that control transportation and road facilities and especially boards that deal with taxation. While it is clothed with governmental attributes, it is, as the President said, flexible to a very great extent. This institution must change its methods or else it will bring the Government further into disgrace and it will bring down upon its head the wrath of an indignant public.

I shall not have time to do more than touch upon the agricultural developments of the T. V. A. It has bought, or will need to buy, a total of at least 1,000,000 acres of land at a price of $50,000,000. Most of this land was good bottom land, that now has been inundated to provide for the vast lakes of the T. V. A. The taking of these lands has raised a serious tax question which is now confronting the legislature of some of the States. This complaint is being stifled by the T. V. A., who fear adverse publicity. But it is estimated that the States are losing $7,506,000 from taxes from this institution. This is partly made up of contribution from T. V. A., but the amount of contribution made is only $1,012,-550. There is still a shortage of six and a half million dollars per year.

The agricultural activities are not so much the purchase of land as they are the lending by the Authority of its money and influence in a socialized program for the people whose lands have been taken for lake and recreational purposes and in experimenting with impractical electrical experiments, such as fly killers, community refrigerators, strawberry freezing boats and other similar foolishness. Likewise the experimentation in the field of fertilizer manufacturing is expensive. It has already lost the Government the sum of $6,366,000. Last year it lost the Government $186,000. Dr. Curtis, the guiding genius of the fertilizing program, quit his position as soon as the Investigating Committee made its investigation in that territory. Our committee brought out the facts with reference to the purchase by the Government of a tract of phosphate land for $678,450 from the International Agricultural Corporation; and that this corporation had but a short time before purchased this same land for the sum of $148,378. Why the T. V. A. should give this organization a profit of $530,081 is unexplainable when the T. V. A. was believed to be only on a program of experimentation and when it already owned enough phosphate to run it for at least 30 years.

As proof that the manufacture of power was the real purpose of the T. V. A. it can be seen from the speed with which the new dealers jumped into action on the power matter and the New Deal guidance of the Board by Lilienthal. The Board organized on June 16, 1933, which was a few days after the bill passed. Dr. A. E. Morgan was the first man appointed and naturally took the leading part in getting the Board together for organization. By August 3, however, Mr.

Lilienthal had already worked a division in the management of the affairs of the Board by acting secretly with Dr. Harcourt Morgan. They divided up the authority without consulting Dr. A. E. Morgan. They gave Dr. A. E. Morgan the task of building the dams. Of course, they knew nothing about this important phase of the work. Dr. Harcourt Morgan took the land purchasing division and the fertilizer manufacturing program and other similar activities. Mr. Lilienthal took over the main program—the power program and all legal departments. Is there any wonder that Dr. A. E. Morgan suspicioned what was happening when in less than 2 months Lilienthal had practically established himself as a dictator. It is one of the mysteries of this whole investigation as to how the majority of the investigating committee could, in their report, uphold the activities of Lilienthal and condemn the activities of Dr. A. E. Morgan, against whom there has never been shown even a shadow of suspicion. He is the only member of the Board that has ever accomplished anything worth while in his own right and by his own ability. He is acknowledged to be a great engineer. All who know him recognize his moral worth. The only fault that I have ever been able to find with him is that he "professed his belief in the feasibility and wisdom of the act" before he took his oath of office. He must have changed his mind many times especially as to the wisdom of the act as it has been administered.

Within 2 months after the formation of the Authority and before any but the Wilson Dam was built, Lilienthal was head over heels in the power business. Logically, if this was to be a navigation and flood-control project, these matters would have been put foremost. But Lilienthal proceeded to make contracts for the sale of power long before he was able to deliver as much as he was wishing to contract. Dr. A. E. Morgan believed that the sale of power should be with regard to the existing fields already occupied by private industry, but Lilienthal believed that the policy of the T. V. A. should be to proceed immediately to set up competition to all private utility corporations.

This difference of opinion was brought to the President for a decision and the President sustained Dr. A. E. Morgan. But the wide difference between the character and beliefs of these two men was not allayed and Lilienthal with characteristic stealth proceeded with his game until out of self-respect Dr. Morgan found it impossible to stand by and watch what he termed:

1. Inaccurate and misrepresentative reports to the President, the Congress, and the public.
2. Mismanagement of the power program.
3. Lack of candor in statements to the Congress and the public concerning the power program.
4. Improper and misleading accounting, reporting, and publicity in reference to the yardstick program.
5. Collusion, conspiracy, and mismanagement in administration.
6. Subservience to political and other special interests.

The unbending honesty of Dr. A. E. Morgan did not fit into the program of the T. V. A. The President realized the program must be changed or the personnel of the Board must be changed. The President called the Board together in what was recognized by all fair-minded people as an unfortunate performance. The star-chamber methods employed in that conference were no credit to the Administration. The public was with Dr. Morgan then and it is with him now. The President dismissed Dr. Morgan for "contumacy." Few people realize what this means. It sounds unusual. It is unusual, for in effect it means that he was dismissed because he refused to compel his mind to run along with the mind of the President. In other words, he was dismissed for the same reason that Mr. Humphrey, in the famous Humphrey case, was dismissed. The Supreme Court held that Mr. Humphrey had been improperly dismissed. The courts have not yet decided on the method of dismissal of Dr. Morgan.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Did I not understand the gentleman to say that Dr. Arthur V. Morgan was one of the great engineers of this country?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. And did he not recommend the Gilbertsville Dam as the keystone of the whole proposition?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I do not know. Besides, he would not be normal unless he made a mistake occasionally.

Mr. Lilienthal published his yardstick before he had constructed one single dam. Before he could possibly have known what his cost of power would be.

Mr. RANKIN. But not before Wilson Dam was completed.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. No; of course not. Wilson Dam was built 20 years ago.

Lilienthal announced the rates in September 1933, without consulting the other two members of the Board. At that time he stated that the rates included all costs, when, as a matter of fact, the allocation of costs were not made for many months thereafter. In fact, the first cost allocation was made in 1938. After Lilienthal had made his first announcement of the yardstick rates, he stated that the same were "a little more than a lucky guess." When the final allocation of costs was made to the President in June 1938 by the Financial Political Committee of the T. V. A., appointed to make an allocation of costs, this committee says:

> Every method of allocating the common plant investment necessary involves assumption and estimates, the formulation of which is dependent upon the widely varying opinions of individuals. * * * The problem is one of judgment rather than scientific calculation. The committee's conclusions are, therefore, in the form of a recommended policy based on judgment and not on any one allocation theory.

I have repeatedly stated that the T. V. A. yardstick is a fake. It is worse than a fake—it is a willful fraud put forth to deceive. A yardstick should be a thing of accuracy. Its virtue is its accuracy. A yardstick is not a slide rule. A yardstick should be the same to all people at all times. It is a standard. A slide rule is a rule by which computations are made when different factors are considered. The only practical way by which the T. V. A. rates can be considered as a yardstick would be for the T. V. A. to compute honestly every element in the cost of production and then fix the price at the dams, or, more technically speaking, at the bus bars. This is the system employed at Boulder Dam. But so long as the T. V. A. contracts to retail power and assumes to transmit power on its own private transmission facilities, and to engage in promotional programs and private salesmanship programs, and to engage in municipal elections and all other local activities, it will be impossible for it to fix a yardstick.

Here are some of the reasons why T. V. A. rates cannot be accepted as an honest yardstick:

First. The cost of production cannot be computed accurately because the dams are built with Government money. With the benefit that the Government gets from mass construction and with the benefit that the Government gets from unlimited credit, it would not be fair to private industry if this were not computed. The Government can buy practically every item used in the construction of its dams cheaper than private industry can buy it.

Second. No interest is computed, for the Government is not required to go to the bank and arrange for credit as a private individual would be required to do.

Third. The Government pays no taxes of any kind. A private individual would be required to pay countless kinds of taxes in the construction of the dam. It would have to provide itself with insurance of all kinds to protect its property and its workingmen. It would have to provide itself with franchises and licenses of various kinds and bonds of all kinds and descriptions. It would be required to pay taxes on its improvement, and this tax would be State, local, and Federal.

Fourth. The Government would have the benefit of free legal talent, free postage, and free communication of various kinds.

Fifth. The Government would also have the advantage in that it could arrange its allocation figures between navigation, flood control, and power as it might see fit.

If the Government is to be allowed all these advantages and not reflect the same in its yardstick, then, of course, its yardstick would be less than a 20-inch yardstick.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has again expired.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. An example of how this favoritism and juggling of figures can be employed is easily seen in the figures used by the Allocation Board. Wilson Dam is put in at about $30,000,000 and Wheeler Dam is put in at about $32,000,000. Wilson Dam has a capacity of power production almost three times as great as that at Wheeler Dam. From the power standpoint, there is a great discrepancy between these two figures. This committee on allocation, consisting altogether of T. V. A. officials, made its report, as I have heretofore stated, in June 1938. The T. V. A. Act, amended in 1935, provides specifically "that the Board shall, on or before January 1, 1937, file with Congress a statement of its allocation of the value of all such properties."

In spite of this specific statutory requirement, the Board did not file this report until after the congressional investigating committee had begun its work. I am herewith submitting for the RECORD a few figures showing this allocation as made by the Board.

Purpose	Single-purpose investment	Joint investment		Total investment
		Amount	Percent	Amount	Percent
Flood control	$2,600,000	$15,870,627	25	$18,470,627	20
Navigation	4,075,988	22,218,877	35	26,294,865	28
Power	23,967,177	25,393,002	40	49,360,179	52
Total	30,643,165	63,482,506	100	94,125,671	100

It will be noted that the allocating committee assigns 52 percent of the cost of these dams to power and the other 48 percent to flood control and navigation. It was only to be expected that a committee made up exclusively of high officials in the T. V. A. would find as they have found. Each of these gentlemen testified at great length in the hearings in an effort to support the T. V. A. Those who disagreed with this allocation had very little opportunity to present testimony. But there is some very positive testimony produced by eminent men and all to the effect that this percentage of allocation to power is entirely too small. In this group is included Dr. Arthur E. Morgan.

No yardstick can be accurate that is figured on a statement showing a profit when that statement in fact shows a loss. I shall give you some figures showing the opinion of three men who were considered able men and each of whom testified from his own viewpoint and defended it vigorously.

Dr. A. E. Moreland, of Jackson & Moreland, of Boston, probably the outstanding expert of his kind in the Nation, says from a very exhaustive study made by him, that the Tennessee Valley Authority is bound to lose $10,350,000 per year on its power operation at its present rates. Dr. A. E. Morgan, on the same computation, claims that the T. V. A. will lose $3,156,850 per year. Mr. Krug, one of the T. V. A. engineers, gives as his opinion that the T. V. A. will earn $4,624,775 per year. In these computations, Mr. Moreland figures an allocation of cost amounting to $451,317,773, while Mr. Krug figures the cost allocation as $332,519,156. Mr. Krug figures his profit on the capitalization of $120,000,000 less than does Mr. Moreland. And Mr. Krug forgot to include $6,500,000 per year for taxes. Computation as made by distinguished gentlemen on the loss that T. V. A. has sustained in the years from 1934 to 1938 are interesting in their differences. Mr. Kokler of the T. V. A. estimates that during that period the T. V. A. lost $784,665. He forgets to include what will be reasonable interest amounting to about $5,000,000 and what would be reasonable taxes amounting to $3,500,000. Mr. Morgan computes the loss during those years at $9,446,605, and Thomas A. Panter, chief engineer for the T. V. A. Investigating Committee, computes the loss for that time at $9,525,000.

That it is not possible for the T. V. A. to establish a yardstick that could be used in other sections of the country so long as it seeks to transmit its power directly to the consumer is proven by the testimony by Mr. Krug. In answer to a direct question by me he says:

> The use of a standard, which I think is a better term than yardstick, requires one to take into account differences in circumstances from place to place. * * * I don't contend, and I don't think anybody does that understands the yardstick principle, because the city of Knoxville can charge a certain rate schedule that every other city in the United States can charge exactly that same rate schedule and make money.

I am not now, and have never been, the champion of public utilities. I do not, and never have, owned any stock in any power company, and I am not beholden financially or politically in any way to any power company. I think the power companies have, by their failure to understand that honesty is the best policy in dealing with the public, brought upon themselves a great deal of the condemnation that has visited them in the past few years. While I contend vigorously that the T. V. A. was established from improper economic motives, I have no objection to the Federal Government, where it can legally and constitutionally do so, encouraging low rates of power for the people. But I maintain that this should not be done until every legal remedy has been exhausted to have private industry accomplish the same purpose. What I object to is that the administration should lend itself to a program of a group of well-known public power, socialistically inclined enthusiasts, in an effort to destroy private capital invested by millions of American people in what they thought were perfectly legitimate investments. I have never opposed municipal ownership of electric-light plants, for there the people decide for themselves what they want. If the Federal Government is seeking to make an experiment in the Tennessee Valley, its experiment should be honestly made if it is to be of any value. A dishonest experiment proves nothing but the dishonesty of the experimenter.

The committee investigating the Tennessee Valley Authority were greatly handicapped in that the chief engineer failed to participate in the investigations or in the hearings. He has made a very exhaustive report which he presented to the committee after the hearings had been concluded. If he had so arranged his work as to have participated in the public hearings, I think he could have contributed mightily to solving the problems which the public and the Congress expected this committee to solve.

Senator JAMES J. DAVIS, Representative CHARLES A. WOLVERTON, and I prepared and filed a minority report setting forth our views. We also set forth our recommendations. Our views may or may not be of value as a reader of them might appraise them. But our recommendations, I think, will be of some value for they are reasonable and I am sure, sincerely presented.

In the first place, we recommend that all agricultural activities of the T. V. A. be turned back to the Department of Agriculture, which is far better qualified to take care of this work than is this separate agency of the Government. The T. V. A. has done nothing that the Department of Agriculture could not have done many times better. Its phosphate and fertilizer, as well as its other agriculture programs were greatly beyond and outside a reasonable purview of the law.

Second, we recommend that all dam construction and operation be placed in the hands of the War Department where it belongs. Congress and the Federal Government have the right to control navigable streams and they should continue to hold that right. They should not surrender up that right to any other agency. The War Department, through the Army engineers, is perfectly capable of handling this program. In this way the War Department could employ the dams to their maximum for flood control when flood control was necessary and to their maximum for navigation if any navigation ever presents itself, and for the maximum in power production when power is needed.

Third, we recommend that since the Government has constructed extensive transmission lines and has purchased other transmission lines that it cannot in good faith abandon these programs, but it must employ them to the best advantage consistent with law and proper business procedure. These power facilities should be considered as a private power organization in competition with other power organizations unless the competition can be legally and amicably removed. It will not require a great army of experts and assistants to operate these power facilities. A board of directors consisting of five members could be appointed by the President on a per diem basis. This Board of Directors would have the responsibility of furnishing the policy by which the facilities would be operated. This Board of Directors could employ a general manager, and together they could arrange a plan whereby the organization could be operated to the best interest of all concerned.

It is our belief that this plan suggested by us or some similar plan calling for the separation of these various powers and responsibilities will, in time, undo the great harm that has been done by reason of the building up of this arrogant structure that is neither Federal nor State, and a very poor combination of both.

We should take immediate steps to stop spending money. The $120,000,000 that is to be spent on the Gilbertsville Dam can be saved. The thirty or forty million dollars that is to be spent on the Coulter Shoals Dam and the millions that are to be spent on the Watts bar dam can be saved. Likewise we need not commence the construction of the Fontana Dam.

Mr. Speaker, with all of the fervor and emphasis that I can command I repeat that we must quit spending money. [Applause.]

This Tennessee Valley Authority is an illegitimate child. It was born out of constitutional wedlock. It does not have any more claim upon our finances than thousands of perfectly legitimate industries in the Nation that are floundering in this terrible abyss of depression. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DELANEY). The time of the gentleman from Ohio has again expired.

WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Mexico?

There was no objection.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, in view of the recently reported utterances and representations made by the mayors of several of our great metropolitan cities before the subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations, which is conducting an investigation of Works Progress Administration matters, I feel constrained to direct the attention of this honorable body to conditions that obtain today in the Works Progress Administration.

These chief executives of some of our largest municipalities have stated that the principles of W. P. A. work relief must be continued or thousands in the various cities will again be confronted with the specter of want and privation. They take the position that at this time the Federal Government should not withdraw its work-relief activities. With that position I am in full accord. I believe that we must continue this assistance to the unemployed, but in that continuance I feel that this Congress must take cognizance of the fact that the W. P. A. has departed so far afield from the original fundamental principles established for it that in a great degree it has lost its usefulness as an administrative organization, particularly with regard to construction projects. It is my contention that continuance of these construction projects under the present W. P. A. supervisory set-up can result only in further unjustified and wanton waste of public funds.

Two developments since I last addressed my remarks to this House on this particular subject have served to convince me even more that the Congress can no longer justify its position in legislating to appropriate millions of dollars for construction projects under W. P. A. supervision unless such projects are let by competitive bid.

First, by the negative action of this House on the Taber resolution, we have approved the President's reorganization plan which puts W. P. A. and P. W. A. under one governmental division.

Second, we have been advised by published reports of the hearings before the W. P. A. subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations that expert engineers from the Procurement Division of the Treasury Department testified that construction costs of buildings erected in New York under W. P. A. supervision were twice what they should have been and twice what they would have been had the buildings been constructed under private contract.

In view of the fact that I had made virtually that same statement on the floor of this House and again before the Senate committee conducting hearings on the Byrnes bill, I was naturally interested in the details of the testimony of those two engineering experts.

The revelations made of needless and inexcusable waste caused by the inefficiency and lack of administrative ability on the part of the W. P. A. are exactly what I pointed out to this House in a speech on February 21. Any man in private employment who was responsible for such conditions as these engineers portrayed and proved, would have been fired, without ceremony, instanter. I urge every Member of this House to make a careful study of this testimony and evidence given to the W. P. A. subcommittee before he or she votes another dollar of appropriations for W. P. A. supervised noncontract construction projects.

There may have been some justification for a hastily considered decision on our part in the days when an actual emergency existed and millions of our citizens would face want and privation, even starvation, unless we acted promptly, but that day is past. Now we have the records of 6 years of experience before us and unless we profit by that experience and stop the gaps through which millions of dollars of the public money are wastefully flowing, public opinion will turn upon us in rightful indignation and demand that we be replaced by others who will refuse to permit further this rape of the Nation's Treasury.

Allow me to cite just a couple of instances pointed out by these engineers in their testimony before the committee. The Federal building at the New York World's Fair, they testified, cost 20 cents per cubic foot to construct under contract. The W. P. A. building at the fair, although somewhat inferior in quality of construction to the Federal building, is costing 43½ cents per cubic foot—more than twice as much. Why? Because under W. P. A. supervision the workers were not giving a prevailing day's work for a prevailing day's pay; because W. P. A. supervision was not efficient; because W. P. A. did not demand and get efficient supervision. Because, to put it bluntly, on all these construction projects under W. P. A., it has been my observation, so-called relief work has been about 70-percent relief and 30-percent work.

There is no reason why a man working for the Government under W. P. A. supervision should not deliver a dollar's worth of work for the dollar paid. That is not done, however, because, as I have stated before, the W. P. A. does not have now, and never has had, efficient supervisory personnel. I am not holding the W. P. A. responsible for that condition, because the W. P. A. set-up, as approved by this Congress, was not conducive to efficiency and economy. The fault lies with the Congress. Try as we may we cannot, in all candor, deny our responsibility. We can, however, refuse to contribute further to this particular type of economic delinquency.

This W. P. A. building at the world's fair was to cost about $250,000, so the engineers testified, but the outlay to date has been $544,000. The original plans have been changed several times during construction, they told the committee. Does that indicate efficiency? Would any of us have permitted anything like that if we had been erecting that building? Would that have happened if a contractor under proper supervision had been constructing the building? Most assuredly not. The long and short of the whole matter is that more than a quarter of a million dollars of the people's money were wasted.

One other instance of W. P. A. profligacy is shown in the testimony of these two engineers, who stated, after making a most careful investigation, that a New York school building being constructed by W. P. A. will cost $782,000, and an identical school building built under private contract cost $441,000. In fact, that was the average cost of four or five identical buildings.

Let me quote one statement from the testimony of one of these engineers. He said, and I quote:

> The estimate of labor upon the building under contract is $170,000, and the estimate for labor for the building constructed by the W. P. A. is $446,695.

The labor cost under W. P. A. is two and one-half times that under private contract. In other words, there is a waste in this one project of more than $275,000. And, worst of all, there was no more work done for the public in one case than in the other. In all probability better work was done by skilled craftsmen on the building which cost the least.

There is no need for me to detail a dozen other cases which these engineers presented to the subcommittee. These experts covered various types of construction projects, made a careful investigation, and gave an unbiased report—a report which should give every Member of this House pause, because we are responsible for the conditions which permitted this waste.

How much of the approximately $7,000,000,000 that we have appropriated for W. P. A. during its existence has been wasted through this same sort of inefficiency and lack of administrative ability? I would hesitate to venture a guess, but the Budget for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, breaks down the $1,425,000,000 total as follows: For highways, roads, and streets, $484,500,000; for the construction projects group, $655,500,000; and for educational, professional, and other "white collar" projects, $285,000,000.

Highway, road, and street building is, strictly speaking, construction, but disregarding that phase of construction work, this Budget break-down shows that almost 50 percent of the total is designated for construction projects, such as school buildings and the type of work which these engineers have testified was done in New York at such enormous loss through waste.

Fortunate, indeed, are the American people if they have not already been forced to squander through the W. P. A. at least $2,000,000,000, and, let me remind you again, the Congress is more directly responsible for it than anyone else.

The President has advised us that he expects to save between $15,000,000 and $20,000,000 annually through the reorganization plan he recently submitted and which we have, in effect, approved.

This Congress can effect even a greater saving by refusing to appropriate further money for construction projects until they are removed from the present supervision status and placed under requirements for letting by contract.

The Nation will have more in value received for the money expended, and a Federal Government dollar is worth as much as any other; there will be more and better schoolhouses and other public buildings; there will be just as much employment; but the waste and inefficiency will be eliminated.

To my mind the time has come when we should abandon the misnomer Works Progress Administration and rechristen it the P. R. A.—Public Relief Administration—for that is all it ever has been or ever will be. Let it administer the "white collar" projects, the women's sewing projects, and those other activities where relief, rather than work, is the principal objective.

Most certainly we of the Congress must be convinced by this time, after these years of experience, that administration of relief is in nowise guided by the same fundamentals as is the administration of public works, and the two cannot be successfully blended into one properly functioning organization.

In this matter of reorganization I, for one, would go still further and decentralize the Civilian Conservation Corps, doing away with the top-heavy, expensive administration of the C. C. C. and placing each group under the supervision and full control of the department of the Government which it is serving; C. C. C. grazing and reclamation camps under the Department of the Interior; soil conservation camps under the Department of Agriculture, and in a like manner with all of them. Again the Congress could aid in reducing Government expenditure, and at the same time increase efficiency. That, as I understand it, is the purpose of reorganization.

I do not take the position of a critic of the Civilian Conservation Corps, but I do believe that, in order to make it an effective permanent governmental activity, which it should be, there should be less conflict in supervisory and administrative authority, with the resultant reduction in administrative costs.

But above all, let us demand that every agency of this Government, whether of an emergency nature or of permanent status, require and get a full dollar in work return for every dollar expended. If we are to give relief, and our economic status makes it necessary, let us give that relief as such and not misguide millions of our people into the belief that they should not work for the public money they are paid for working. Better far an outright dole than a widespread petty graft; better far an honest citizen on a relief basis, than a shirker on a pay roll, no matter for what reason, political or otherwise, he may be on that pay roll.

What we do in the future in regard to the W. P. A. is not alone a matter of money; it is a matter of our national morale. A nation financially bankrupt can recover; a nation with shattered morale is doomed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under special order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] is recognized.

THE FAILURE OF OUR NEW DEAL ECONOMIC PROGRAM

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, if I were to ask to speak for an hour on the failure of our New Deal economic program, I could do it without any preparation whatever, because I am as full of that subject as the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] is full of the T. V. A. subject. If I were asked to speak on the subject, the failure of our New Deal economic program, for 15 minutes, I would want several days to prepare it; but I am going to speak on the subject now for 3 minutes. That means that the material has been boiled down and condensed so that every word of it is important and every statement is at least pregnant with meaning.

I offer that condensed, boiled-down statement to you now.

Mr. Speaker, the recent meeting of the United States Chamber of Commerce held in Washington has brought about an economic soul-searching among New Deal leaders. Conference after conference and meeting after meeting have been held at the White House and elsewhere by Government economists from the different departments in a desperate attempt to justify the New Deal program of "recovery through reform," or "abundance through curtailed production."

Mr. Speaker, the per capita yearly income of the United States has fallen during the last 10 years from $653 per person per year to $490 per person per year, while during the same period of time the per capita income in Great Britain has increased from $417 to $507, placing Great Britain ahead of the United States on the basis of per capita income. This significant change in income trends has caused a searchlight to be thrown upon the economic theories that govern these two nations. Great Britain's policy is based upon two fundamental truths, namely, "You must produce before you can have," and "A balanced budget stimulates production." The New Deal policy has been "recovery through reform," artificially stimulated by a "borrowing-spending" program. Results over the past 10 years show conclusively which of these two nations is following a sound economic policy and which nation is not.

Mr. Speaker, we have learned through bitter experience that raising prices by artificial means, such as curtailment of production, decreases national income; also that subsidizing the unemployed lowers the national income instead of raising it, because it means sharing the income. The New Deal economic mistake was epitomized recently by the economic writer, H. B. Elliston, in the following words:

Income is not produced by waving magic wands nor by rubbing Aladdin lamps. Income can be produced or increased only by the Old Deal program of work and sweat. The New Deal's attempt to substitute ethics for economics has failed.

Mr. Speaker, as a result of the constructive suggestions that were made at the recent meeting of the United States Chamber of Commerce, and also as a result of the facts that have been developed at these soul-searching economic conferences, we can begin to hope that proper emphasis will be given from now on by administration leaders to well-established economic principles in their recovery program. We can also hope that hereafter the administration will cease demanding from business cooperation in half-baked, unsound, discredited recovery schemes and will evidence a willingness to cooperate with American business along sound, time-tested, economic lines. In that way we may hope to regain first place among the nations of the world upon a per capita income basis. This can only be accomplished, however, through a program of real cooperation on the part of both Government and business, and real cooperation is not a one-sided arrangement. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and incorporate an article by Hon. Eugene Talmadge, former Governor of the State of Georgia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein House Joint Memorial No. 7 of the Florida Legislature.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under special order heretofore entered, the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, one of the keys to a prosperous condition in the modern industrial world is necessarily to be found in the relationship between money on the one hand and goods and services on the other. As long as you operate your business on the basis of credit it must necessarily be true that a deflation in the amount of money in circulation makes goods worth comparatively less and dollars, including debt dollars, worth more. This encourages foreclosure, the taking over of property by people who deal in money; whereas an increase in the volume of money in circulation, particularly if it be geared to an increase in productive capacity, means an increase in the value of goods and services in terms of money, hence a better chance for the great mass of the people. With these few ideas as a basis I shall try this afternoon to discuss some of the matters that have already been brought to the attention of the House today.

In the first place, I am eager to see the Government cooperate with every earnest American who is seeking a way out of our difficulty. I am deeply impressed, for example, by an article on taxation in the Fortune Magazine for the current month, and by the very large number of tax principles in that article which they call "the area of agreement," where 15 people, well-informed people of every kind of background, have agreed on what seems to me to be a very constructive program and one with which I could, on the whole, go along very well. This is an example of what can be done with a tough problem when everyone honestly tries to work out a solution. But I wonder what the price is for us who look at the thing from the standpoint of the people rather than from the standpoint of the value of the dollar—I wonder what the price is of "cooperating" with—I will not say American business, but with some of the people who at least dominated the Chamber of Commerce convention. I happen to have clipped from the paper the account of the price of that cooperation. It calls for repeal of the wage-hour law, the Silver Purchase Act, the power to issue $3,000,000,000 in money, and the cotton subsidy plan.

It calls for a promise not to enact the Borah-O'Mahoney Federal licensing bill for the overhauling of the Federal tax laws in the interest of business recovery—if I knew what they meant by that, I might be for it—replacement of the W. P. A. with a different relief set-up, revision of the Securities Act to encourage "a broad and free flow of the stock market"—which did not help much in 1929—a drastic change in the Wagner Labor Relations Act, and a sharp curtailment of Government expenditures. The sole question is how much vital, important, necessary social legislation for the protection of the mass of the American people has got to be wiped from the statute books before it will be possible to satisfy those who ask for what is termed "Government cooperation." For my own part, I believe that if a mistake has been made in the last few years it has been that we have not been simple enough, we have not been direct enough, we have not been sure enough about the direction of the policy so that now we are in a position where it is believed by some that most of the social reforms can be destroyed if only enough noise is made about it.

SHALL WE SPEND OUR PEOPLE, OUR LAND, OUR RESOURCES TO MAKE DOLLARS WORTH MORE?

I think the question is largely this: Do we propose to spend people, to spend land, to spend natural resources in order to enhance the value of the dollar, or do we propose to spend money, a large part of which will be returned to the Treasury, in order to save land, in order to save natural resources, in order to see to it that people are actively engaged in work if they cannot find it in any other way?

The T. V. A. has been referred to this afternoon, and I am led to ask certain questions in connection with the discussion. For example, are those who oppose the T. V. A. really against the influence that that enterprise has unquestionably had in raising the standard of living of the people? We frequently hear it said that the T. V. A. has caused people to buy electrical appliances. This is put forth as a criticism of T. V. A., and I cannot understand it. We heard this afternoon criticism of its agricultural program. I believe that anybody who knows anything about our agricultural problem, our soil-conservation problem, will approve the things that have been done.

One of the finest things about the program is that the farmers are not so much "being helped" as they are helping themselves. In 122 counties in the Tennessee watershed farmers have organized conservation associations and are voluntarily applying soil and water conservation methods through them. The T. V. A. furnishes fertilizer for cover crops; the soil of this section of the United States is being revitalized with benefit to this and future generations. Now as to power: Those who oppose T. V. A. must answer the question of what would happen to the potential power resources of this country if they are not developed by some public agency like the United States Government? I am not in favor of taking away from anybody without due compensation anything that is his; but I am in favor of seeing the American people hold on to every single source of electrical energy that remains in this country and to keep it forever as a heritage for their children. [Applause.] I do not see how there could be any question about the right of the United States Government to do a thing of this kind. This power is a gift of God to all the people of the Nation. I do not see how anybody can justify an implied suggestion that instead of having the United States Government do it that he would prefer to see this great enterprise go back into the hands of some private interests; for, after all, one must remember that the power business, like a number of other businesses in this country, is essentially a monopoly enterprise. It cannot be economically justified to develop and distribute power on any other basis. If it is not run on that basis it is utterly wasteful. So either we must have public-power development or we must permit the Power Trust to extend its control over the people's resources and their incomes. I have had some very interesting experiences in this connection. I live in southern California. It happens that the city of Los Angeles has its own bureau of light and power. Rates have been reduced in that city seven times in the last few years. I happen not to live in a section that is served by the bureau of light and power. I live out in the country beyond it, and I have run there a boy's school for a number of years.

We bought electric energy from a private power company at wholesale for 1 cent a kilowatt-hour. Why? Because we have a situation where that power company is right side by side with a public agency in the city of Los Angeles. Therefore, they both get along all right. That to me is an example of the way that the yardstick really functions, and I believe in it.

THE "COST" OF T. V. A.

We hear a lot about all the money that is being spent on the T. V. A. To tell you the truth, it makes me quite irritable, because the fact of the matter is that the cost of the T. V. A., the total expenditure which is properly allocated to power, will be paid back with interest in the course of a short time, and within 60 years the principal cost of all other expenditures of the T. V. A. will be paid back to the Treasury out of the revenues. Revenues will run $20,000,000 annually after the project is completed. No wonder those who are afraid of cheap electricity do not want to let us finish the development.

Another thing that has been said is that we have an enterprise in the T. V. A. that has been "robbing somebody." Well, I do not know how you can interpret it as robbing people when you cut their bill for electric energy in two. I do not see who is getting robbed by a situation of that kind. As a matter of fact, the net result is to put money back into the pockets of the consumers which they otherwise would have to pay out in the form of too large an expenditure for this item, thus permitting them to spend it for other items.

FAIR DISTRIBUTION OF CONSUMER'S DOLLAR

While talking about the central problem of this age, which is the problem of an adequate volume of consuming power in the hands of the people, we must remember that one of the things that needs doing in this connection is to be sure that all industries get their just share of the money spent by the consumers of the Nation.

That is the very nub of the agricultural problem. Agriculture has never received its proper share of the consumer dollar. Certainly it is necessary, therefore, if we can do it, to prevent too much of that consumer's dollar going into the hands of a private monopoly of electric power. T. V. A. helps to prevent this. To my mind, that is the most important fact about this great project.

The T. V. A. is one of the great developments of modern times. It is democracy working out its problem of conservation of resources, both human and natural, in a way that preserves all the best values of our Nation. I wonder whether it really is true that the Republican Party proposes, if by any chance it should come into power at any time in the future, to eliminate that great enterprise from the Nation? I cannot believe that it will.

THE TRICKLE THEORY VERSUS THE SEEPAGE THEORY

As I see it, the difference between various groups of people in this country can pretty will be boiled down to this example: It is the difference between the trickle theory, on the one hand, and the seepage theory on the other. I am against the trickle theory. I am in favor of the seepage theory. The trickle theory which is certainly the one upon which the Republican Party stands holds that if you just get enough money in at the top, make a few people and a comparatively few corporations well enough off, some of it will trickle down to the American people and they will be able to get along. At any rate, if they are not able to get along, their character will be greatly strengthened by the struggle they will have to go through.

The seepage theory, on the other hand, holds that the solution to our problem lies in an increased buying power on the part of the masses of the people—the farmers, the wage earners, the unemployed, in fact all groups of American people; and if that happens, not only will the general welfare be served but the only real key to business prosperity, and prosperity of all kinds, will be found; this has been and must, as I see it, continue to be the position of the Democratic Party. Therefore, if we really want to find what the difficulty is at the present time, I do not think we will have to look very far. Is it not clearly true that whereas there may be minor causes for our slowness in business, if the businessmen of this country knew that there was waiting for their goods a substantial, dependable cash demand on the part of the consumers of this country, we would quickly get an activity in business? Furthermore, I do not believe you can get it in any other way. I do not think capital goods is the answer, for after all, capital goods are only of value when you have the consumers to purchase the production that ultimately they will turn out. Our problem is to find the way to maintain that consumer demand without increasing debt to do it.

WE HAVE MADE MISTAKES

I am going to say a thing that may be too honest, because I think my own party has made mistakes. Some members of that party have helped the gentlemen of the minority to cut the W. P. A. at the wrong time and to cut it too much. I think, instead of that, we have to make up our minds there that that program—or I will grant you perhaps a better program which could be devised if we put our minds to it—has to be sustained until actually we find those people have gone back into private industry. I do not know of a single person on the W. P. A. who would not go back to private industry if given a chance and a reasonable assurance that he could get back on W. P. A. if after a short time his private job gave out.

Mr. HEALEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts, one of the most earnest Members of the House.

Mr. HEALEY. May I say that on yesterday the Committee on Appropriations, investigating the Works Progress Administration, had before it a number of the mayors of large cities. In the opinion of one of the mayors of these cities, 95 percent of the W. P. A. men, or men on the W. P. A. rolls, would jump at the chance tomorrow to get a job in private industry.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I thank the gentleman. I know that myself to be true.

The second thing I think we have made a mistake about is that the operation so far of our Social Security Act has been more or less deflationary. I think that can be corrected. I believe we should seize upon what has become one of the greatest movements this country has ever seen, namely, the movement for a real retirement pension in this Nation, and I think we should work with that movement and see if by the method of retirement pensions we will not get the machinery for sustaining a continuous, steady consumer demand on the part of the people of this Nation.

Great Britain was mentioned a while ago, and it was pointed out that Great Britain has done better than we have. I am not going to enter into a controversy about that. Personally I believe Great Britain's problem is tremendously more simple than ours and that we have done, on the whole, better than any other nation in the world, but not nearly as well as we should have done. Britain's budget has been balanced, true, but Britain's budget has been balanced because Britain levied the necessary taxes to balance its budget. That is a course of action that we have not always been ready to pursue. Some of the gentlemen who argue the loudest about balancing the Budget are the ones who argue also that we must reduce certain taxes. We made a mistake, I think, in not changing our income-tax law so it would yield greater revenues.

I say that with the explanation once again that I am not opposed to simplification of taxes. I believe we should have

it. And I also think we should reduce taxes on active business and on consumption as much as we can. Individual taxes, inheritance taxes, are another matter.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

FOR A STABLE DOLLAR AND ADEQUATE CONSUMING POWER

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Finally, I think another thing we have done wrong is that we have insisted on buying back our own national credit with bonds instead of using the credit of the American people for their benefit based on their increased capacity to produce. Thus we have had an increase in public debt, replacing the increase in private debt which took place all through the twenties. Now, what is the answer? Let me illustrate. We will say we have a national income of produced goods and services of $80,000,000,000 in a given year, and we will say that $60,000,000,000 of that is currently spent for goods and services. The other $20,000,000,000, we will say, is all invested. None of it is hoarded, none of it is saved, but all of it is invested currently. A part of that investment, it is true, will go into the payment of wages of the people that create the new capital goods, but part of it necessarily by the very definition of investment is tied up in or stored up in the productive equipment. This means, then, that that $80,000,000,000 of goods and services cannot be all taken off the shelf and sold and that you will fail to take it off to the extent that a portion of that $80,000,000,000 of goods and services produced which was our potential total purchasing power was tied up in new capital goods. The next year, on the other hand, those new capital goods mean an increase of potential production over what you had before, and therefore an increase in active buying power is called for.

I am convinced in my own mind that one of the essential elements in any solution of our problem has to be that our Government has to exercise its constitutional and proper function of bringing into circulation year by year a sufficient amount of new interest-free money and pay it into circulation through old-age pensions or in some similar fashion, in sufficient amount to keep the volume of money in line with the increased capacity of the Nation to produce wealth. Unless this is done the only way consumption can possibly keep up with the growth of productive capacity is by an increase in borrowing and debt—either public or private.

I mentioned a while ago the difference between the trickle theory and the seepage theory. I want to make it plain again I am an advocate of the seepage theory. The trickle theory I do not believe will work. I am not opposed to people making money but I just do not think it is the whole answer to our problem by any means.

I have an article here that has already been referred to in the House.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Texas, who has made such splendid contributions to our thinking in this monetary field.

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman realizes that Mr. Hoover tried the trickle theory back in 1931 and 1932 and it failed to work.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Exactly. And if carried to its logical conclusion it would have meant a balancing of the Budget at zero with no income and no outgo. I thank the gentleman very much.

This article was published in the Chicago Evening American in a column by Mr. Robert P. Vanderpool. In this paper he points out that the average earnings of American industry in the last 3 years have been 8.3 percent, whereas in the years 1927 to 1929 the earnings were only 6.5 percent. I just do not know why we should be worried. I have some other figures here from Moody's Industrial Securities which show that one great automobile concern, for example, had net earnings in the first quarter of 1929 at the rate of 34 percent, and a great electrical corporation at the rate of 15 percent.

We have just not gotten the trickle. I have already explained what seemed to me to be the central thing. Let me just say this one thing. The simple way to put it, I think, is to say that you cannot eat your cake and have it, too. You cannot have people accumulating great amounts of wealth and still have the same people have a market in the masses of people for the very commodities they want produced and sold. Neither can you save and hoard great amounts of your current national income and at the same time have your investments profitable, because the profitability of those investments depends necessarily on the capacity of the consumers of your Nation to take them off the shelves.

Mr. EATON of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield.

Mr. EATON of California. I understand that a member of another great legislative body the other day made this statement in substance, that no government could borrow itself into prosperity any more than a man could drink himself sober. Does the gentleman agree with that statement?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Of course I agree with it, but I have already said that I believe the Government had been borrowing money for purposes for which we ought not to have been compelled to borrow. I do not believe we ought to have to borrow money to build the T. V. A. I believe we have a perfect right to do exactly what private finance does to finance any revenue-producing project of that kind. Private finance would loan money on the security of the borrower. I believe the American Government ought to be able to do that same thing in effect, by advancing the national credit against the revenues of a project of that kind; or by creating deposits in favor of States or cities, for example, on the security of their bonds.

Further, I do not believe we ought to find it necessary to borrow our own national credit as we have in the past, provided that we base our money on the only really sound base, namely, the wealth-producing capacity of this Nation. I will say this to the gentleman, that I do not believe, either, that you can starve yourself into prosperity, and that the reason the New Deal has borrowed as it has and the whole explanation of the New Deal deficit has been this; that if private business does not borrow under our present monetary and banking system, Government must if we are to have a circulating medium at all, because we depend on bank credit created by the banks for the purpose of making loans for our circulating medium, 95 percent of it. I am not defending that system, but I am saying that is the explanation of the New Deal deficits. I do not like to borrow any better than anyone else, but we must go on borrowing and borrowing and borrowing until we change the way in which we bring our money originally into circulation and recognize the constitutional right of the Nation in this regard. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, on April 18 last, in the course of my remarks on the so-called stabilization bill, I stated that I had been informed that Mr. Henry Morgenthau, Sr., the father of the present Secretary of the Treasury, was a major partner of the firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. I have since been informed, upon what I consider reliable authority, that I was in error in this statement; that Mr. Morgenthau is not now nor has ever been financially interested in this firm. I certainly would not intentionally do Mr. Morgenthau or anyone else an injustice, and I make this explanation accordingly.

ARKANSAS-MISSISSIPPI BRIDGE COMMISSION

Mr. CHAPMAN submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (S. 964) creating the Arkansas-Mississippi Bridge Commission; defining the authority, power, and duties of said commission; and authorizing said commission and its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Friar Point, Miss., and Helena, Ark.; and for other purposes.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech delivered by Mr. Fred W. Sargent, president of the Chicago North Western Railroad, containing some very helpful information which I think will be useful to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

THE ONLY ROAD TO PEACE

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes following the remarks of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ALEXANDER].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I come before you today, before the people of America and of the civilized world, with a deep sense of humility and of my own inadequacy to do more than to attempt to present for discussion a suggestion for a solution of the greatest problem of our era.

The world is aflame with war passion. The crucial time has arrived when, in spite of all that has been attempted for peace through what has been called "appeasement," the world seems hurtling headlong toward war and carnage.

Notwithstanding our geographic isolation, we are very liable to be involved in case of the outbreak of a general war, and it is conceivable that in the course of such a war we might ourselves even be attacked.

It is apparent to every thoughtful person that this horrible world situation and these international antagonisms can be subdued, if subdued at all, only through spiritual intervention—that is, by divine interposition. It has been well said within the week that what the world sorely needs is not military rearmament but moral rearmament.

From the mass of letters reaching me, and from innumerable other signs, we all know that millions of sincere prayers are ascending on high every day in a continuous volume of supplication for peace.

It seems to me that there is but one answer to this problem of preserving peace, and that there is one human being in the world at this moment better qualified than any other to take the leadership for peace. His inherent qualifications and universal good standing, the profound reverence and respect in which both he and his high office are held would make it possible for him to act under the guidance of the all-wise Creator as a leader in this momentous matter of peace. In order that we may avail ourselves of divine inspiration, and that spiritual guidance in this dark hour can be invoked to save an all-too-material world, the one to whom I refer is Pope Pius XII.

It is so clear as to be indisputable that there is no solution and no hope for escape from the confusion and the cross purposes of materialistic greed and lust for power, except by the one and only method of applying the spirit of brotherly love. That is why I suggest that the one best fitted by training and position in the whole world to exert that spiritual leadership of brotherly love is the temporal and spiritual head of the great Catholic Church.

I was not born a Catholic. I was not reared a Catholic. Not being a Catholic, I feel that this suggestion coming from me may at least be considered more unbiased than if it came from a Catholic.

We in America, all being citizens of a peaceful and Christian nation, are especially qualified to urge such a movement and to subscribe to its objectives.

This question of peace is not a partisan question. It is not a religious question. It is not a racial question. It is not a geographical question. It is far too great a problem, involving as it does the lives, the happiness, the treasure, of all the peoples of the world—aye, of civilization itself—to allow any sense of partisanship of any character to have any place in its consideration.

I must confess, my colleagues, that my heart has burned within me as I have noted how political partisanship has been allowed to have a place in the considerations and discussions of the paramount problem of how to avoid war and to maintain peace. Any Member of Congress worthy of the title should be and is too humane, too broad, too devoted to the principles of humanitarianism, to allow partisanship to have any place in his consideration of this, or any of our other great unsolved problems, such as unemployment—which is second only to war in importance—such as crime, disease, or human suffering. Our democracy was dedicated by its glorious founders to a civilization which should be free of these great plagues, and partisanship must stand aside, while we bear aloft the torch they so nobly lighted that men may enjoy life, liberty, and happiness.

There can be no such enjoyment so long as war and these other great pestilences are allowed to persist.

And if there is no place for political partisanship in our attempt to solve these questions, there certainly is much less place for religious partisanship in the consideration of so great a need as ours, to preserve peace. Why should we not, to save ourselves and the world from war, all join hands together—Protestants, Jews, Catholics, and nonbelievers—behind the Pope?

I believe that we all can agree by now that no ordinary human logic or political device can save us from war. Some of us have known this for years. No nationalism can cure an international disease. The cure must be a spiritual one, conceived and applied in the highest degree of brotherly love. Can such an application of world-wide, brotherly, good will win? There certainly is no risk in making the attempt. If the attempt fails, we are no worse off than we are now. If it succeeds, it will have been a thousand times worth the effort.

Who is there who does not believe that if the peoples of the world and the governments of the world and the leaders of the world had put the same amount of intelligence, work, and money into a purpose of achieving world-wide peace and prosperity that have been put into efforts, selfish in their conception, ruinous in their application, and at the expense of others, that we would be today facing the question of such a world conflict as we are?

If we do not make the supreme attempt to solve this problem along spiritual lines, we shall face the risk of the destruction of civilization and a reign of chaos that will give us a new era of the Dark Ages.

Again I ask, who is better qualified and prepared to apply this one cure of world fellowship, of brotherly love—to provide this needed leadership to guide the world up the road to peace—than Pope Pius XII?

He has spent his life in training in religious and international affairs. His whole view is necessarily world-wide and clouded by no narrow nationalism. He has been in the heart of the sore spots of Europe for years. He knows North America well. He has brought to the Papal office a fresh vigor and a high idealism. He has made no mistakes of a political nature, which would antagonize the dictators, or the peoples of the totalitarian states. He has not chosen sides and therefore has not become unpopular in certain European capitals, nor has he indulged in any oratorical outbursts against the militarists. He is, especially to the Catholics in every nation and corner of the globe, the representative, on earth, of the Prince of Peace. What more fitting personage and personality could be found anywhere to take the lead in a supreme effort to prevent war, to call a real world peace conference than the Holy Father at Rome? His life, devoted to the study of peace, fits him for just such an emergency as this.

The stage is set. The world is in tragic and bewildered despair. It trembles on the brink of a carnage which will bathe the globe in blood and wreck the work of centuries in achieving a civilization in which men may rise above the level of brute beasts and express themselves as the image and likeness of infinite love and infinite intelligence.

The day is here, the time is ripe, for us and for all good people everywhere, through their priests or ministers or leaders, to call on the bishops of the world's churches to request the Pope to invite the heads of all nations to gather around the peace table either at Rome, at Geneva, here in Washington, or at any other place thought suitable, to stop the onrush of this senseless conflict.

If such a conference could be called, there could be a truce in all military activities. Military preparedness in every nation could be postponed while we get together around the conference table to solve our economic, political, and other international problems on a basis of love and fellowship.

Of course, there is the risk of failure in this undertaking, but why should that give us pause when the alternative, if we do not make the effort, is war, and succeeding chaos. Is any effort too great to attempt, in order to escape such a fate for the world?

A great hope was born in the heart of the world last month when the President sent his message to 31 nations suggesting a conference. The chief weakness in that message was that it was addressed to Germany and Italy, not by an impartial mediator, but by a statesman who had already chosen sides and who had a stake in the outcome. The President's message also attempted to relieve us in this country of any responsibility for such political readjustments in this complex international situation as cannot be divorced from those economic changes essential to a just peace.

I have before me an international news dispatch from London dated Saturday, May 6, which reads as follows. I quote:

> Reports stating Pope Pius XII energetically interceded to forestall a precipitate move by Adolf Hitler against Poland were published today in British newspapers. The London press also reported that His Holiness, having consecrated May as a month of prayers for peace, launched efforts to bring about a reconciliation between France and Italy as part of his endeavors to help prevent a European war.

It is apparent from that quotation, and from additional despatches today that the stage has already been set for us to request the Pope to undertake this greater objective which I am suggesting. It is the only true road to peace. There is no other way open to us at this time. If the way of peace does not lie in this direction, then the world is indeed bereft of hope and the future is dark.

There might be another way, under other circumstances, and that other way I may discuss at some later date if it seems propitious, but to prevent war now and to preserve peace this year I believe we must take immediate action to bring about, under the guidance of the Pope, the peace conference which I suggest.

Other ways may look more tempting to us. Other ways may be suggested which may appear to be more agreeable because they do not require us to do anything, but these other ways have all failed, and are failing day by day as we draw nearer the awful catastrophe so graphically described by the California poet, John Blunt, when he said:

> Look where you may the mortal foes are gathered.
> See their campfires' glare!
> A falling leaf, a stricken bird, a hot dispute, a hasty word—
> Then clash of arms and world-wide strife!
> Then—all mankind in flight for life.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, we all know these other ways—isolation, neutrality, economic sanctions, measures short of war—they may sound encouraging, but they do not work out in actual practice when put to the test. Oh my friends, why be blinded by these high-sounding phrases? If war occurs, you know, as I know, America will be there at the crisis. Men will be persuaded that victory finally may be achieved again by war, which they will be asked to fight as a protest against the disturbance of international security and in order that they may procure the enjoyment of peace after the war.

War is not peace. There is no such thing as achieving a peace by war. Peace is achieved by preventing and escaping war. Why not act now for peace before it is too late?

Under the theory of isolationism, even though we were not drawn into the conflict under arms, we in America would be sorely affected. Our business would stagnate, our stock markets would be closed, our every commercial activity would be dislocated and thrown out of adjustment, our whole mode of life would necessarily feel the impact of this horror brewing in Europe if once it breaks out.

If war comes in Europe, can we stand the strain of the unusual conditions which will be produced and the necessary concomitants, of more national planning, regimentation, allotments, quotas, Federal supervision, the army of control inspectors and all that goes with a restricted national life, mechanically managed to fit isolation?

Who doubts that there is but little brotherly love expressed in the philosophy of either isolationism or neutrality?

"GOING DOWN THE ROAD TO WAR"

The May 4 announcement of the Gallup poll shows the next phase of the problem as we unmistakably go down the road toward war. There is a great danger that perhaps many will even be misled or fail to grasp the point inherent in the conclusions ascertained by that poll. Here is what it says our mass thinking sums up to in the country today, on the question of war. I quote Mr. Gallup:

> First, there is overwhelming sentiment that the United States should stay out of any war that develops in Europe. Second, a majority of the public wants to give all possible assistance to the British and French, short of going to war, in the event that war does come.

The first principle is not new, it has been the guiding idea of American foreign policy and public opinion since shortly after the armistice.

Of course America wants to stay out of war. I am receiving thousands of letters expressing that sentiment. We in free America are unanimous on that. I received a letter a few days ago which made it completely unanimous—a letter from the N. A. M.—the National Association of Manufacturers—telling a dozen reasons why they do not want war. I wrote them immediately and congratulated them for even thinking about the subject. That indicated real progress, and I was so encouraged because of their letter that I decided to go ahead and make an attempt, through this suggestion which I have presented, to save my three sons and the other millions of noble boys throughout the world from a worse destruction than we 40,000,000 participants faced in 1917 and 1918. Indeed, I can say, like Sophocles, in Oedipus Tyrannus—

> My poor, poor children! Surely long ago
> I have read your troubles. Stricken, well I know
> Ye all are, stricken sore: Yet verily
> Not one so stricken to the heart as I.
> Your grief, it cometh to each man apart
> For his own loss, no other's; but this heart
> For thee and me and all of us doth weep.

Surely we want to stay out of war, but here we have, according to this Gallup poll, a majority in favor of aiding the French and British in case of a European war; 82 percent in favor of selling them food supplies; 57 percent in favor of selling them war materials. The surest way in the world to embroil us is this way. It is the exact way we got in in 1917. And this collective majority is for it, in the face of the added fact that the same poll indicated that a majority of the replies said, I quote: "They expect a European war to come before the end of 1939." And if we don't get in in Europe, undoubtedly we will in the Pacific and the Orient, as I pointed out in my remarks, which appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 22. So in God's name let us do something about it, something constructive, before it is too late.

In the name of peace and of humanity, in the name of the youth of America and of the world, who always bear the burden of war, in the name of the mothers of men, and, finally, in the name of Christianity, I beg you to urge the Pope to call a world peace conference to stop this impending war slaughter and to make possible the cessation of this ruinous and senseless spending for war. We should act at once. We must act at once. Will you do it? [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert along with my remarks extracts from the speech of the Duke of Windsor, which was delivered yesterday afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

The extracts from the speech of the Duke of Windsor are as follows:

I speak simply as a soldier of the last war whose most earnest prayer it is that such cruel and destructive madness shall never again overtake mankind.

* * * * * * *

It is in a larger spirit than that of personal or purely national interests that peace should be pursued. The statesmen who set themselves to restore international security and confidence must act as good citizens of the world and not only as good Frenchmen, Italians, Germans, Americans, or Britons. The benefit to their own nation must be sought through the benefit of the wider community of which we are all members.

* * * * * * *

I appeal to them especially in the name of the youth of the present day, with all its incalculable potentialities of future service of the human race. The world has not yet recovered from the effects of the last carnage which in each and every country decimated my generation. The greatest success that any government could achieve for its own national policy would be nothing in comparison with the triumph of having contributed to save humanity from the terrible fate which threatens it today.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following article:

LESSONS FROM THE PAST

On April 2, 1917, Woodrow Wilson delivered his famous message to the Congress of the United States of America, announcing our entrance into the World War. He assured us that the only object was to make the world safe for democracy. It turned out to be the end of democracy. However, our allies took us at our word.

When our boys began landing on French soil, the French Government made us pay duty on every can of beans, on every kind of food, on all the war supplies which were being shipped into France to help save the hides of 50,000,000 Frenchmen who, it is said, "can't be wrong."

When the war came to an end, the French Government tried to impose another duty on the same food and supplies which were left over before allowing us to bring them back home. Finally, in order to settle the argument, we sold the remaining stocks to France at a loss of approximately one and a half billion dollars.

When it came time to send American soldiers across the pond, the Allies furnished some of the necessary boats. But they charged us from $140 to $180 for every man thus landed on French soil.

The United States even paid damages to France for the ground on which the American armies fought, and as the war progressed we paid also for property destroyed by the exploding of American shells.

While in France our soldiers dredged her harbors, built docks, and erected thousands of miles of telephone and telegraph lines—all of which remained as permanent improvements to the country.

We built hundreds of miles of railroads on French soil, which roads are still there, being used for transportation purposes until this day. Thus we contributed to the industrial development of the Nation.

And now, after 22 years of dickering, our former allies refuse to pay their honest war debts, leaving it to the people of the United States to carry this crushing tax burden. Only little Finland has done the right and honorable thing in this matter. She alone has kept her promise.

It is estimated that, by the time all of our war obligations are met, we will have made a total investment of no less than $150,000,000,000, to cover the sorrows of 1917 and 1918. And this does not include the bloodshed, the heartbreaks, the blasted homes, and broken bodies!

WAR NEVER PAYS

One hundred and fifty billions of dollars would—

Pay the cost of running the public, the elementary, the high schools, the universities, and the colleges of the entire Nation for 51 years.

It would build nearly 6,000,000 miles of paved roads, which is about nine times the mileage of all surfaced roads now in use in our good old United States of America.

It would construct 38,250,000 six-room houses, or enough to house, with a new home, every family in the good old United States of America.

It would construct 48 hospitals costing a million dollars each, in every one of the 3,073 counties of our good old United States of America.

It would pay the unemployment-insurance premiums on all employees of business and industry of the United States for more than 300 years at the New York State rate.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes following my colleague the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

GONE BUT NOT FORGOTTEN—THE BUREAU OF THE BUDGET

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, within the memory of men yet living there was a distinguished Comptroller General of the United States. Comptroller General McCarl was known to all and sundry as the "watchdog of the Federal Treasury"; and a stern and respected guardian he was. Throughout the length and breadth of the land there were wild rumors of early new dealers tearing their hair and sobbing bitterly into their cups as the McCarl red pencil flew decisively and accurately through dozens of pet projects.

Mr. McCarl's job was simple enough. His was the task of reciting the "noes" which occasionally interrupted the unending chorus of "yeses" which greeted the epoch of 1933. It is not difficult for us to understand the bitter opposition to McCarl's work which agitated the Washington night air. And the word was not long in circulating throughout the land, "McCarl is through."

He was, and with his passing the effort to check the free and easy spending of Federal tax funds came to an end. For a time Budget Director Lewis Douglas sought to carry on the tradition of his predecessor; but the battle was too unequal. No one interested in maintaining his position within the New Deal orbit could long hold out against the overwhelming pressure from above. Douglas quit, and the battle was over.

Today our National Government deludes us into thinking that there are two agencies in Washington which supervise the expenditure of funds, the Bureau of the Budget and the General Accounting Office. The average businessman knows that if he wants to borrow money from a private banking corporation he must first submit a very accurate statement of his business, its assets, liabilities, and prospects. He would expect his Government, with its splendid facilities for accountancy, bookkeeping, and statistical research to boast the most up-to-the-minute set of books in the Nation. With a General Accounting Office and a Budget Bureau each in active operation we have the right to know everything worth knowing about each and every Government agency, activity, and spending program.

Yet the plain and shocking fact seems to be that we know very little indeed of what is going on in the inner financial circles of the Nation. A report of recent years showed that there were on hand inventories amounting to some $2,000,000,000. There was enough paper on the shelves of Government warehouses to supply all the needs of our most fruitful New Deal minds for 7 years. But when the annual deadlines rolled round once more each department was in with its request for more supplies. There is reason to suspect that the lead in our governmental pencils has been rotting so long in storage houses that it has turned literally useless. Paper has become sere and yellow of old age.

We cannot lay the blame for this sorry situation at the door of our Budget Bureau or the G. A. O. White House policymakers determine the activities of the one-time watchdogs of the Treasury. Theirs is no longer to reason why; theirs is but to do and die. A private corporation would look with ill-disguised anger upon its accountants who discovered peculiar bookkeeping arrangements within its departments and remained silent. Brain trusters have reversed the process. They look with obvious hostility upon every effort to criticize the far-flung activities of even the most insignificant New Deal agency. When Mr. McCarl first dared to point a finger of suspicion at the accounting procedure of the T. V. A.

he was labeled a "reactionary" of the worst order. His utterances on every subject were probed for sedition against the new order. And he was convicted on the most unpardonable charge of all—opposition to the New Deal spending orgy.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. Yes.

Mr. THOMASON. Does the gentleman know that the record of the T. V. A. investigation discloses that the officials of the General Accounting Office, when asked if there was any graft or defalcation of any kind in the T. V. A. answered that there was not? The record shows that, and I can give the gentleman the page and testimony.

Mr. BENDER. I am not discussing the graft angle at all. I am discussing the inefficiency, the carelessness, and the looseness of the operation of the Federal Government. Since the passing of McCarl from the scene, the Bureau of the Budget has existed only to collect the estimates submitted by each department and to turn them in to the White House offices. Only routine matters occupy the minds of the Budget and Accounting Office. Meanwhile we have a large list of governmental corporations claiming assets mounting into the millions, and no one has ever checked their records. No one has investigated their inventories. Holdings of such vast agencies as the Reconstruction Finance Corporation are currently reported in the national press, and while no one has reason to doubt their accuracy, some one in our national system should be charged with the duty of confirming each report.

As matters stand, some of the best accounting brains in the country are being wasted upon the Washington scene. They are used to tote up figures and render statistical analyses when they might be busily and profitably engaged in drawing up a clear-cut picture of the Nation's resources, assets, and liabilities, upon which we might base our program for the future. The success or failure of every New Deal experiment is a matter of vast importance for the United States of tomorrow. We can reach no intelligent determination on this vital point until we have before us in minute detail the balance sheet of America today.

The New Deal has drawn the teeth of the Treasury's watchdogs. Let us hope that we shall have no occasion to regret our dentistry. Let us hope that in the not too distant future we shall again have dogs who can bite as well as bark.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under special order heretofore made the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HUNTER] is recognized for 3 minutes.

OLD-AGE PENSIONS

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, there are in my district more than 10,000 men and women who have, during the 3 years I have served in the House of Representatives, kept me constantly informed of their interest in the passage of certain legislation now bottled up in the Ways and Means Committee.

I am confident that every other Member of this House has in his own district other thousands who are vitally interested in this legislation.

During these 3 years there have been constant efforts to get the bill out of committee and before the House, so that the Members may vote on it. These efforts have been unsuccessful because of the views of a few members of a committee.

I am referring to H. R. 2, the old-age pension bill, which replaced the Townsend bill, H. R. 4199, of the last session.

I have taken the floor today in an appeal for a report on this bill by the Ways and Means Committee. Whether that report be favorable or unfavorable, let us have a report. Let the bill come before the House and let the Members of the House vote.

Let it not be said that a few members of one committee have prevented this House of Representatives from expressing their wishes on a bill that has thousands of ardent supporters in all parts of the United States.

I have supported H. R. 2, and before it, H. R. 4199, because I believe it is the best of the many old-age pension bills that have come before Congress. In my own State I have powerful evidence of the failure of State old-age pension laws to provide for the conditions that have been made very much more urgent because of the depression. I am convinced that the problem is a national one and must be handled nationally.

To the Members of the Ways and Means Committee, I wish to say, let us have an end of evasion. If you are against H. R. 2, say so. But give the rest of us an opportunity to vote our sentiments.

The rules of the House have given you the responsibility of conducting hearings on this bill and making a report. It was never intended that you bottle it up and prevent it coming to a vote. That would be government by suppression and not government by the expression of the wills of the majority in Congress.

There may be, as it often has been charged, a few persons who do not want this bill to come to a vote for pecuniary reasons. But a substantial number of elderly people in my district, and I believe this also is true in the districts of most of you, want it brought to a vote. They want to know which Members of Congress are giving their true support, which Members have straddled the fence, and which Members are against them. They have a right to know.

Members of this House know where I stand on the issue. You know where many other Members stand. Again I appeal to Members of the Ways and Means Committee to report H. R. 2 immediately. Let us have a vote, and let us make it a record vote.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUNTER. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. The gentleman has means at his disposal to attempt to bring that bill before the House, and I am wondering whether the gentleman has ever filed a petition to discharge the committee from further consideration of the bill?

Mr. HUNTER. That matter has been discussed by those who are supporting the bill. They feel that until the committee makes a report it might not be in order to place a petition on the desk, the committee having held hearings.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. The House has been in session going on 5 months, and if the gentleman is going to wait any longer, I am afraid he will find his remedy will expire. I suggest, if he is earnest about this, that he start right now by putting a petition on the desk.

Mr. HUNTER. I wonder if the gentleman realizes that those supporting the bill have been delayed week in and week out by a promised report of the committee, which has not been forthcoming.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. The Committee on Ways and Means has been extremely busy with public hearings on taxation, which is of first importance, of course; but I think the gentleman is allowing his time to run, and if he waits much longer the session will probably be over.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I hope at a later date the House will allot me a little time so that I may answer some of the statements made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] regarding the joint investigation of the Tennessee Valley Authority. I was a member of the joint committee, and I want to say that both the majority and the minority members representing the Senate and the House spent several months in an honest effort to arrive at the facts, and while there might be some difference of opinion regarding the findings and the recommendations, yet I think it is safe to say that nobody has said there was not an honest effort made to ascertain all of the facts.

In view of what the gentleman from Ohio had to say, it seems to me that we long since passed the day for a discussion of the policy of the T. V. A. That was determined by the overwhelming majority of the Members of Congress, including a number of Republicans, speaking for the American people more than 6 years ago; and I say without hesitation that, in spite of any mistakes that have been made, the T. V. A. presents the greatest constructive program that has ever been undertaken by this Government. We at least determined that the rivers of this country belong to the people and that they ought to be put to public use rather than exploited by private and selfish interests, and the Congress definitely established the policy that the Tennessee River should be used for navigation, flood control, national defense, manufacture of fertilizer, and, incidentally, if there was any surplus power, it should also be brought to the people for their use and benefit, because electricity, next to food and water, has come to be the greatest necessity of modern life. I am one of those who wants to see electricity brought within the reach of every home in America.

One thing in the gentleman's remarks that struck me forcibly was that although he discussed the policy of the Government embarking in that sort of enterprise, at no time, as far as I heard, did the gentleman charge the Tennessee Valley Authority with any dishonesty or lack of efficiency. In spite of mistakes and dissension, they have done a big job in a big way. It is true that when this joint committee was set up by the two bodies for a full, fair, and complete investigation of the Tennessee Valley Authority we were instructed to investigate all branches of the activity and also to make certain recommendations; but the prime object and the thing that brought about the investigation was the charge by Dr. Arthur E. Morgan that there was, in effect, graft and corruption in the Tennessee Valley Authority. I undertake to say there is no evidence to substantiate that charge in the slightest. Although more than three or four hundred million dollars has been spent, there is no evidence that any of it was dishonestly spent, although there may have been some mistakes made, as would be expected in an enterprise of that size.

I was also interested in the statement made by our colleague the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER], who has just spoken, extolling Mr. McCarl, the late Comptroller General; but I would like to invite every Member of the Congress to read carefully the report of the Tennessee Valley Authority Investigating Committee, both the majority and the minority reports, because you will find it enlightening and very helpful. You will also observe in that report about a hundred pages of testimony offered by the high officials of the General Accounting Office regarding the activities of the T. V. A., and you will also note many questions, some of them by me, and the answers to those questions quoted in the report. When asked the direct question if they could point to one thing in the T. V. A. that indicated dishonesty and corruption, they promptly and effectively answered "no." So I hope that those who have an open and fair mind on the subject will wait until they read that report, because the T. V. A. is here and it is here to stay. If anything is wrong, let us correct it but not destroy it. The T. V. A. has brought happiness and contentment to thousands of people. It is redeeming and restoring the economic life of a small empire. It is entitled to a fair trial before an honest jury.

[Here the gavel fell.]

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. MYERS (at the request of Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania), for the balance of the week, on account of illness.

To Mr. FADDIS (at the request of Mr. MOSER), indefinitely, on account of illness.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MICHAEL J. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on Eamon de Valera and conscription.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DELANEY). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHAEL J. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, I also ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD an editorial from the New York Enquirer on the seventy-sixth birthday of William Randolph Hearst.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, MAY 10, 1939

(Legislative day of Monday, May 8, 1939)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Reverend Albert Joseph McCartney, D. D., LL. D., minister, the Covenant-First Presbyterian Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

They that wait upon the Lord shall mount up with wings as eagles. They shall run and not grow weary; they shall walk and not faint.

Let us pray.

"O Thou Who hast given us eyes to see,
And hearts to love this world so fair,
Give us a faith to find out Thee,
And see Thee everywhere."

Manifest Thy presence here in this Senate Chamber. Grant unto Thy servants here assembled humility of heart, clarity of mind, charity of speech, earnestness of purpose, generosity of spirit, integrity of character, and fortitude of conviction to discharge their high responsibilities to the sovereign people of this Republic.

So direct our deliberations this day to the end that we may accomplish such legislation as shall contribute to the welfare of the Nation at home and to the release of tension abroad. Restrain our tongues and pens from foolish and hasty utterances that may engender hatred, envy, or malice, remembering that a soft answer turneth away wrath.

Remember us in our homes and in our private walk and conversation; help us to adorn the virtues of truth, purity, and righteousness.

Into Thy loving care and keeping we commit the President of the United States, the Vice President, and all those upon whom rests the responsibility of governance. These blessings we ask in the name and for the sake of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

NOTICE OF SPEECH BY SENATOR REYNOLDS TOMORROW

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I wish now to state that tomorrow when the Senate convenes I shall seek the floor on a question of personal privilege, for the purpose of denying malicious, underhanded insinuations and charges by the authors of the Washington Merry-Go-Round that I am in the employ of the Nazi government and that my organization, composed of American men and women, is being financed by the agents of the Nazi government. I may add that I shall hope to have the privilege of speaking at least 2 hours.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the following concurrent resolutions of the Senate:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 7

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That in accordance with paragraph 3 of section 2 of the Printing Act approved March 1, 1907, the special joint congressional committee of the Congress appointed pursuant to Public Resolution No. 83, approved April 4, 1938, to make a full and complete investigation of the administration of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933, as amended, be, and is hereby, empowered to procure the printing of 1,000 additional copies of the hearings held before the said committee during its investigation.

Senate Concurrent Resolution 9

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 3,000 additional copies of Senate Document No. 56, current session, entitled "Report of the Joint Committee of Congress Appointed to Investigate the Tennessee Valley Authority," which was submitted to the Congress on March 31, 1939, of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate document room and 2,000 copies for the use of the House document room.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 964) creating the Arkansas-Mississippi Bridge Commission; defining the authority, power, and duties of said commission; and authorizing said commission and its successors and assigns to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Friar Point, Miss., and Helena, Ark.; and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 280) authorizing the payment of salaries of the officers and employees of Congress on the first workday preceding the last day of any month when the last day falls on Sunday or a legal holiday, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the following concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 16), in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 25,000 additional copies of House Report No. 2, current Congress, entitled "Investigation of Un-American Activities and Propaganda," of which 3,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate document room, and 22,000 copies shall be for the use of the House document room.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (S. 1515) for the relief of the Louisiana National Bank of Baton Rouge and the Hibernia Bank & Trust Co. of New Orleans, and it was signed by the Vice President.

LOSSES FROM CAMPAIGN FOR ERADICATION OF MEDITERRANEAN FRUITFLY

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report of an investigation by the Mediterranean Fruitfly Board of losses resulting from the campaign for the eradication of the Mediterranean fruitfly by the Department of Agriculture, together with a minority report thereon, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate resolutions of the Indiana Osteopathic Association and the Massachusetts Osteopathic Society, favoring the amendment of Senate bill 1620, the so-called Wagner national health bill, so as to preserve the freedom of choice of the physician and school of practice to persons entitled to medical care, and providing osteopathic representation on Federal and State advisory councils, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. MINTON presented a letter from Locals 87 and 224, Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, New Albany, Ind., unanimously endorsing the so-called Schwellenbach resolution, being the resolution (S. Res. 126) increasing the limit of expenditures for the investigation of violations of the right of free speech and assembly and interference with the right of labor to organize and bargain collectively, which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. CAPPER presented petitions of members of Maple Camp, No. 557, of Great Bend, and B. C. Douglas Camp, of Fort Scott, Royal Neighbors of America, in the State of Kansas, praying for the enactment of legislation to exempt lodges and fraternal societies from the operation of the tax provisions of the Social Security Act, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Baldwin City, Kans., favoring action to stop the shipment of war supplies to Japan for use in operations in China, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition, numerously signed, of sundry citizens of Clyde, Kans., praying that the United States adhere to the general policy of neutrality, and that the provisions of the Neutrality Act be extended so as to include civil as well as international conflicts, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WILEY presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Wisconsin favoring adequate Federal appropriations for Works Progress Administration projects for relief of the needy, and the prohibition of continued diversion of such funds for political purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

(See resolution printed in full when laid before the Senate by the Vice President on the 9th instant, p. 5272, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

Mr. WILEY also presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Wisconsin favoring amendment of the so-called Walsh-Healey Act so as to provide more stringent conditions for the purchase of supplies and the making of contracts by the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

(See resolution printed in full when laid before the Senate by the Vice President on the 9th instant, p. 5272, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

Mr. WILEY also presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Wisconsin favoring the enactment of the bill (H. R. 4723) to correct the military record of Oberlin M. Carter, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

(See resolution printed in full when laid before the Senate by the Vice President on the 9th instant, p. 5273, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

Mr. WILEY also presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Senate Joint Resolution 9

Joint resolution memorializing Congress to provide by law that dairy products be made a basic commodity

Whereas dairying comprises a wide and varied agricultural enterprise which provides a major income for a large number of farmers in the several dairy states; and

Whereas, because large sums of money are invested in the dairy sections of today for the purpose of producing dairy products of good quality and due to climatic conditions, dairy farmers cannot profitably engage in other types of farming; and

Whereas the dairy farmer is at a disadvantage compared with the cotton, corn, and wheat farmer in that the Agricultural Adjustment Act does not control the production of dairy products; and

Whereas the dairy industry would be immeasurably benefited if it were made subject to the Agricultural Adjustment Act and dairy farmers favor control of production in dairying in the manner provided in said act for controlling production of agricultural products affected thereby: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That this legislature respectfully petitions the Congress of the United States to enact legislation providing that dairy products be made a basic commodity and that a parity payment be made to equal the difference between the average price of butter on the New York market and the parity price; and be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to both Houses of the Congress of the United States and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

Mr. JOHNSON of California presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of California, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs:

Assembly Joint Resolution 3

Relative to the development of Playa del Rey Harbor for coast defense purposes

Whereas the Government of the United States has found it necessary, because of the condition of world affairs, to pursue a program of rearmament; and

Whereas the development of bases for high-speed coast defense craft and the construction of factories for the production of hydroplanes are essential to the provision of adequate means for the defense of the Pacific coast; and

Whereas Playa del Rey Harbor in the State of California is exceptionally well suited to serve as a base for such high-speed craft; and

Whereas Playa del Rey Harbor constitutes an advantageous site upon which to locate a hydroplane construction factory: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of California, jointly, That the President and the Congress of the United States be memorialized to appropriate the sum of $25,000,000 for the development of Playa del Rey Harbor as an auxiliary naval base for high-speed coast defense craft and the construction at the harbor of a factory for the production of hydroplanes; and be it further

Resolved, That the Governor of the State of California is hereby requested to transmit a copy of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, and to each Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States, and that the Senators and Representatives from California are hereby respectfully requested to urge such action.

Mr. JOHNSON of California also presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of California, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Assembly Joint Resolution 6

Relative to memorializing the President and Congress to increase the payments for old-age assistance made by the Federal Government to the several States under the provisions of the Social Security Act

Whereas the people of the State of California believe that aid should be provided to aged persons in an amount sufficient to enable them to maintain a decent and comfortable standard of living, free from anxiety and from the necessity of denying themselves all but the essentials of bare subsistence; and

Whereas the present contributions made by the Government of the United States to the State of California for old-age assistance under the provisions of the Social Security Act are insufficient to permit the State of California to provide adequate aid to the aged, and the financial resources of the State of California are not great enough to permit the State to provide ample aid to the aged without further assistance from the Government of the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of California, jointly, That the Legislature of the State of California hereby memorializes the President and the Congress of the United States to enact such amendments to the old-age assistance provisions of the Social Security Act as will increase the contributions for old-age assistance made by the Government of the United States to the several States from the present maximum sum of $15 per month with respect to each individual aided to the sum of $30 per month with respect to each such individual; and be it further

Resolved, That the Governor of the State of California is hereby requested to transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Member of the House of Representatives from California in the Congress of the United States; and that such Senators and Representatives from California are hereby respectfully urged to support such legislation.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. SCHWARTZ, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 897) to correct the military record of Walter Ballhaus, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 408) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 522) to provide pensions to members of the Regular Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard who become disabled by reason of their service therein, equivalent to 90 percent of the compensation payable to war veterans for similar service-connected disabilities, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 414) thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 1942) for the relief of Barbara Kosick, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 410) thereon.

Mr. SMITH, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 2378) to prohibit the exportation of tobacco seed and plants, except for experimental purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 409) thereon.

Mr. TOWNSEND, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 2082) for the relief of Hugh A. Smith, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 411) thereon.

Mr. HUGHES, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 2695) for the relief of Kenneth B. Clark, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 412) thereon.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 3965) for the relief of Charles H. Parr, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 413) thereon.

Mr. BYRNES, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred the resolution (S. Res. 130) authorizing the payment of expenses in the investigation of the 1938 senatorial election in Indiana, reported it without amendment.

REORGANIZATION PLAN NO. II—REPORT OF SELECT COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION

Mr. BYRNES, from the Select Committee on Government Organization, to which was referred the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 16), reported it adversely:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress does not favor the reorganization plan No. II transmitted to Congress by the President on May 9, 1939.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be placed on the calendar.

EXECUTIVE REPORT OF FOREIGN RELATIONS COMMITTEE

As in executive session,

Mr. PITTMAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported favorably the nomination of Norman Armour, of New Jersey, now Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to Chile, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to Argentina.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. MINTON:

S. 2388. A bill to amend Veterans Regulation No. 1 (a), part III, paragraph I (e), as amended, to liberalize the definition of permanent total disability for non-service-connected disability pension purposes; and

S. 2389. A bill to amend Veterans Regulation No. 1 (a), part III, paragraph I (f), as amended, to increase the pensions payable to war veterans suffering with permanent total non-service-connected disabilities from $30 to $60 per month; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. TYDINGS:

S. 2390 (by request). A bill to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the complete independence of the Philippine Islands, to provide for the adoption of a constitution and a form of government for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

S. 2391. A bill to amend the act of Congress approved June 16, 1938, in respect to requirements, qualifications, and regulations as to crews of certain vessels, referred to as section 672b of United States Code Annotated, title 46; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. ELLENDER:

S. 2392. A bill to legalize a bridge across Bayou La Fourche at Cut Off, La.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. MEAD:

S. 2393. A bill for the relief of Helen Adams; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WHEELER:

S. 2394. A bill to credit certain Indian tribes with sums heretofore expended from tribal funds on Indian irrigation works; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. 2395. A bill to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, for the purpose of regulating interstate and foreign commerce in wheat, providing for the orderly marketing of wheat at fair prices in interstate and foreign commerce, insuring to wheat producers a parity income from wheat based upon parity price or cost of production, whichever is the higher, and for other purpose; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. CAPPER:

S. 2396. A bill for the relief of Frank L. Wilkinson (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. BONE:

S. 2397. A bill for the relief of the State of Washington; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WALSH:

S. 2398. A bill to amend the Motor Carrier Act, 1935, with respect to the power of the Commission to limit the scope of the operations of certain carriers, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. BYRNES:

S. 2399. A bill for the relief of certain former employees of the Farm Security Administration; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WILEY:

S. 2400. A bill relating to the annuities payable under the Civil Service Retirement Act of 1930, as amended, to employees who become totally disabled; to the Committee on Civil Service.

TRADE RELATIONS WITH THE PHILIPPINES

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I ask consent to introduce a new bill dealing with the Filipino question. This bill is different from the original bill in that it does not apply after the year 1946. It does, however, in respect to some commodities, such as embroideries and pearl buttons, substitute a 5-percent reduction in the quota each year for a 5-percent tariff, as was originally incorporated in the independence bill itself. Outside of that it practically deals with no other feature of the Filipino question. I make this brief statement so that the press as well as the Senate may be advised, in general, as to what is in the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be received and referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

(See Senate bill 2390, introduced by Mr. TYDINGS and referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, which appears under its appropriate heading in today's proceedings.)

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 280) authorizing the payment of salaries of the officers and employees of Congress on the first workday preceding the last day of any month when the last day falls on Sunday or a legal holiday was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

AMENDMENTS TO RIVER AND HARBOR BILL—OCKLAWAHA AND KISSIMMEE RIVERS, FLA.

Mr. ANDREWS submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 5753) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT

Mr. CLARK of Missouri (for Mr. BAILEY) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (S. 2009) to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, by extending its application to additional types of carriers and transportation and modifying certain provisions thereof, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed.

ADDRESSES ON OCCASION OF PRESENTATION OF GAVEL TO VICE PRESIDENT

[Mr. CONNALLY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address by Senator NORRIS, and a reply by the Vice President, on the occasion of the presentation to the Vice President of a gavel made from the timber of the house erected on the first homestead taken under the Homestead Act of 1863, which appears in the Appendix.]

NEUTRALITY—STATEMENT BY HON. BAINBRIDGE COLBY

[Mr. REYNOLDS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD the statement of Hon. Bainbridge Colby before the Committee on Foreign Relations on neutrality, peace legislation, and foreign policy, which appears in the Appendix.]

THE MONROE DOCTRINE—ADDRESS BY STEPHEN F. CHADWICK

[Mr. WALSH asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a portion of an address on the Monroe Doctrine delivered by Stephen F. Chadwick, national commander of the American Legion, on April 20, 1939, which appears in the Appendix.]

LABOR AND TAXES—SPEECH BY MATTHEW WOLL

[Mr. BARBOUR asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a speech on the subject of Labor and Taxes delivered by Matthew Woll, vice president of the American Federation of Labor, before the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, Washington, D. C., on May 2, 1939, which appears in the Appendix.]

LABOR LEGISLATION—EDITORIAL BY DANIEL J. TOBIN

[Mr. MINTON asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD part of an editorial by Daniel J. Tobin, published in the May 1939 issue of the official magazine of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Stablemen, and Helpers of America, which appears in the Appendix.]

ARTICLE BY ROBERT W. WINSTON ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS

[Mr. REYNOLDS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article by Robert W. Winston, published in the Raleigh News and Observer, entitled "Hell Ain't Got But Four," which appears in the Appendix.]

THE FARM PROBLEM—ARTICLE BY ERNEST D. MAC DOUGALL

[Mr. BONE asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "The Real U. S. Farm Problem" by Ernest MacDougall, published in the Washington Grange News of the issue of May 6, 1939, which appears in the Appendix.]

GOLD—ARTICLE BY JAMES CALHOUN

[Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article by James Calhoun entitled "Gold Is Where They Lost It," published in Ken Magazine for May 19, 1938, which appears in the Appendix.]

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5269) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture and for the Farm Credit Administration for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. When the Senate took a recess yesterday it had under consideration the motion by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] to suspend paragraph 4 of rule XVI for the purpose of enabling him to offer an amendment to the pending bill. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Alabama to suspend paragraph 4 of the rule referred to.

Mr. GEORGE obtained the floor.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, in connection with the debate on the pending bill I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a telegram from the cotton trade of New England, which I understand is in accord with the views of the cotton textile industry, in opposition to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], and a few of many letters on the subject, that I have received.

There being no objection, the telegram and letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BOSTON, MASS., May 9, 1939.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH:

Entire cotton trade here vigorously opposed to Senator BANKHEAD's cotton export subsidy amendment which comes up before Senate today. Its passage would seriously demoralize textile mills in New England. We respectfully and strongly urge you and other New England Senators to do everything in your power to defeat it. Best regards.

J. JOSEPH O'DONNELL.

PACIFIC MILLS,
Boston, May 4, 1939.

Senator DAVID I. WALSH,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WALSH: News dispatches indicate that a subcommittee of the Senate is preparing to recommend an export subsidy for raw cotton. Obviously, this would enable foreign spinners to pay less for cotton than a domestic manufacturer. No specific suggestion for protecting domestic manufacturers against the importation of cloth made from this cheaper cotton has been forthcoming. Because of the terms of the reciprocal-trade agreements, it is questionable whether adequate measures can be framed.

We urge you to oppose an export subsidy on cotton, both because of its injurious effect on domestic manufacturers and also because of the obvious unfairness to our own citizens in using Government funds to make our cotton available to the foreigner at a cheaper price than is obtainable at home.

Yours very truly,

HENRY G. SIMONDS, Vice President.

ARLINGTON MILLS,
Boston, May 3, 1939.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR WALSH: We understand that a subcommittee of one of the Senate committees is preparing to recommend an export subsidy for raw cotton.

It seems to us that any export subsidy should be very vigorously opposed, as such a policy would enable foreign spinners to pay less for cotton than the domestic manufacturers would have to pay. We understand that some vague suggestions have been made for establishing import quotas in order to protect our domestic manufacturers, but this it seems would be a very difficult if not an impossible program to enforce.

While we appreciate the situation that exists with reference to the enormous accumulation of cotton and the straits to which the farmer is put, we also realize the dangerous condition which any subsidy plan may bring about for the manufacturers of cotton.

We ask you to give this whole matter your most earnest consideration.

Very sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN W. HOBBS.

BRAYTON & FERGUSON, INC.,
Fall River, Mass., February 1, 1939.

HON. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Regarding proposed cotton bill under consideration to release immediately 1,500,000 bales cotton to governmental agency to dispose of at their discretion and further release one and one-half to two and one-half million bales annually.

In my opinion this bill would have a very injurious effect on the cotton textile business, as it would create a situation which might threaten materially lower prices for cotton at any time. With this situation prevailing, cotton mills can never operate steadily.

I urge you very strongly to oppose the passage of such a bill.

Yours very truly,

EDWARD BRAYTON.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, in the discussion of this matter I shall proceed on the theory that the Senate is listening to a discussion of the merits of the proposal, although a point of order having been made and a motion having been made to suspend the rule, the immediate issue arises upon that motion. Nevertheless, the matter is of such great importance to the whole cotton industry that I felt impelled to make the point of order. I think I am well within my rights, and that any other Senator would be well within his rights in raising a point of order upon a matter of such vital importance.

In the first place, the Senate rules mean something. The general rule is, of course, that legislation ought not to be written into an appropriation bill, because the Appropriations Committee is not a legislative committee. In this case hearings were at first denied, and properly refused, because the committee recognized that it was not a legislative committee. Toward the end of the deliberations of the subcommittee in charge of the agricultural appropriation bill, however, notice was given in the afternoon that one or two witnesses might be heard on the following day. There were two appearances before the subcommittee in opposition to this proposal; but I submit, Mr. President, that there has been no full, no adequate, no complete hearing on a matter of such great importance to the cotton industry, which is an industry that affects all other general industry, as well as the farmers who produce cotton itself.

For that reason, Mr. President, I felt justified in raising the point of order, and I now feel justified in asking the Senate carefully to consider whether a matter of such serious importance will be injected into an appropriation bill, or whether the Senate will give recognition to it by favorably passing upon a proposed amendment which on its face, of course, cannot be offered to the bill except through suspension of the rule.

I also know, Mr. President, that in the original A. A. A. Act a provision was inserted, known as section 32, providing for the use of not more than 30 percent of the import duties collected by the Treasury for the purpose of distributing, including exportation if necessary, certain farm products dealt with in that act. I also know, however, that in that act, and until the last Farm Control Act of 1938 was passed, there was an express provision prohibiting the payment of benefits in connection with the exportation of unmanufactured cotton. In the last farm bill, in conference I think—because the matter was never debated upon the floor of the Senate—the provision in the original A. A. A. Act was omitted; so that under the law the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized not only to distribute cotton, among other farm products, but he is authorized to aid and assist in the exportation of cotton as well as other farm products.

Mr. President, I think no one will gainsay the statement that when we adopted the A. A. A. program, in full recognition of the fact that it was highly experimental, every power that could be given the Secretary of Agriculture to make it work, and to make it a workable act, was given to him. It required no stretch of the imagination to know that retaliatory measures might be resorted to by various producing countries throughout the world. Therefore, it was necessary to arm the Secretary of Agriculture with the fullest power Congress could give him to protect agriculture under the new farm program. It was not thought, however, that the Secretary of Agriculture contemplated the use of section 32 funds for the purpose of exporting raw cotton. It was never thought that he entertained that view. As late as September 20 of last year the Secretary of Agriculture himself, in a carefully prepared speech, delivered at Fort Worth, Tex., which was broadcast throughout the Nation, used this language. I quote only a part of the statement of the Secretary:

> When you export your soil's fertility you are exporting part of your farm's capital. * * * Unlike wheat, however, an outright export subsidy does not appear to be called for in the case of cotton. The reason is that none of the cotton-exporting countries competing with us is using this method. Whereas in the case of wheat, the use of this method by other countries has forced us to do likewise. * * * If used on a large scale and over a period of time export subsidies employed by competing countries are mutually self-defeating. They amount to an international price war that is bound to be destructive in the end.

Not only did the Secretary of Agriculture in his Fort Worth speech thus disclose the real purposes for which section 32 funds were in his hands, but he clearly demonstrated that he had no thought of employing an export subsidy to get rid of an accumulation of raw cotton then in the hands of the Government. In the report of the Secretary of Agriculture to the President of the United States on December 1 last he reiterated and enlarged upon this definite statement. He pointed out the reasons why an export subsidy in the case of raw cotton was not called for, would be unwise, and would be destructive in the long run to any country employing it.

Not only is that true, Mr. President, but the President of the United States himself within recent weeks—if his statement was correctly reported in the New York newspapers—had this to say with reference to export subsidies. Speaking of an alternative in trade matters, the President said:

> The other alternative is to subsidize exports of surplus goods as a national policy. If that is done, it means that the subsidy must be paid out of the National Treasury. Well, that would begin with a half dozen products having strong congressional backing; it soon would get into the logrolling stage and lead to the subsidizing of exports of a large number of products. The result would be to add to the national debt or pay the subsidies out of taxpayers' pockets by increasing the whole tax structure from top to bottom.

So, Mr. President, while there was authority for the distribution of farm products covered in the original Agricultural Adjustment Act, the Secretary of Agriculture last September at Fort Worth declared that no occasion existed for the employment of a subsidy in the case of cotton, pointing out at the same time that the occasion had arisen for the use of the subsidy in the case of wheat because other countries were subsidizing their exports of wheat. Then the Secretary of Agriculture on December 1 last year, in his report to the President of the United States, reiterated his Fort Worth speech, declaring that no subsidy on cotton was indicated and should be used. The President of the United States in clear and explicit language pointed out the certain evil and the ultimate end of a program of subsidizing a product like cotton in world commerce.

When some weeks back the rumor persisted that someone in the Department of Agriculture had suddenly decided to export a portion or all of the cotton held by the Commodity Credit Corporation under loan by means of a subsidy, I was not prepared to accept it as true; but when the rumor did persist in this body, on March 20 I offered a simple Senate resolution expressing the sense of the Senate that in the present state of world affairs, with the imminence of war, if rumors were to be regarded, of war upon a large scale, no part of the cotton held by the Government shall be sold for less than its actual cost to the Government without first asking the Congress for authority to make the sale. Nine days later, on the 29th day of March, the President issued a statement endorsing an export subsidy upon cotton. But the President's proposal was to export the cotton held by the Government under the loan contracts with the farmers.

Mr. President, such a proposal as that now pending carries great significance to everyone connected with the industry, from the farmer who plants to the ginner and the compressor who have first processed, to the warehousemen who store, to the converters and the processors who manufacture into cloth, and I had reason to think, and the whole cotton trade and industry had the right to believe, that no effort would be made to have the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, which is not a legislative committee, act favorably upon a proposal such as that before the Senate today, when there has been no chance for a full, adequate, candid hearing before any legislative group, when the very necessities confronting the Committee on Appropriations make it impossible to grant such a hearing, and, moreover, they ought not to grant such a hearing, because the Committee on Appropriations is not a legislative committee.

But the Senate now has before it an amendment, offered by my distinguished and able friend the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], which wholly changes the meaning and effect of the President's recommendation as announced on March 29, because the amendment before the Senate is a direction to export, not the cotton held under the loan, not the cotton held by the Commodity Credit Corporation, not the eleven and a half million bales of cotton which suddenly has caused such a flurry in the United States, which suddenly has produced such a desire to get rid of it by one means or another, in one manner or another; no part of this cotton is to be first subsidized. The amendment proposes that when the new crop, in 1939, comes upon the market, then the subsidy be offered, the theory being that when the new crop, or so much of it as can be exported, moves into the foreign market, the mills in the United States will be compelled to pay the pegged price, whatever it is, plus certain other charges, in order to get cotton to supply the needs of the American people.

I want the cotton farmer to receive just compensation for his product. I do not like to speak about myself, but I will take this occasion to say that, including the little farm home in which I live, I have not a single dollar of investment which is not invested in cotton land, now used in the production of cotton. Therefore I want the farmer to have a just price for his cotton. I have as strong an interest in securing a just price for the American farmer as has anyone. But the pending proposal leaves the loan cotton where it is, to remain a disturbing factor, it pays a subsidy to the foreign buyer to take the new crop, forcing the American mills to pay any price which may be exacted of them through the loan provisions of the Farm Act of 1938.

Make no mistake about it, it is not going to hurt the mills directly, because the American consumer will pay the advanced price; the American consumer will pay the difference, every dollar of the difference, that is used to sell to the foreign consumer the same goods and merchandise at a lower price.

It is not possible to cover up this proposition. It comes down to this, and to this only: It is a proposal to sell American cotton to the foreign consumer at a lower price than that at which it is sold to the American consumer. Yet it is said the American farmer will be helped by that process.

Mr. President, during the World War, and immediately thereafter, the price of cotton went up to an unprecedented height—that is, unprecedented in modern times. This rapid increase in price naturally stimulated cotton production in other countries, but other countries had long been producing cotton.

Following the World War we witnessed the struggle of nations all over the earth to gain what they called self-sufficiency. They resorted to every known device to develop within their own borders all of the things a nation must have in peace and in war. They resorted to tariffs, they resorted to quotas, they resorted to monetary devices, they resorted to every known method of restricting trade and commerce, in an effort to build up industries within their own borders.

We stood against that. The United States made an effort to stand against it, but especially did the Democratic Party, true to the traditions of that party, stand against it. We fought here during the long summer months over two tariff acts to try to keep them within the bounds of reason, to try to keep our own country out of a trade war which, in the end, as the President says, and as Secretary Wallace says, is destructive of all countries engaging in it. We tried to bring about the establishment of reasonable duties. We tried to liberalize trade practices so far as possible. We tried to build up commerce rather than stop it; indeed, we tried to prevent what has actually occurred under our farm program.

It will be recalled that the distinguished gentleman who now occupies the position of head of the State Department, lately our colleague, earnestly fought against quotas, embargoes, prohibitive tariffs, and every like device. Senators will recall that as soon as he had gone into the Cabinet he asked the Congress for the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act The reciprocal-trade treaties which have been entered into may not be good in particular instances, and in some instances may be highly objectionable, but the Secretary of State knew, as he knows today, that the only enduring foundation for world trade and commerce and the proper relationship between civilized nations must depend upon economic peace, not upon economic warfare.

Yet we are asked to suspend the rule in a matter of vital importance to a great industry, to suspend the rule in order that we may be the first nation on the globe to begin an unrelenting warfare in cotton.

Is it to be said to the very shame of the Democratic Party, which in 1940 must face an election, with no other country on the face of the globe subsidizing cotton, no other producing country doing anything that is unfair, that we, the most powerful nation in the world financially and economically, will start the price war which the Secretary of Agriculture recently said—indeed, in his last annual report in December repeated—would be commonly destructive of all countries engaging in such war?

Mr. President, yesterday the suggestion was made that other cotton-producing countries have undersold our cotton in the world market. How? In ordinary commercial intercourse, in ordinary trade and commerce, without resorting to tariffs, without resorting to embargoes, without resorting to restrictions, they simply offered their cotton and let it go as producers and merchants have always dealt in cotton. No just complaint can be made of a single cotton-producing country on the globe—not one. They simply did what they have always done and what they always will do. And they will cut down, too, under any subsidy which we might provide. We can subsidize this cotton; we can pay 2 cents or 3 cents or 4 cents a pound and send the cotton abroad at 2 cents or 3 cents or 4 cents a pound below the cost of the cotton to our own people who must wear it in shirts and overalls, but the foreign cotton producer will cut down under that price if he can.

Cotton does not need anything but the ability to shake off the sapping influence of its friends and take its place again in the free markets of the world. It will find its competitive position and it will hold its competitive position.

Mr. President, not only did tariffs and restrictions of all kinds tend to impede the free flow of commerce, but our own program directly contributed to the accumulation of cotton in the United States.

In 1932–33 the United States furnished 45 percent of all the cotton used outside the United States. After we inaugurated our cotton program and by 1938 the United States furnished only 24 percent of the cotton consumed outside the United States, as indicated by export figures.

Yesterday it was pointed out very ably by the distinguished senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] that, as a matter of fact, the consumption of American cotton even up to the present time has gone on at only a little less rate than in former years. But that cotton was drawn from the warehouses in the manufacturing countries outside the United States. It did not go into export, but those countries simply drew on their warehouse stocks.

Mr. President, in 1932–33 the United States exported 8,426,000 bales of cotton. During the present season, thus far, with less than 3 months of the year yet to run, we have exported only a little more than 3,000,000 bales of cotton. It is agreed that our exports in 1938–39 will not exceed three and one-half million bales of cotton.

What does that mean? It simply means that since the inauguration of our cotton program, due not only and solely to the existence of the program, though it always must be regarded as a direct and contributing cause, our exports have decreased, in round numbers, by 5,000,000 bales.

During the years 1934–35, 1937–38, 1938–39, we had loans on cotton. I insisted on those loans. I joined with the distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], as he said yesterday, and insisted upon them. I was compelled to. The law had been passed requiring our farmers to cut down their acreage. We could not in good conscience and fairness restrict the production of the cotton farmer and at the same time fail to give him in any possible way a living price for his cotton. We were forced to it. But the present accumulation of cotton was not all placed under the loan in 1938–39. Some of it went there in 1934. Some of it went there in 1937. We still have, under the first loan made in 1934, 1,600,000 bales of American cotton.

Mr. President, when we commenced our program foreign exports, in 1932–33, amounted to 5,000,000 bales; that is, foreign countries producing cotton furnished to the world trade 5,000,000 bales. Now the foreign exports for 1938–39 amount to 8,300,000 bales, or a net gain in foreign production of cotton for outside sale of 3,300,000 bales. During the same period the consumption of world cotton actually increased 2,839,000 bales.

On April 15 of this year we had in the Commodity Credit Corporation under the three loans made 11,300,000 plus bales of cotton. That cotton cost us a little more than $600,000,000. It costs us $45,000,000 every year we keep it.

Such is the cotton picture today. However, there is more to it than that, Mr. President. In 1933, when we commenced our cotton program, the price of cotton was 9 cents plus. Today the price of cotton in the world market is only about 8¼ cents. Every farmer knows that when he now goes to town to buy the things which he cannot produce he must pay more for them; and yet, so far as the price element is concerned, he is receiving less for his cotton than he received when we commenced the program.

During the period of the program the Government has paid in benefit payments to the American farmers the total sum of $930,000,000. As of April 15 the Commodity Credit Corporation had a net loss on its 11,300,000 bales of cotton of $170,000,000.

Is the program working when the actual price of cotton in the free markets of the world is less today than it was when the program was commenced? The price has been sustained only because the Government has come to the assistance of the American cotton farmer in the sum of $930,000,000 during the entire program.

Is the program working when today we have an accumulated cotton surplus of 11,300,000 bales, on which we have a net loss on April 15 of this year of $170,000,000?

What is proposed? Nothing but another stop-gap, Mr. President. It is now proposed to give money to the Secretary of Agriculture and to direct him to take the cotton which will come on the market in August and September, 60 or 90 days away, and export all he can up to some seven and a half million bales. Is he to export the loan cotton? Not at all. It is to stay where it is unless the Secretary of Agriculture finds that some American mill or American exporter cannot obtain out of the free cotton exactly the quantity or class of cotton which he desires. In that event the Secretary may release some of the loan cotton prior to January 1, 1940. However, the whole thing is admittedly simply a stop-gap. It solves nothing. It not only does not solve anything; it does not begin to solve anything. It leaves us with the problem just as we have it.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. MALONEY. Is the Senator willing to go further and say that the proposal intensifies the problem?

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, yes. I am coming to that feature. I am referring to the disposition of the cotton.

Mr. President, the pending amendment proposes to give to the Secretary of Agriculture the right to pay anything he wishes to subsidize cotton exports. There is no limitation whatever upon the amount per pound which he may pay. If cotton were selling in the world market at 8 cents a pound, he could pay 8 cents if he wished, or 7 cents, or 3 cents. It is proposed to give him absolute, uncontrolled discretion to pay any sum he may wish to pay.

There is no limitation whatever upon his power to sell the cotton to the foreign consumer, but not to the hard-pressed American consumer, at whatever price he wishes to sell it, except for the one limitation declared in the amendment, to wit, that he shall export not to exceed the 10-year average of 7,520,000 bales of cotton. In other words, the gross amount of exports on which he may pay a subsidy shall not exceed the 10-year average, which happens to be 7,520,000 bales per year.

Very well; but, Mr. President, that is not all the amendment does. When the amendment was first offered, it authorized the Secretary of Agriculture to take every red cent of the soil-conservation money and use it for the purpose of exporting cotton. The pending amendment does not do that. The amendment has been amended, and in its present form the Secretary may not take the soil-conservation money. However, as the amendment was first offered and printed, he could take every cent of the soil-conservation money coming to cotton; he could take every cent of the money under section 32, or any other sum which might be appropriated for cotton, and pay it to the foreign spinner, who, in turn, would be able to sell the cotton goods and other manufactured articles to the foreign consumer more cheaply than we could buy them in the United States.

That is not all the amendment now does. The committee has recommended an increase of $113,000,000, to which the Senate has agreed, to supplement section 32 funds, making a total of some $203,000,000. Under the amendment, 25 percent of that sum may be used by the Secretary of Agriculture in his discretion. He may pay any sum he wishes to pay to export a bale of cotton. The only limitation is that he must stop when he reaches the 10-year average of 7,520,000 bales.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does not the Senator realize that there is a limitation in the amount of money available?

Mr. GEORGE. No; I do not. I am glad to come to that point. So far as money payments are concerned, yes, but not so far as exports are concerned.

I have great respect for Mr. Wallace. He is a man of the utmost sincerity. However, I do not think Mr. Wallace or anyone in his organization can successfully handle the great world-wide problem of the marketing of cotton. Indeed, I know he cannot. The industry has been built up through a century. It has in it hundreds of thousands of technically trained men. Some of the ablest men in the world are engaged in the cotton industry, and yet they do not always know how to handle it. Cotton is a product which must be sold far in advance. It cannot be sold immediately when needed. It goes all over the world. It goes into various types of manufacturing other than textile products. Even the highest grade and quality of glass may now be made from cotton. The industry has been built up through a century of time. It is proposed, without limitation, to place the whole of the cotton industry in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture and such experts and officials as he has in his organization. Such action would be a major disaster. It would be an unpardonable tragedy to millions of men and women who depend upon the cotton industry because it is not possible for a Federal Government agency to handle this great product in the way in which the industry itself can handle it.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. TYDINGS. Does the Senator feel that if the export subsidy provision were incorporated into law it would have the effect of encouraging the cotton farmer to produce more cotton?

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, no. I do not think it would, because the cotton farmer is already limited under quotas.

Let me return to the proposal before us. Under the terms of the amendment the Secretary of Agriculture would be authorized to pay, as a subsidy on exports of raw cotton or manufactured cotton, anything which he believed, in his discretion, to be necessary in order to establish a fully competitive condition in the world market. If the Secretary undertook to do that he would have to have a cool billion dollars to start with to establish and maintain a competitive condition of manufactured American cotton in the free markets of the world. Labor conditions everywhere are different and variable; cost of manufacture everywhere is different and variable. If the Secretary of Agriculture were to undertake to establish full competitive conditions for raw and manufactured cotton in the markets of the world, it would take literally billions of dollars to do it. However, that is not the point I am getting to, Mr. President.

Under this amendment the Secretary is authorized to pay the cotton-export subsidy either in money or in kind. It may be said that under the amendment the cotton cannot be released from the loan and made available as a subsidized product until January 1, 1940. Very well; let that be granted; but everybody knows that the cotton mills do not buy all their cotton within one month. If they are wise they buy during a whole marketing season, and a marketing season is from the opening of cotton in the fall until cotton begins to open again. On July 31, 1939, every pound and bale of the 11,500,000 bales of cotton now held by the Government can be taken over by the Commodity Credit Corporation. It can be taken over under the terms of the amendment, but it can also be taken over under the terms of the contracts. The Commodity Credit Corporation has been transferred to the Department of Agriculture. The Commodity Credit Corporation holds this cotton, and every bale of it can be released in July of this year. The Secretary of Agriculture not only can use the money available to him, but he can subsidize the sale of cotton to foreign spinners and foreign consumers at any price which he elects, at any price per pound that he wants to pay, and he can pay the subsidy in kind out of the cotton. In other words, Mr. President, the Secretary of Agriculture not only has about $51,000,000 in his hands that he can pay in cash, but he can subsidize cotton until he has exported 7,500,000 bales by the payment of a subsidy in kind.

What does that mean? It means that during the fall of this year the Secretary of Agriculture can approach the English spinners or a syndicate of buyers anywhere and can say to them, "I will give you every fourth bale of cotton that you buy; buy 4,000,000 bales of cotton and we will ship you 5,000,000 bales; or buy 4,000,000 bales and pay us for only 3,000,000 bales at the market price; take 1,000,000 bales for profit." Under this amendment the Secretary of Agriculture can send out of America of the cotton held by the Commodity Credit Corporation up to 7,500,000 bales, and he can do it by payments in kind. He can send it out in January.

Mills buy cotton to use during the months of September, October, December, and on up to the next July or August, or perhaps the next December. They make their contracts far ahead; they have to do so. All the foreign buyers want to know is that in January or in February, upon contracts already signed, sealed, and delivered, they can get 5,000,000 or 6,000,000 bales of cotton shipped to them when and as they call for it, with every fourth bale going along free as a subsidy. That is what this amendment would do. I do not know what the Secretary of Agriculture would do, but the authority is in the amendment.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. MALONEY. I do not know that this is an appropriate time for me to say what I have in mind, but I do want to say it during the brilliant speech of the Senator from Georgia.

I had at first intended to speak on the pending proposal. I shall not do so, however, since the subject is so well covered in his masterful address. But I do want to make one observation. I trust it will not be thought that I am guilty of sectionalism to the extent that I want to favor my own section of the country, but I hope that God will give me sufficient strength, when necessary, to protect the section from which I come.

The Senator from Georgia has just said that he did not know what the Secretary of Agriculture might do under this proposed program. Already the Senator from Georgia has referred to the September speech of the Secretary of Agriculture at Fort Worth, Tex. With his permission, I should like to read just a few lines of that speech to further add to the question that he himself raised as to what the Secretary of Agriculture might do under this proposal. I quote from the Fort Worth speech, as follows:

> If consumption of American cotton is to be subsidized, the subsidies ought to be applied to domestic consumption rather than exports. Back in the twenties, American loans to foreign countries which were never paid were in effect generous gifts of cotton and other farm products to those countries. But if any gifts of cotton are going to be made under the present administration, our own people ought to come first. Why not, for once, give our own consumers and our own workers a break?

I think that the Senator has asked a very proper question, and if the Secretary of Agriculture has that speech in mind, or any part of the feeling left from that speech, I am fearful that he might find himself in a very confusing and difficult situation.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, now I come to one further observation which I desire to make. The amendment of the Senator from Alabama, on page 4, contains this provision:

> The Commodity Credit Corporation is authorized and directed under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture to acquire and to make available to him such cotton as may be necessary to make payments in kind authorized by this section.

I invite attention to the language which follows:

> The funds now and hereafter made available to the Commodity Credit Corporation are hereby made available to such Corporation to acquire and make available to the Secretary of Agriculture such cotton as may be necessary to make the payments in kind authorized under this section, and to provide for the release of cotton under this section.

The Commodity Credit Corporation has, as I recall, a capital stock of $100,000,000. It now has a borrowing capacity—that is to say, through the issuance of its notes and debentures—up to $900,000,000. The Commodity Credit Corporation can wipe out its entire capital of a hundred million dollars if the Secretary sees fit to sell 4,000,000 bales of cotton and give 1,000,000 of the 4,000,000 bales as a subsidy payment in kind. It is gone; that is the end of it. The Commodity Credit Corporation, I repeat, has been transferred now to the Department of Agriculture. The Secretary of Agriculture has sole, full plenary power to command it with respect to the release to him of cotton with which to make payments in kind. The Secretary of Agriculture may pay whatever amount he wants to pay, limited only by the top figure that he is authorized to export, to wit, 7,500,000 bales of cotton in any 1 year.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield on that point?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Do I understand the distinguished Senator from Georgia to construe the amendment to mean that the Secretary of Agriculture may spend more in connection with the export subsidy, should it become a law, than the $113,000,000 that is to be appropriated by Congress, plus the $90,000,000 that comes from duties on imports?

Mr. GEORGE. He may pay the subsidies in kind, yes; and every dollar of appropriations the Commodity Credit Corporation now has may be used by the Secretary of Agriculture to provide cotton to be exported, the subsidy on which is to be paid in kind, to wit, in cotton.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to note just a few additional figures. In 1932–33 the United States produced 12,961,000 bales of cotton on a planted acreage of 35,891,000. At the same time foreign countries produced 10,500,000 bales of cotton on a planted acreage of 41,457,000.

In 1938, after our cotton program had been in operation, the United States planted only 25,346,000 acres, or a decrease of more than 10,000,000 acres, while foreign countries increased their plantings to 59,000,000 acres, an increase of 17,000,000 acres.

Mr. President, I desire now to call attention to one further fact. From 1918 to 1938, inclusive, a period of 21 years, cotton grown in the United States and exported into foreign markets brought to the South a total of $14,558,976,000. Fourteen and a half billion dollars were brought to the South from the sale of her cotton in foreign markets; not what she consumed. At the present export rate and at the present price, during a similar period of 21 years, the South will export of her cotton grown in this country only $3,500,000,000 worth—a loss, on the present basis of export and price, of the staggering total of $11,000,000,000 out of the economy of the South.

I am dealing only in facts; and I say that this program, as a cotton program, needs revision. Why? Because we have lost our export markets; because we have lost the great total that went into our economy from the sale of our export cotton; because foreign consumption has steadily gone up, and, despite all we could do in order to give a livable price to our farmers, we have accumulated eleven and a half million bales in Government loan at this moment, on which at this hour we have an actual net loss of $170,000,000.

I voted for these measures, because they were all we could get. I tried to make them as workable as possible; and if we are to continue the program, and the time comes for making another loan, of course the cotton farmer is entitled to the loan. I am not quarreling about that; but what are we proposing now to do? We are proposing now to launch upon one more experiment, upon one more stopgap piece of legislation. We are proposing to launch, moreover, upon a course that means the destruction of American cotton as an article of commerce.

I should be willing to pay the price, let Mr. Wallace export the cotton, and give it away, if it would solve any problem; but it will not solve any problem. It will leave us exactly where we are. If the Secretary of Agriculture is not going to pay for exporting cotton by cotton itself—pay in kind—then we shall not have a bale out of the loan cotton by January 1, 1940, but the Secretary will have spent all the money we have made available to him on shipping American cotton to be sold to foreign spinners and foreign consumers for less than it costs the American spinner living here in the United States. What else will we have done? We will have upset a marketing system which has been built up through a century. We will have depreciated the inventory of every textile mill, cotton merchant, converter, and distributor in America the moment we put this thing into actual effect. Why, since the President made his announcement cotton in the world market has gone down 105 points, or $5.25 a bale. Figure what has been lost on our own eleven and a half million bales by the mere announcement of this program, and the consequent decline in the world market.

It is said, of course—and the amendment before us does have some provisions to that effect—that we will protect our manufacturers, our merchants, our converters, our distributors, by doing what? We cannot do it by raising the tariff. A mere horizontal increase in the tariff by any fixed percentage will not give the American trade any protection, because there are so many low-cost producing countries in the world. No tariff we can impose which will not operate as an embargo against England will even appreciably affect merchandise and textiles manufactured in Japan. You know it, and I know it. So what shall we have to do? If we put this program into effect, we shall have to do, as quickly as we can, three things:

We shall have to raise an embargo against raw cotton coming from Brazil, Peru, Argentina, Egypt, and any other place in the world where raw cotton is grown. We must do it, because the moment we go to subsidizing cotton—and we shall have to subsidize it under the world price to make it move—these foreign cottons can find their way into this market and sell at a profitable price. So we shall have to embargo all our good neighbors down here in South America, and we shall have to raise an embargo against every cotton-producing country, and we shall have to raise an embargo against the reimportation of American cotton which we send out under a subsidy. Even a 2-cent subsidy will carry cotton across the water, bring it back here, and enable the shipper to realize a profit upon it, to say nothing of cotton shipped to Cuba or to Canada or to some other country.

Not only that, but we shall have to impose quotas, the most hateful form of tariff restriction, on every cotton-manufacturing country in the world. All this bill authorizes is quotas. We cannot reduce the quota below 50 percent of what the other countries shipped in here from 1929 to 1932, say, some period long past, but we shall have to raise the quota, because a tariff that will protect against importations from Great Britain will not protect against importations from Germany, another low-cost producing country, nor will it begin to protect against importations from Japan. So we shall have to raise the quota. The United States, which has been preaching the good-neighbor doctrine; the United States, which has been undertaking to pare down the unreasonable tariff structures and the hindrances and restrictions which have operated like physical boulders in the world's highways of commerce and trade during this long post-war period, will have to impose embargoes. We shall have to call upon our country to impose embargoes against South American cotton-producing countries, and embargoes against the reimportation of American cotton, and quotas against every manufacturing country in the world.

Mr. Wallace says that kind of a trade war will be disastrous if continued for any length of time. Certainly it takes no reason to see that it will. What already has happened? Today in Japan, by law, not a pound of cotton may be used by the Japanese people. Every pound of it must be exported in some kind of processed or manufactured form. In Italy and Germany 30 percent or more of every textile cotton product must be an admixture of some synthetic product. We are just entering upon a trade war in a great industry—an industry already staggering under the blows it has received—and we are doing nothing by this process except to afford a mere stopgap. All that it can hope to do is to stop any more cotton from going under the loan unless the Secretary of Agriculture is going to export cotton in large quantities and pay for it in kind, as I have already pointed out.

Mr. President, cotton has always been a legitimate article of foreign trade and commerce. It has never been used as a political weapon, it has never been used as an economic weapon, and no other country has ever used it against us, and no other producing country is now even talking of using it as a weapon against us. We are to bear the stigma through all time of being the very first country on the globe to convert a great article of commerce, an article which has furnished us the balance of trade through a long period of time, into a weapon of economic warfare.

And for what purpose? The remedy for the difficulty confronting us is simple, but the remedy is not to be found and will never be found in any artificial program which pegs cotton to the American consumer and housewife above the world price. The moment that is done, the use of every known or knowable substitute for cotton is invited. Use of rayon is increased, the use of which is already rapidly growing, and the use of all kinds of synthetic fibers and natural fibers is increased. The moment the true competitive price of cotton in the American market is dislocated, there is set on foot, or given greater impetus, a process already going on which ultimately may destroy the cotton industry itself, if it is not stopped, and that is the competition of these competitive and unsatisfactory synthetic fibers. The only way to meet that competition is to let the American cotton go to the free market and let it bring what it will. Give the American manufacturer, the American converter, the American processor, the American merchant—give the American citizen the chance by fair competition to meet and to overcome the competitive fiber. In no other way can the matter be handled satisfactorily.

I know very well that the distinguished Senator from Alabama, my good friend, will say that we are going to give to our manufacturer the same subsidy on his exports. He did have 10 percent of his production once in exports; that is to say, about 6 or 7 percent, or 10 percent at the highest, of all the products manufactured in the United States from cotton went into the foreign market. The amount is now down below 2 percent. It is around 1 percent. It practically has reached the vanishing point.

The same law was in effect which we are now asked to think will give the American manufacturer a chance to hold the foreign market. He is out of the foreign market—and make no mistake about that—the moment his competitor living in the foreign market is subsidized. The same provision was in the old N. R. A. law. It was said, "It does not make any difference about the labor costs going up and hours being shortened, the same provision of law is here to give you ample protection."

We know what happened. Throughout the turbulent life of the N. R. A., and down to within a few days of its actual passage from this earth, one single, insignificant item made of American cotton had been given some slight protection against foreign competition—to wit, cotton cloth rugs. It would be months and months and months, it would take a long time for any tariff commission to figure out how much the quota of Japan, how much the quota of Germany, how much the quota of Italy, how much the quota of Great Britain, how much the quota of any manufacturing country would have to be cut down in order to even save the semblance of a world market to the American manufacturer of cotton cloth or cotton goods of any kind. His market under this system is gone. The market in this country is seriously threatened because of the prospect of the certain and absolute increase of the use of substitute fibers and substitute products, if the producer's price is put out of line with the price paid by his competitors in other parts of the world.

The simple remedy is to let cotton find its true competitive position. Let it go into the world market, and then let us pay what ever subsidy or bounty we should pay to the actual producer of American cotton. It is simple. It will not cost the Government any more than we are paying out annually to the American cotton farmer.

My candid judgment is that if we let cotton go into the free market, and market in an orderly way over a period of time the cotton held by the Commodity Credit Corporation at the rate of 100,000 or 150,000 bales a month, the world price of cotton will come somewhere near the minimum loan price of 52 percent of parity which may be fixed on American cotton. But tie it up, peg the American price, give a subsidy to the foreign producer, create a price system in this artificial way, cripple the American manufacturer in his daily, constant fight against substitutes here at home—tie it up in that way and cotton will go back into the loan, and the Secretary of Agriculture will be compelled to resort to the extraordinary provisions of the law, export cotton in kind, and pay the subsidy in cotton or kind in order to get rid of it.

Mr. President, just one more word and I shall conclude. No subsidy paid in 1939 is going to result in moving any cotton out of the United States except into the hands or warehouses of speculative buyers. I am not saying what it might do in 1940 and 1941 and 1942, but so far as 1939 is concerned, no appreciable amount of cotton, no material part of our cotton, will be sold in foreign commerce under a subsidy unless the subsidy is sufficiently large to induce the speculators to buy up cotton and hold it over our heads in the foreign market. I am so sure of this that I regret that the hour is upon us when many Senators are at lunch, because I should like to expand this thought, but I will not expand it at this time beyond this statement. Cotton in the South Temperate Zone is already coming on the market. Cotton south of the Equator is already coming on the market. It is made. It is matured. It has already been planted. It is there. It will go into the market and cut down under any reasonable subsidy we may authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to pay. The cotton in Brazil, Peru, in the Argentine, in Egypt, the cotton everywhere in the world now ready for the market, already made or fast maturing, is going to find a market in the world market in 1939, and the subsidy, if it is to be effective at all, will have to be large enough to induce the cotton speculators of foreign countries, and the speculators in our own country who have warehouse facilities abroad, to buy the cotton, so far as the 1939 crop is concerned.

South Temperate Zone producers are marketing while our cotton is growing in the North Temperate Zone. Theirs is made, or so far matured that they cannot reduce. They will sell it in the market, and the only chance there will be for the sale of any appreciable amount in 1939 under a subsidy is to make the subsidy sufficiently large to be attractive to the speculative buyers.

And then what? American cotton will be transferred into the warehouses of foreign countries to be held over the American farmer's head as a cudgel with which to destroy him. Nothing good can come of the proposal. It is intended simply as a stopgap. It is not even a good stopgap. It is utterly futile and useless so far as solving any problem in connection with the present crop is concerned. All it can do is to abandon every principle for which the Democratic Party has stood; to invoke embargoes against our helpless neighbors in South America, raise embargoes against the reimportation of our own cotton from warehouses outside the United States, and impose quotas upon every manufacturing country in the world. Will not the Democratic Party present a magnificent and beautiful picture as it comes before the electorate for election in 1940, saying, "Look what we have done! We have sold cotton to the spinners of Great Britain and of France and of Germany and of Italy, and even of Japan"—make no mistake, they will get our cotton—"we have sold it to them cheaper than we would sell it to our own American spinners. We have sold cotton goods, when that cotton has been processed, to the citizens of Japan and of Germany and of Italy and of England and of France and of Russia, cheaper than we can sell it to our own American men and women who need cotton and who ought to have it."

Mr. President, the proposition seems to me so full of possibilities of harm to a great industry that the Senate of the United States should not for a moment consider passing upon it until the fullest opportunity, after days and days, if necessary, even weeks, of hearings have been conducted before a legislative committee of this body.

Mr. President, let me say, as I conclude my remarks, that the cotton problem today has become an industrial and trade problem of the first magnitude. It is now clearly apparent that if we are to save the cotton farmer we must first save cotton as an article of commerce and consumption. Our loan policies have contributed undoubtedly toward our present complicated situation. Conceived as a friendly action toward cotton, they nevertheless have worked out as its enemy. The continuance of this loan plan with an exaggeration of its worst features is welded immutably into the cotton subsidy program. Each damns the other, to use the language of a distinguished man in the industry, and together they constitute the most ingenious dual contrivance yet devised for the destruction of the southern cotton industry.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HILL in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. GEORGE. I will yield to the Senator. I am about to yield the floor.

Mr. LEE. I desire to address a few questions to the Senator, if the Senator will be patient enough. Do I understand that the Senator is opposed to subsidizing the export of cotton, either of the new crop or of the cotton on hand?

Mr. GEORGE. I am. But I can see more reason for exporting the crop already accumulated.

Mr. LEE. Of the two, the Senator would prefer that as the lesser of two evils, as he sees the situation?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes. I think the Senator from Oklahoma correctly states my view with respect to the situation, although I do not see a great difference as to which is exported.

Mr. LEE. If the Congress should take no action at all, does the Senator think that as matters now stand the export of the cotton which is on hand could be subsidized without any further legislation?

Mr. GEORGE. No; I do not think the cotton on hand could be subsidized without further legislation.

Mr. LEE. The Senator suggested that this proposal was a stopgap. If the cotton on hand is subsidized, or if the new crop is subsidized, in either case I understand the Senator from Georgia does not believe that it is in any way a solution of the farm problem or the cotton situation?

Mr. GEORGE. I do not. I am perfectly sure that it is not a solution.

Mr. LEE. The Senator expressed the belief that if cotton were allowed to flow in the natural channels of trade, without a loan provision, it would not be considered dumping by other nations.

Mr. GEORGE. No; it would not be. It could not be.

Mr. LEE. And that it would not accumulate if there were no Government loans on it?

Mr. GEORGE. I am sure it would not.

Mr. LEE. The Senator expressed the thought that the Government should help the cotton farmers.

Mr. GEORGE. Exactly.

Mr. LEE. On what basis should that help be?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I did not want to go into too prolonged a discussion, but I would be perfectly willing to take what has been called the domestic allotment plan, as the Senator from Oklahoma himself has presented it. I think it is sound. That plan would not interfere with the flow of cotton into the normal channels of trade. But the benefit payments, whether we call them bounties, or equalizing fees, or what not, would go directly to the producer, to the farmer. I think that is entirely sound. Not only is it entirely sound, but I think it is absolutely necessary if, after so much loss in American acreage and in production, and so much increase in acreage and production in foreign cotton-producing countries, we are now to regain our normal competitive position in the world cotton market.

Mr. LEE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. GEORGE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BROWN in the chair). Ninety-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, I am very much at a loss in my own mind to know how to vote on this particular question because I am not sure whether we should subsidize the export of the new crop, or the old crop, or whether we should subsidize the export of either. The situation is bad every way we turn. It is like the old story of the two fellows who were crossing a pasture. A bull chased them, and one of them reached a tree and climbed up the tree. The other man did not have time to climb the tree. He was just two jumps ahead of the bull. He went on past the tree and found a hole into which he ducked, and the bull shot past over him. As soon as the bull passed over, he popped up out of the hole again. The bull turned around and made another charge at him, and he ducked down into the hole again. About the third time, the fellow in the tree called to him and said, "You fool! You had better stay in that hole. That bull will kill you." The next time the fellow came up out of the hole he replied: "Who is doing this? There is a bear in that hole." [Laughter.]

In the case of cotton we have a bull on the one hand and a bear on the other. The very situation we are facing today is the best proof I know of the failure of the present farm program.

No name in this day stands higher in relation to aid for agriculture than that of our able and distinguished colleague, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], who is working on the program and doing his dead level best to do what is best for the farmer and for the cotton situation which confronts us. No one in this body or out of it could doubt the sincerity of the men working on the problem. However, I cannot neglect this opportunity to impress upon the Senate that we have before us but another proof of the failure of the present farm program.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, we all realize that the 12,000,000 bales of surplus cotton in the hands of the Government are a millstone around the neck of the entire American cotton-production industry. I have listened to the various arguments, and the question in my mind is, Would the proposed amendment, if passed, bring about a very great reduction in the surplus? If I thought it would, I would certainly vote for it. However, I am not convinced at this time that it would bring about a very great reduction in the surplus.

Will the Senator address himself to that question for just a moment? I should like to have his views on the question. The Senator has studied the problem of cotton as only the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] have studied it. I should like to have the Senator's views.

Mr. LEE. I shall be glad to yield to any other Senator who will answer the question just propounded to me. I do not pretend to have the answer to that question. Two years ago on the floor of the Senate, with all the vigor and energy which I possessed, I opposed the enactment of the law which has resulted in this very situation.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. How can the Senator from Oklahoma take that position when in 1938, while we were considering the farm bill, we were confronted with the same surplus which is now giving us so much difficulty? In other words, the surplus has not been caused by virtue of the present law. It existed before the law went into effect.

Mr. LEE. The type of program which we have had for several years was similar. That program was one of the proofs which was convincing to me 2 years ago that a continuation of the same type of program would result in an even worse situation, and the present argument on the floor of the Senate is ample justification for that conclusion. As long as we have a program which does not guarantee the farmer a fair price for that portion of his commodity which is consumed in this country, and then allow him freedom to produce above that amount, we shall always be confronted with low farm prices; and the inevitable result is that we go to the R. F. C. and ask them to make loans on that farm commodity to keep the farmer from having to sell it below the cost of production. If all the money we have spent trying to help the farmer had been paid to him on that part of the commodity consumed in this country, and the rest of his commodity had been allowed to flow in the channels of trade, we would not have a staggering surplus on our hands today. The farmer would have had the money just the same. He would have had an income sufficient to have carried him through, the same as he has at the present time, but we would not have had an embarrassing surplus of cotton.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. Of course, the Senator knows that my views are in accord with his as to the importance of having a two-price system for the benefit of all lines of American agriculture unless we wish to create a class or caste system which will perpetually doom the farmer to a lower standard of living and a lower income than that enjoyed by all lines of industrial labor and by capital by virtue of the various artificial devices which have been created to permit a higher price in the domestic market. Of course, the Senator realizes that the amendment could not be considered as a large approach to the farm problem and the difficulties which he outlines; but the principal opposition to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama centers around the fact that it does establish a two-price system. That is the principal argument raised against it. It establishes one price for cotton in the United States, at a slightly higher cost to the American mills and the American consumer than the price abroad. One of the reasons why I am supporting the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] is because of the fact that it does recognize that the American farmer cannot indefinitely buy in a protected market while selling his commodity at the lower world figure.

Mr. LEE. That is correct. I thank the Senator from Georgia for his contribution. My inclination is to support the pending proposal on the very grounds which the able Senator from Georgia has just expressed. However, I am addressing myself to the proposition that regardless of the disposition we make of the pending amendment of the Senator from Alabama, we shall still be confronted with an unsolved farm problem. A year from now those of us who will be here then will be struggling with another appropriation coming from the same subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, of which the able Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] is chairman, in an effort to take care of the farmer by a stopgap method, without any permanent solution in sight or any permanent program designed to prevent the recurrence year after year of a situation such as now confronts us.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEE. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. ELLENDER. The Senator from Oklahoma has a bill now pending before the Congress wherein he proposes to pay to the cotton farmer at the rate of 20 cents a pound for all the cotton that is domestically consumed. Assuming that the Senator's bill should pass and that the cotton farmers would be permitted to plant all the cotton they desired over and above that which is consumed domestically, how would the Senator dispose of the present surplus? In other words, would he not be confronted with the same situation that confronted the proponents of the existing farm law?

Mr. LEE. I may say to my good friend the brilliant young Senator from Louisiana that, to speak facetiously, after all, it is not a responsibility on my shoulder to take care of the "dead cats" of the past mistakes.

Mr. ELLENDER. But the "dead cats" were there when we passed the farm bill.

Mr. LEE. Not quite so many of them.

Mr. ELLENDER. There were just about the same number, because the surplus was there when the Farm Act was passed in February 1938. At that time virtually the same amount of cotton was on hand.

Mr. LEE. I realize that, and, to answer my friend in a little more honest manner and a little more frankly, let me say there is a provision, which I have not as yet introduced but which I have prepared for the domestic allotment bill, which would allow a certain percentage of the surplus that is now on hand to be allotted to the farmer as a part of his domestic allotment until the present surplus has been consumed or until a sufficient amount of it has been consumed domestically so that the remainder may be fed into the export trade.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. Would the Senator give it to the farmer, or who would have title to it?

Mr. LEE. I will state how the provision would operate. For instance, suppose Farmer Brown has been allotted 10 bales of cotton as his share of the domestic market; 9 bales could be new cotton produced by him this year, 1 bale, say, if 10 percent is the amount that is to be allotted from the cotton on hand, would be allotted to him, and he would be paid the difference between the world price of 8 cents and the domestic price, whatever it would be—20 cents is what the bill provides—or 12 cents a pound, and the processor would have to pay for that cotton 20 cents a pound.

Mr. ELLENDER. Who would bear that expense?

Mr. LEE. The consumer would bear it, as the consumer bears the expense of everything that is protected by the tariff.

Mr. ELLENDER. How would the Government be compensated for the vast amount of money that it now has loaned against the cotton?

Mr. LEE. As soon as the Government sold that bale of cotton to the processor the processor would pay the Government 20 cents a pound. Then the Government would pay 12 cents a pound to the farmer to whom it had been allotted, and take the other 8 cents to reimburse itself for the loan it had made on that cotton.

Mr. ELLENDER. How long does the Senator think would be required to dispose of the 14,000,000 bales we now have on hand under the suggestion he has just made?

Mr. LEE. It would not take as long as it will a year from now if we continue the same kind of program we are now following.

Mr. President, the present plan is based upon acreage allotment, which is not a fair criterion. In some places it takes 16 acres of land planted to cotton to make one bale; in other places 1 acre planted to cotton will make one bale. Yet we have acreage as a criterion for allotments. That is the old William Jennings Bryan ratio of 16 to 1. Some farmers have upland acres, several of which are required to make one bale, while others have irrigated land of which 1 acre will make two bales. So acreage is not a fair criterion.

Now let me show how unfairly it works in the States of Oklahoma and Texas. I have here a chart entitled "United States Cotton Production in 1930 to 1937 by States." The first 4-year period is from 1930 to 1933, and the yearly average of cotton production in the United States is broken down according to States. The next 4-year period is from 1934 to 1937 when the acreage reduction program was under way. During the 4-year period from 1934 to 1937, while we were under a program of acreage reduction in the production of cotton, with a program of allotment by acres, seven States actually increased their production. In the Southeastern States, where fertilizer can be used, the farmers, by intensive farming methods and the application of fertilizer, actually reduced their acreage but increased their production. That cannot be done in Oklahoma where the land is so fertile that fertilizer is not needed; in fact, in some places our soil is so rich that if some of the other States had it they would sack it up and sell it for fertilizer. So in Oklahoma production cannot be increased, for the hazard there is lack of rainfall.

The result was in the 4 years from 1934 to 1937 the reduction in production of cotton in two States, Oklahoma and Texas, was greater than the total national reduction. The seven following States increased their production: Arizona, California, Mississippi, Louisiana, Missouri, New Mexico, and South Carolina.

In the entire United States the total annual decrease in cotton production for the 4-year period from 1934 to 1937 was 1,326,447 bales. That was the total national reduction. But Oklahoma and Texas suffered an annual decrease for that same period of 1,839,596 bales. During the same period two States decreased their production more than all the other cotton-producing States combined. Those figures show how unfair and how unjust any plan is that is based upon acreage reduction. A drought happened to occur in our part of the country at that time and reduced our production.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] well said that in either case the pending proposal is a stopgap. The able Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] himself admits that to be so; but he is simply making an effort to meet an existing situation. Regardless of what cause brought it about, it is confronting us today, and he is giving his best efforts to find a method of meeting it. I wish to impress upon the Members of this body that if the present situation were met we would still have no satisfactory farm program.

Have we not already experimented long enough? After the farmers have been told, "You cut down your acreage to the amount we tell you, and we will do our best to give you parity prices," then, after that happens, and we have the prices that we have today of 8-cent cotton—and it would be lower than that except for the loan—and 50-cent wheat—and it would be lower than that except for the export subsidy on it—after the farmers have done their part—and they have—I say it is time for us to shift gears and to try a program that is based upon logic and reason. That is a program that contemplates two markets, the home market and the foreign market; a program that recognizes a home-consuming public and a foreign export outlet. We must consider legislation for the farm problem that will divide home consumption from export trade, and treat them separately, or we will be faced with this problem every year.

Suppose next fall cotton is low, and we have the same situation that we now have, and I see that the cotton farmer is faced with the necessity of selling his cotton below the cost of production: I will join hands with other Senators and ask for some relief. If the only relief we can get is to ask the R. F. C. again to make loans on cotton, or to carry out the provisions of the present law and continue to lend on cotton, it will mean that we shall continue to accumulate these embarrassing surpluses, and the Government will continue to carry the load as long as it can. Some day, however, we shall reach the breaking point. The accumulation of waters behind the dam some day will top the dam and go out with destruction, and the result will be disastrous not only to the cotton industry but to the Nation itself. Yet the most we are considering here is a temporary stopgap. We are not even considering a permanent program to solve the situation, to prevent it from recurring again and again.

There are, before this body and before Congress, and there have been for some time, numbers of proposals, any one of which is based upon more logic than this one of control. I voted for the present act, but not until I had offered substitutes for the undesirable portion, which is the control feature. If it were necessary to have control, and if we could not give the farmer relief in any other way except by control, then I should say, "Go ahead and have control"; but it is not necessary. The intent and purpose of control is to limit the amount on which we guarantee the farmer fair prices, so that we may make good that guarantee. But if we limit that amount to the amount consumed in this country, we can make good the guarantee of better prices on that amount, and then remove the control from the farmer, so that he may produce what he wishes to produce above that amount.

The farmer never has had a chance to choose between profitable cotton and unprofitable cotton. How do you know he would plow up the face of the earth, as has been charged? Two years ago, when we considered the agricultural appropriation bill, I presented the argument on the floor of the Senate that the farmer would regulate his own production. The argument was raised on the other side that if he did that, other nations would accuse us of dumping. Now, from the same source that that argument came is coming a plea that we subsidize, by cash payments, exports of cotton—rather reversing, it seems to me, the attitude of the administration and the Department of Agriculture on that very question.

If the farmer knows that all the cotton he produces is going to be low in price, he increases his production. Why? In order to meet certain fixed charges that he must meet, such as interest on his mortgage and taxes on his farm. Those charges are fixed. They do not rise and fall with the rise and fall of the price of cotton. Cotton may go to 5 cents a pound, but the farmer's taxes still stay up at $100 or $200, or whatever the amount is. Cotton may go to 5 cents a pound, but the farmer's interest still stays up at 6 percent, and that is a fixed charge. In order to meet that fixed charge, the farmer realizes the necessity of increasing his production of cotton. The lower it is, the more he must raise to meet the fixed charges. The result of that has been that the lower cotton goes, the more we produce. But once give the farmer a chance to choose between profitable and unprofitable cotton, guarantee him a fair price on the part of the cotton that we use in this country, and allot him his share of the home market, and then he will have enough income from the profitable cotton so that he will say to himself, "It will not be necessary now for me to increase my production."

What would happen under a program like that? Suppose a farmer had an allotment of 20 bales of cotton, and suppose he raised 30 bales of cotton. Suppose the price on the 20 bales for home consumption is 20 cents a pound; suppose the price on the other 10 bales is 6 cents a pound, and he has the privilege of taking the 10-bale surplus to town and selling it for 6 cents a pound or taking it to his shed and putting it in his shed on his farm and holding it, with a promise written into the law that next year he may turn it in as part of his domestic allotment and receive 20 cents a pound for it. Except for unusual circumstances, he would take the extra 10 bales of cotton to his shed and put it in the shed and keep it there as a backlog. It would be as good as a bank account to him.

Then, Senators, instead of the surplus of cotton in the United States accumulating in warehouses, where the cotton brokers and speculators can know exactly how much surplus cotton there is, so that they can gamble on the cotton market to the confusion of business and to the loss of the farmer himself—instead of that they would not know how much surplus there would be, and the surplus, when hidden away on the farms, would not depress the market so much as the surplus depresses the market when it is accumulated in the warehouses.

Then suppose the world market should advance to some extent and go to 8 cents. The farmer then would have the privilege of taking the surplus 10 bales to town and selling it, or perhaps he would need only a little money and he would take one bale at a time and sell it. Thus the farmers themselves, through a voluntary method they have never before had a chance to enjoy, would regulate their own production and feed the surplus into the world market as the world market could absorb it in an orderly, systematic fashion.

Of course, if the world market should advance, the farmer might say to himself, "I will increase my production this year and average my price. I will get 20 cents a pound for my share of the domestic market, and then I will take my chances in the world market." If we should pass legislation like that, we would then put the farmer on notice that "all you raise above your domestic allotment will be sold or kept by you. The Government will not lend you money on it. You must take your chances in the world market, and either sell it at the world market price level or take it home and keep it"; and if cotton went so low that the farmer could not even sell it, he would have no alternative but to keep it. But if we were guaranteeing the farmer a fair and reasonable price on the part of his commodity that we use in this country, he would still have enough income to live on.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. Is the able Senator from Oklahoma referring to the amendment offered last year by himself and to a similar one offered by former Senator McAdoo?

Mr. LEE. That is correct. The two propositions were fundamentally similar in that both of them recognized the necessity of dealing with two separate markets, as we do in the case of everything else in the United States except farm commodities.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator pardon me further?

Mr. LEE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. ASHURST. As I understand, under the proposition last year, the farmer was at liberty to plant whatever he pleased.

Mr. LEE. That is correct.

Mr. ASHURST. His liberty was not restricted, but the Government guaranteed him a price only as to home consumption.

Mr. LEE. That is correct.

Mr. ASHURST. And if he wished to speculate as to what might happen to the remainder, that was his right and privilege. Is that correct?

Mr. LEE. That is correct. The farmer was put on the same basis as industrial production.

Today if a manufacturer wants to sell the same kind of cultivator in Australia for $26 which he sells in the United States for $48, he has that privilege. I do not know about cultivators, but as to most manufactured articles that is actually done. In order to permit manufacturers to clear their warehouses of surplus goods, we have allowed them to enjoy that privilege. No one has argued this season that such a program would be dumping in the foreign markets, but 2 years ago it was argued that such a program would be dumping and that it would result in antidumping laws on the part of other nations.

In the first place, I believe that if the United States did not subsidize the surplus farm commodities, no nation could accuse us of dumping; but, certainly, when we accumulate a surplus due to the present program, and then try to unload it by financing it, they do not have to accuse us of dumping; we ourselves admit that it is dumping. But if, when the farmer is ready to sell, we let him sell if he can get a buyer, then let that buyer sell to a country if he can get a buyer, that is not dumping; that is merely selling our commodities to those who would buy; and there would be no retaliation, in my opinion, on the part of other countries if such a course were followed. Certainly they could not accuse us of dumping if we were merely trying to regain our foreign trade, and we have a long way to go before we regain that trade. No one could accuse us of dumping when we were merely trying to regain the foreign market in cotton which we have lost due to a program of control, and then lending on the crop, trying to raise the farmer's price. There was an implication to the farmer that "If you cut your acreage as we tell you to we will pay you parity prices for the commodities you raise on the reduced acreage." The farmer has done his part. Have we done ours? Are we within hailing distance of doing our part? Here we are considering the largest farm appropriation ever presented to this body. Is money to be appropriated in order to pay parity to the farmer? Certainly not. Is it not to provide about 75 percent of parity? Is not that about correct, I ask the chairman of the subcommittee?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, we hope that farm prices will not go any lower, so that this will at least enable the farmer to obtain 75 percent of parity.

Mr. LEE. Seventy-five percent?

Mr. RUSSELL. Of course, if farm prices should increase, the farmer would still not receive full parity, unless the market price were full parity, because if the commodity sells for 75 percent of parity the farmer does not receive any payment under the terms of this provision.

Mr. LEE. In other words, if prices do not go any lower, and we pass this appropriation, then we will have kept 75 percent of our word to the farmer, we will have kept faith with him to the extent of 75 percent of our implied agreement.

Mr. RUSSELL. I might state that the 75 percent would also include the $500,000,000 which is paid the farmer for soil-conserving practices, money he is supposed to earn by virtue of work he does on his farm in preserving that great natural resource. This appropriation added to the present market price would not nearly approximate 75 percent of parity.

Mr. LEE. I thank the Senator, and I wish to say by way of parenthesis that the farmers fully approve the soil-conservation program. No doubt we can make minor improvements and changes in the law. The farmer is perfectly willing to comply with rules laid down by the Department of Agriculture so far as preserving the fertility of the soil is concerned. The soil-conservation program is one constructive contribution we have made.

Let me tell how the present plan will work and the only way it will work. If we cut the farmer's acreage so that he will produce no more than enough to supply the consumption in this country, then if we pass tariff laws so that no other country can ship any commodities into this country to compete with the farmer's commodities in the United States, we can reduce the supply to such an extent that the demand will force the price to parity. But we will have surrendered all of our foreign markets, and the farmer will have surrendered his independence, and be farming a little patch of land which, compared with the rest of his farm, will be a mere garden patch.

I did not know that was the future desired for America. I think that is a narrow vision. We taught Russia how to farm on a grand scale. We even sold the Russians some power machinery. We are selling some to other nations today. We are shipping certified cottonseed all over the cotton world today. We teach the foreigners to farm, we sell them power machinery, we sell them certified seed, and then we bow out of the picture and give them the world market. The next legislation we will be considering if we do not watch out will be tariff legislation to keep their crops from coming into this country in competition with our crops in the United States.

Mr. President, the farmer knows more about farming than anyone else does, regardless of how much we learn in books. I have seen certain fellows trying to make the farmer learn how to farm better, and I once heard an old farmer say, "I am not farming as good as I know how now. I cannot; I haven't the capital."

There is much truth in that. But I heard one of these fellows telling the farmers how to make two blades of grass grow where one had grown, a kind of a book farmer. "Yes," he said, "there is nothing I enjoy better on a bright sunshiny morning than to put on a pair of overalls and go out in the apple orchard and eat apples." Yes; but it takes more than eating apples to make a success on the farm. It takes work, the hardest work anyone ever did.

I used to work for an old farmer, and he gave me only one meal a day, but he gave me two at night—if my colleagues know what I mean. I never worked so hard in my life; and farmers work that way all the time. They get up before sunrise, they go out and feed the stock so that the stock will be ready to work, and right after they eat breakfast they go to their work and continue until dark. They return in the evening and put up the teams by lantern light, then they come in and eat by lamplight and go to bed. They do that day after day, month after month, 365 days in the year. Where there is livestock they work on Sunday, because the livestock have to be fed and cared for on Sunday the same as on any other day.

Then will anyone tell me that the farmer, who works like that to produce cotton, if we give him a certain amount of the domestic market which he can produce on a profitable basis, will use the money he gets for the profitable cotton to raise unprofitable cotton? Does anyone think he will dissipate his profits just for the fun of raising unprofitable cotton? The farmer is not so foolish as that, and he is not going to do that. He will plant just enough to allow for a drought or for the grasshoppers. Of course, the grasshoppers do not bother cotton, but they eat up other crops.

A few years ago the grasshoppers were out on my place, and they were eating up everything. I had just planted some alfalfa and it was coming up, a fine stand, when the grasshoppers hit it. I said to Mrs. Love, the wife of the man who was on the place, "Drive the turkeys down there." She had 500 of the finest turkeys one ever saw. She drove them down there, and it was not long before those turkeys did not have a feather left on them; the grasshoppers had stripped them. [Laughter.] Sometimes the grasshoppers eat up the wheat, sometimes the grasshoppers eat up the alfalfa, and sometimes the boll weevils get the cotton. Sometimes in a cotton district the boll weevils eat up everything but the mortgage. [Laughter.]

Yet the farmer has to compete with all that. The farmer has to buck the weather, he has to buck the insects, he has to buck the market. We cannot compare the regulation of a farm product with the regulation of the product of a steel mill. The Bethlehem Steel mills can tell today exactly how many tons of steel they will produce a year from today. The farmer cannot tell how much cotton he will plant, even, because I have seen it so wet that he could not get into the field to plow, and I have seen it so dry that he could not get a plow into the ground. He cannot tell how much he will plant, much less how much he will harvest. Then how is it possible to put agriculture on the same basis with industry?

Besides that, a few men control the output of steel, whereas the farmers are individualists; and I want them to remain individualists. We cannot merge them together so that they will act as one man, as is done in the steel industry, as is done in the manufacture of farm implements, as is done in a packing industry. Four big packers control the price of meat. A private telephone line runs from Chicago down to the Oklahoma City stockyards. Every morning that wire is hot because the big boss in Chicago is telling the buyers in Oklahoma City how much they shall pay for beef and for pork and for mutton on that day. A few men regulate the price in the packing industry. A few men regulate the price of oil, regulate the price of gasoline, regulate the price of steel. The farmer cannot do that.

In the agricultural field we have a plan. It is intended to tell the farmer how much he is to produce, and if he produces just a certain amount the price is going to be fixed by the law of supply and demand. It works only in those industries where it can be determined in advance how much the output will be. The farmer cannot do that. The farmer, who has to work so hard to scratch a living out of the ground, is not going to raise surplus crops if the price of those crops is below the cost of production.

Take wheat, for instance. We consume about 80 percent of our wheat crop in the United States; sometimes more. If that 80 percent were divided among all the wheat farmers, and each farmer was allotted his share of that domestic market, and that share was allotted in bushels and not in acres, the Government would say, "We will guarantee you a fair price on that amount of wheat by means of price fixing or some other method of law." Let us say the guaranty is on a thousand bushels. He would know then that on that 1,000 bushels he would have a profit, but he would know that it would be necessary for him to sell all the rest above that on the world market, and that he would be facing the possibility of selling that wheat for 35 cents a bushel. He would plant only enough wheat to be sure that he raises a thousand bushels, or his domestic allotment. He would plant a margin, of course, to allow for a bad crop year. If he raised 1,200 bushels he very likely would sell the 1,000 bushels to the domestic market. He would take the other 200 bushels and put them in a bin or a granary, and keep it on his farm, because he could feed his stock from it. Then next year if he had a failure in his wheat crop he could put the 200 bushels in as his part of the domestic allotment and receive the domestic price for it.

The same would hold good with respect to cotton. The farmer would not raise much cotton at the world market price. He would not plant more than enough to allow for a bad year. But that plan would allow us an exportable surplus that would flow into the market all the year with an even flow and it would work automatically. It would not be necessary then for us to come back and reach down into the Treasury every year and take money out and hand it to the farmer. I am glad to do it this year because we do not have any program that will take the money to him in other ways. Therefore the plan is necessary now. That is the reason I am making the argument for a permanent farm program that will work without the continual tax, appropriate, and give.

Mr. President, there are big farmers who do not need help nearly so much as the little farmers. A farm program of the kind that most Senators have in mind they would like to support is one which will take care of the little farmer, of the family farmer, the man who farms a family size farm, the man who farms it with his family and for his family, the man who educates his children from the income from that farm, the man who makes the farm a home.

Mr. President, we find a rather desolate looking landscape when we go out in some parts of the United States and see an old windmill, a few corner posts of an old fence, an old house with the windows and the doors nailed up. We think to ourselves, "That used to be a home." We see where there was once a garden, where they raised the vegetables to supply their table. We see all of that deserted and every acre of that farm put in cotton or every acre of that farm put in wheat. We go past the next quarter section, and we see the place where the home once stood is now deserted. We see old and dilapidated buildings. We go to the third quarter section, and we find the same thing. Then we go to the fourth quarter section, and we see some big power machinery, a big tractor and a combine, and that tells the story. One man with power machinery is farming the farms that were once farmed by four families. He is farming a whole section today; and the families that lived on those sections, where are they? They are over in town on W. P. A., those who can get over to town and on the W. P. A. And here are the homes, the ghosts of what were once homes and the security of America. So that is a desolate sight. It illustrates the tendency in America, because the big farmer is putting the little farmer out of business, and the present farm plan is helping to do it. I should say that it is not doing anything to prevent it.

The present farm plan, through soil-conservation payments, is still paying unconscionably big payments to the big plantations, to the syndicated farms, whereas the average payment to the farmer is less than $100. Ninety-two percent of the farmers in soil conservation receive less than $100, and some of the big plantation farmers are receiving checks running up into the thousands of dollars.

We must take care of the family farmer, the little farmer. There is nothing in the provision of the present plan that is very helpful to the little farmer. Oh, there is an exemption,

I believe, of 5 acres, which, as I said a while ago, might produce 15 bales of cotton or might produce 1 bale of cotton. But that is not taking care of the little farmer.

If we have a program of allotment that would allot to each farmer his share of the domestic market, and exempt the little farmer up to a certain amount of his normal previous production, thereby giving much more of the domestic market to the little farmer, allowing the big farmer still to retain the world's market, then we would be making headway toward helping the family-sized farm, toward helping the little farmer support his family. Then we would be making it possible for the farmer to live on a 160-acre farm, or whatever size unit will support a family in the different communities. We would see some of these deserted farms rehabilitated if we give more and more of the domestic market at a fair American price to the little farmer, thereby giving less and less to the big farmer. Soon some of those farms that are now being operated on a big scale would be for sale to the little family-sized farmers and they could buy them, and we would see those farms rehabilitated. We would see those deserted houses once more made habitable, and then there would be a demand for repairs, and that would make trade, and we would expand our market at home.

Mr. President, we have never scratched the surface of our market at home. Dr. Seiberling of the Department of Agriculture in 1935 made a survey of the United States, and he reported that if all the people in the United States had a balanced ration, in other words had enough to eat, it would require 42,000,000 more acres in cultivation to supply that amount of food. Therefore am I harsh if I suggest that to me it appears almost immoral to deliberately reduce the food supply in the United States when there are hungry people in the United States, when the Department of Agriculture's own survey shows that it would take 42,000,000 more acres in cultivation to supply the needs of the hungry people within our own borders?

I never have subscribed to the theory of overproduction. There has been no overproduction as I see it. It has been and still is underconsumption, and if every hungry mouth were fed today it would dissipate the so-called surplus of our food supply. If every hungry child received a full bottle of milk every day, the dairy industry would boom. If every child who is half clad had a good pair of jeans or a good calico dress, much of the cotton surplus about which we are so concerned today would be absorbed.

Why do we go on and on without a program for the farmers? Our party platform pledged us to a program; and I think that after we have tried a program which results in more embarrassing problems than we had even when we started, we should not persist in following such a program. Enough Members of this body would vote for a domestic-allotment program of some kind to pass it, if we could ever obtain a fair test or a vote on the question. Two years ago some 40 Senators voted for the McAdoo-Eicher bill. Some of them, of course, were voicing a protest against a program of control.

The problem is one of distribution and not curtailment. I congratulate the Secretary of Agriculture upon his efforts along that line and his experiments with the stamp program, whereby certain persons on relief will be given part of their payment in stamps, which will be good in exchange for certain food commodities, and perhaps clothing commodities as well. Certain foods of which there is a superabundance in the United States today will be put on the list which can be exchanged for the stamps. That plan is all right.

The proper way to approach the problem is to raise the purchasing power of the 30,000,000 people in the farm group. They would then have enough money to exchange at the grocery store for food commodities without the necessity of putting the price down through a stamp arrangement. I am in favor of the stamp program, because it is better than nothing, but the other is the proper way. Under the other plan the groceryman would have only one price for his goods, and he would sell to anybody who had the money. If we raise the income of the farm group by guaranteeing the American farmer the American market at an American price, he can buy what he needs without stamps.

Mr. President, I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD following my remarks the chart to which I referred a few moments ago, showing the decrease in cotton production.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LODGE in the chair). Without objection, the chart may be printed in the RECORD.

(See exhibit A.)

Mr. LEE. In the United States there are only 403,257 cotton farmers who each produce 2 bales of cotton or less each year. We could exempt that group of farmers and allow them their normal production up to 2 bales, guaranteeing them the domestic price on the full amount of their production up to that amount, and graduating the price above that level, giving the little fellow more of the domestic market. That plan would put the grease where the squeak is and place the money where it is most needed. It would help the fellow who most needs help, and not the fellow who is able to put several tractors on a plantation and who is able to take care of himself.

Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD following my remarks a table showing the number of cotton producers in the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the table may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ninety-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. ASHURST. It is my desire—and my desire is no more ardent than that of any other Senator—to reach some fair solution respecting agriculture with particular reference to cotton. It has been my habit of mind—and I make no apology for it—to depend in many technical subjects upon experts in whose sagacity and judgment I have confidence. During my service in the Senate I have been accustomed to respect other Senators for their views and ideas as to cotton. This may be an indolent method of procedure, but, nevertheless, I have depended somewhat upon such Senators as SMITH, of South Carolina; HARRISON, of Mississippi; GEORGE, of Georgia; BANKHEAD, of Alabama; HAYDEN, of Arizona; and other Senators, without now mentioning their names, when I desired accurate information as to cotton. These Senators, however, no longer agree with one another.

> Who shall decide, when doctors disagree,
> And soundest casuists doubt, like you and me?

Therefore, I presume I must resort to the rather reliable plan of making up my mind for myself.

The debate has been interesting. Almost every kind of proposition relating to the cotton problem has been advanced and answered.

My constituents, I believe, feel some resentment that I have not until lately been a close student of cotton culture. I wish to say that, in true humility and in all diligence, for the past 5 or 6 years I have been a student of cotton. Unfortunately, however, I fear that in this particular address to the Senate I shall not be able to make much of a contribution or to illuminate the subject of cotton to any considerable extent. If this were a discussion of timber, mines, cattle, law, literature, belles-lettres, physics, philosophy, the English language, history, or histrionics, I would be vain enough to presume that I could make a contribution. I repeat, however, that, with humility and with great diligence, I am studying the cotton question out of pride and necessity, because my State, Arizona, produces a considerable amount of cotton, not only of the so-called short staple but also of the long staple.

Nearly 20 years ago I vexed Senators and split the ears of groundlings urging a high protective tariff on Egyptian, or long-staple, cotton. I have never recanted; I have never changed my view that a high protective tariff on long-staple cotton would be of benefit to the producers of such cotton.

Privacy in the advocacy of a protective tariff has passed from the Republican side, not to the Democratic side, but to me; and if called upon this afternoon to suggest at the moment what would aid our country to recover, I would reply a high protective tariff on the products of the ranch, the mines, farms, fields, forests, and factories, and the free coinage of domestically mined silver, at a ratio of about 15 to 1. That would be my program of recovery; but, as Thomas B. Reed once said, my program has no extraterritorial jurisdiction and seems to be wholly in my own mind.

Mr. President, as I was saying, not only is my information as to cotton limited, although it is increasing and expanding, but my information of military and naval affairs is circumscribed and shallow, whilst on the money question, notwithstanding the able speeches on the money question that have been made here by the learned Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], nothing has ever been able to make a breach in the wall which defends, protects, and guards that vast reservoir of ignorance I possess on the money question. [Laughter.] A few years ago my ignorance as to cotton was abysmal and lamentable, but I am improving and am learning.

Mr. President, my constituents have been kind to me, generous possibly beyond my deserts, and they feel that I have been lacking in diligence in advocating relief grants and bounties for the mining industry. There is some justice in their complaint; but I wish to say here that Representative MURDOCK of Arizona, one of the ablest of the men who have seats in the other branch of Congress, has introduced a bill which has been framed by experts and which bill, H. R. 6131, proposes to lend to the miners of the country, particularly those who own and desire to develop small mines, an adequate sum of money upon presenting certificates showing that the title to the particular mine is perfect and that there is a reasonable hope that the borrower may develop the mine and repay the Government.

If it be asked why I have not introduced the bill in the Senate, I make reply that, of course, under the Federal Constitution, all bills providing for the raising of revenue must originate in the House of Representatives, and under the practice and procedure of the Congress for 150 years all bills in the nature of supply bills and appropriation bills originate in the House of Representatives. If, however, the bill introduced by Representative MURDOCK of Arizona, which proposes to appropriate $150,000,000 for the benefit of small mine owners, shall pass the other House, the Senators from Arizona and from other mining States will be as active in behalf of loans for the owners of small mines as our brethren from the South are active in the effort to secure millions of dollars for the benefit of the cotton producers of the South. In other words, how may we take money out of the Federal Treasury for cotton and say that money shall not be taken out of the Treasury to aid the mineral producers of our country? How may anyone, without growing crimson in countenance, vote to take money from the Public Treasury to subsidize one interest and remain indifferent to another interest? Before the law all legitimate interests are equal. For that reason I am emboldened, should the bill pass the other House, to support the bill proposing a loan of $150,000,000 for the owners of small mines. Agriculture is the primal occupation of mankind. The farmer feeds the multitudes of the earth. When we observe a monumental building we note its lines of elegance, its architraves and sculptures, but we are inclined to forget, Mr. President—it is human nature to do so—that unseen and hidden and never admired by any person, are the foundation stones supporting the structure, and that if they were to be removed or were to disintegrate, the beautiful building would fall. Thus it is with agriculture. It is the primal occupation; all the weight of the superstructure of society rests upon the foundation, which is agriculture. Therefore, I have been willing to vote for bills looking toward encouraging agriculture. I wish I could believe that the pending amendment would encourage agriculture. It would be with a glad heart that then I would vote for it.

So it is with the miner. He is the man who goes down into the earth a thousand feet or climbs lofty pinnacles and brings forth metals to be poured into the veins and channels of trade, such as copper, zinc, iron, manganese, and other metals that sustain a mighty civilization. The miner is likewise the man upon whom the structure of civilization also rests.

Suppose that some morning the people of the United States should awake and, after saluting the dawn, discover that all the electrically traveled copper in the Nation had been, by some alchemy, changed to chocolate. Discontent and despair would reign. No light would beam forth with the push of a button. There would be no potable water, hot or cold. Electric cars would stand still on the tracks; automobiles would refuse to spark their gasoline through chocolate wires instead of copper. Telephones would not function. There would be no morning newspaper. Electric heaters, refrigerators, radio and telegraph would be useless. Each community would be isolated from the remainder of the world. Indescribable inconvenience and confusion would be everywhere.

Knowing this to be true, my constituents have suggested that I relax somewhat and that Congress relax somewhat the attention we have been giving to foreign nations and devote some attention to problems that are more truly at home and that concern our own subsistence and, indeed, our own existence.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I desire to read some telegrams on the subject now before the Senate.

I telegraphed to the commissioners of agriculture of the cotton-growing States and asked them to express their opinion as to whether or not they would like to have the pending amendment adopted. I am going to read a few of them, and ask that all of them be printed in the RECORD.

I have one from Atlanta, Ga., as follows:

Am certainly in favor appropriation bill, providing the subsidy be paid our farmers.

COLUMBUS ROBERTS,
Commissioner of Agriculture, Georgia.

I have one from Jackson, Miss., reading as follows:

I do not favor export subsidy. If we must subsidize cotton, for God's sake let's pay it to American people.

J. C. HOLTON, Commissioner.

A telegram from South Carolina:

Fifty million dollars subsidy should be paid to our own farmers.

J. ROY JONES,
Commissioner of Agriculture.

From Austin, Tex.:

If Government has any subsidies to hand out, they should be given to American people, who pay the taxes, and not to foreigners. Cotton farmers bitterly opposed to Government paying subsidies on cotton exports. I sent 15 night letter telegrams yesterday to cotton States Senators opposing export subsidies. Did not send you one because I knew you were opposed to export subsidies. Any cotton purchased by foreigners under subsidy plan will be used by them to lower market for new cotton.

J. E. MCDONALD,
Commissioner of Agriculture.

From Louisiana:

As charity should begin at home, I certainly would prefer to see any subsidy go to our own farmers.

HARRY D. WILSON, Commissioner.

I have quite a lengthy telegram from Charlotte, N. C., which I shall not read, but ask to have it printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHARLOTTE, N. C., May 10, 1939.

Senator E. D. SMITH:

Wheat subsidy started 5 cents, is now 28 cents; foreigners eating bread out 39-cent wheat, we out 70-cent wheat. Cotton will find itself in same category if Bankhead export subsidy scheme put into effect. Keep on expounding logic like I heard you in Senate yesterday. Release Government holdings and watch market advance; at least history so records, and it has been our observation in the cotton business for many years. Many of our mills are in need of spot cotton now but cannot sell goods on basis of loan values plus charges. Why not forgive carrying charges and pay producers 25 points to sell as much of 1938-loan cotton as market will absorb prior to August 1 at 8.30 basis Middling ⅞?

J. A. BAKER.

Mr. SMITH. In this connection let me say that I was called out of the Senate Chamber by an officer of the Peruvian Government, Mr. Montero Bernaldes. He expressed great concern and opposition to this amendment on the ground that if we began to undercut the foreign cotton market they would be forced to do the same thing, to the ruin of their production in Peru. It is not very great. The state itself is not very great; but cotton bears the same relation to their people that our cotton bears to us. He says it is his opinion that if this amendment is adopted, it is the end of the good will about which we are so vocal in expression and which we now begin to damn in act. A powerful Nation, with tremendous resources, happens temporarily to have a certain surplus of a great world necessity, and because of certain political reasons we are called upon to do this monstrous thing!

Mr. Bernaldes talked to me like a man who felt keenly this stroke at his country's part of the production of the world supply of cotton.

I have heard a good many of my colleagues, for whom I have great respect, say they were in grave doubt as to what to do in this matter. The minute they said that I knew they did not know a thing about cotton. We are asked to turn over to the Secretary of Agriculture the right to do our exporting business, with all the splendid machinery that has been built up through a hundred years in handling this great crop, which up to 1939 had brought into the pockets of the American people—not the farmers alone—$1,500,000,000 average return for the sale of raw cotton, of which $800,000,000 was from our foreign exportation. We had competition then with the world, as we have now; but we did not have certain unfortunate restrictive laws that were passed subsequently to that time. If we would open the doors and give the world free access to our cotton, there is no reason in the world why within a few years we should not recapture every particle of the foreign market that we have enjoyed and can enjoy.

What reason is there for our sacrificing this amount of cotton? Over a period of 5 or 6 years it can be absorbed by the world with profit to the Government and profit to the grower.

I am going to close now. I will quit; but I am astounded at what I have heard in the discussion of this subject. I very much wish a number of Senators from the cotton-growing States had had the same practical experience I have had, and could know the subject as intimately as I, through necessity, know it. As I said yesterday, I have sat and listened to the discussion of this question by men who, I am sure, would not know Good Ordinary seven-eighths from Middling Fair inch-and-a-quarter. They would not know one from the other. They do not know anything about the processes on which the trade is dependent. Today, through our plan, we have an inverted market.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator will remember that 15 years ago there was not a man in the United States who was more ignorant than I was about the subject of which the Senator is speaking. I brought great quantities of cotton here to have the Senator instruct me as to what he meant by "Middling." I was tired of going around the country without knowing what was meant by the nomenclature used in connection with cotton. The Senator took weeks in instructing me on the subject. That alone is a great study, and I am rather proud now that when the Senator talks about Middling and seven-eights I have at least a glimmer of knowledge of what he is talking about.

Mr. SMITH. I dislike to recite this incident, but a certain officer or employee of the Government, who is in a very influential place in reference to cotton, in speaking to some men, said, "What is the standard grade?" I think some of the Members of this body have, as the Senator from Arizona said, something of a glimmering of what it means. This "expert," this man who in a large sense has charge of the cotton industry, asked two men who were thoroughly familiar with the cotton question, "What is your standard grade?" They said, "Middling." He said, "Well, why don't you plant the seed that makes Middling?" I wonder how that appeals to the Members of this body. What would my colleague have answered? I do not see very great appreciation of the joke indicated by the expressions of those around me. He asked why they did not plant the cotton-seed which made Middling. It is interesting to note the expressions of complacence on the faces of the Members of this body. [Laughter.]

I shall take upon myself the task of telling my colleagues that from the same stalk, according to the time it is picked, the various grades of cotton are obtained. If it is picked when the boll opens early, before the rain falls on it, we get Middling Fair, speaking grades. If we let it remain through a good many dews and rains, we get some Good Middling. If it remains a little longer, we get Middling; a little longer and we get Low Middling; a little longer and we get Ordinary, for the trash and stuff that accumulate will destroy it. Yet this expert wanted to know why we did not plant the seed which made Middling. I see from their expressions that a good many of my colleagues would ask the same question. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, the raising of cotton is an intricate process; yet men sit here and take as a great joke a crop which brought a billion five hundred million dollars for innumerable years before we began to experiment. We experimented, and came to the point where cotton now brings less than $500,000,000, which represents a loss to the growers of cotton in the United States of a billion dollars a year. But it is cotton, and it is a great joke. Josh Billings said that he lived to be 40 years old before he found a place for a boil. Someone asked him where it was. He said, "On the other fellow." [Laughter.] Those who do not grow cotton and do not know anything about cotton wonder why we come here year after year seeking to impress our colleagues with the necessity of America taking care of her greatest source of revenue.

Cottonseed alone represents an income of millions of dollars. From the seed alone are produced butter and lard and cattle feed. If it could be financed and properly taken care of, the cottonseed crop of the South would be worth as much as the lint produces, or more. But, unfortunately, it is in the South. As an illustration of what being in the South means, I hardly need tell Senators that, with our great humanitarianism and our love for our fellows, we have given Pennsylvania as much relief money as the southern cotton-growing States have received all together. I was about to say I have wondered why that was done, but I do not wonder. We all know why it was. Pennsylvania is a doubtful State, and up until this good time the South has not been doubtful. I rather suspect it will be from now on rather doubtful. If things keep on as they are going, we may have some doubt.

Mr. President, I do not believe any Member of this body who understands this question will vote to suspend the rule and adopt the amendment. If that should happen, we would be approaching the end of any possible cotton raising in the United States.

I regret that I shall be compelled to leave the city tonight. I hope we may dispose of the pending question before I have to leave. I want it settled one way or another. Of course, I want it settled in the right way.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LODGE in the chair). Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator's expressed wish prompts me to make a suggestion which I had intended to make at the conclusion of his remarks.

Mr. SMITH. I am through.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the motion to suspend the rule should be adopted, the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama would still be open to debate on its merits. If the motion to suspend the rule should be defeated, that would end the matter.

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Why can we not have a vote on the motion to suspend the rule so as to determine whether it will be necessary to have any further debate on the merits of the amendment?

Mr. SMITH. That would suit me completely.

Mr. BARKLEY. I hope we may have the vote.

Mr. SMITH. Good; so do I. I hope that those who desire to defeat the amendment will be present, and vote not to suspend the rule. I am perfectly willing to have the vote now.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, I had purposed to address the Senate for some considerable time on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama, because I think it is so vitally important to the cotton industry and to the people of the Cotton Belt, whom I have the honor, in part, to represent, that I would not be discharging my duty to them if I let a question of this magnitude be decided without offering every opposition of which I was capable. But I appreciate the condition under which the senior Senator from South Carolina is laboring, and I merely rose to announce that I would forego any speech on the question, unless the Senate should vote to suspend the rule.

I wish to say that I feel the Senate owes it to the Cotton Belt and to the entire Nation not to suspend the rule, but have the matter sent to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry in order that we may have a hearing, and bring before the proper committee the representatives of all those engaged in this great industry, which affects as well the West and the North and the East. I dare say very few Senators have had opportunity to learn what is in the Bankhead amendment, the subject of the motion to suspend the rule. The Senator from Alabama has offered two amendments: He offered one on the 25th of April and the other day before yesterday. I dare say Senators have not had opportunity even to analyze and find out what is in the amendment which will come before the Senate if the rule shall be suspended.

I insist, as a parting word, that the rule be not suspended, and that this matter be sent to the proper committee for a proper hearing and an understanding, in justice to one of the greatest industries of the Nation, one which affects the whole Nation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] to suspend paragraph 4 of rule XVI, so that he may offer a certain amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I ask the indulgence of the Senate for only a few moments. I very much hope the Senate will adopt the motion to suspend the rule. I am sure that Senators from other sections of the country are more or less confused at the disunion and lack of cooperation among Senators from the cotton States. No one regrets more than does the junior Senator from Texas that we have to bring this question before the Senate so often and with so much pressure, on the one hand, and so great lack of unity, on the other. But, Mr. President, it seems to me the Senate ought to pass on the merits of the proposition involved in the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. I do not urge the proposal as a cure-all. I do not offer it as a long-term program. I always feel embarrassed when I disagree with the distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE]. He said that this is merely a stopgap. It is in a measure a stopgap, but when the exigencies of a situation call for a stopgap it is a mighty good time to use a stopgap. We have no time now to go into all the angles of the general legislative farm program. It is not proposed to do that.

What is the situation? The situation is that we have about 12,000,000 bales of old cotton now in the Government loan. We have a loss on it, it is said. Yes; we have a loss on it. Some day we will probably have to take that loss and write it off. What are we going to do about the new crop? We will have another 10,000,000 or 12,000,000 bales of the new crop. What are we going to do with it? We cannot sell it abroad under present conditions because the requirements of the law are that it can be sold only for the loan price, if there is a loan, and it will go into the loan, plus the carrying charges, which amount to 9.10, as I recall, and the world price is 8.90. There is 20 points difference, it is true, but that is just enough difference to keep the cotton from being sold.

It is said we ought not to offer any inducement to sell this cotton abroad. Where are we going to sell it if we do not sell it abroad? We cannot sell it at home. It is not being bought at home.

It is also said that we have lost our foreign markets. We have lost about one-half of our foreign markets. How are we going to get back the foreign markets unless we meet the competition in the foreign markets? If the foreigner can buy the same quality of cotton from a foreign producer at 20 points less than he must pay for American cotton, he will buy the foreign cotton, will he not?

So, Mr. President, in the present emergency and simply to meet the new crop, the program advanced by the Secretary of Agriculture and the President of the United States—call it a stop-gap if you want to or call it an emergency program—is the only expedient I know of.

What do Senators who oppose the proposal propose to do? What is their plan? The distinguished Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is opposed to the program. What does he propose in lieu of it? Nothing. The Senator from Mississippi a moment ago inveighed against the pending motion. What does he propose in lieu of the plan? Is it proposed to pile up 12,000,000 more bales of cotton in the warehouses? Will that dispose of any of it? Will putting 12,000,000 bales more cotton in the warehouses move the cotton to market?

Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] seems to be amused at my remarks. The Senator might be interested to know how amused we are at his opposition to this program and the fact that he has nothing else to propose. Old King Midas loved gold so much that everything he touched turned to gold. When he tried to drink, his draught turned to gold. When he touched his clothing they turned to gold. We can touch and turn all the instrumentalities of the world into cotton and pile it up in the warehouses and we shall be no better off than before. What is the utility of cotton if we cannot sell it? What good is it going to do the world if people cannot buy it and use it? Section 32 has already been approved by the Congress. It is the statute law of the country now that the Secretary of Agriculture shall use 30 percent of all the tariff revenue—for the purpose of doing what? For the purpose of stimulating the exportation of export products. How are we going to stimulate that? By doing nothing? That seems to be the philosophy of Senators who are opposing the present proposal.

Mr. SMITH. Oh, no, Mr. President. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, I wish to say that a bill is before Congress which is endorsed by all interests and which, if enacted, would result in our getting rid of the surplus cotton in a legitimate and comfortable manner. The Senator is thoroughly aware that that bill is on the calendar now.

Mr. CONNALLY. Where is the bill?

Mr. SMITH. It is on the calendar.

Mr. CONNALLY. It is going to stay on the calendar; and, of course, it would not help to move cotton so long as it is on the calendar.

Mr. SMITH. It will remain on the calendar under the auspices of such Senators as the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. I supported the Senator's bill. But the Senator's bill is not getting anywhere, and the Senator knows it is not getting anywhere. As between a bill which is going to stay on the calendar and one which we can pass, as a practical legislator, I will take the one that is going to pass.

Mr. SMITH. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. If the Senator knows anything about cotton—and he does not seem to know very much——

Mr. CONNALLY. Oh, no; no one knows anything about cotton except the Senator from South Carolina!

Mr. SMITH. The Senator from South Carolina knows very little about cotton. It is proposed to sell the cotton to the foreigner at a price lower than the price at which it is sold to the American people today. All we are asking is that this cotton be sold in competition with the world, not under a subsidy, but throw the doors open.

Mr. CONNALLY. What does the Senator propose? To throw the doors open? Does he mean to take all the cotton that is now in the loan and sell it at what it will bring?

Mr. SMITH. No.

Mr. CONNALLY. What is the plan?

Mr. SMITH. I will explain the plan. I know the Senator from Texas hopes by means of considerable verbosity to overcome this proposal.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will not be able to compete successfully with the Senator from South Carolina in verbosity.

Mr. SMITH. No; I do not think the Senator will.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. SMITH. Will the Senator wait a moment? My bill proposes to take out of the loan each month so much of the loan cotton and put it on the markets of the world.

Mr. CONNALLY. How much?

Mr. SMITH. I think 100,000 bales a month. That is the amount provided for in my bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. A hundred thousand bales a month. That would be a million bales in a year.

Mr. SMITH. One million two hundred thousand.

Mr. CONNALLY. And we have 12,000,000 bales, so we would be 12 years in getting rid of the surplus.

Mr. SMITH. Oh, no. The limit is two and a half million bales each year, but my proposition was 100,000 bales a month, and even if it takes us 12 years, it seems that that is an asset which we can afford to put on the market at a profit to the Government and to the people. This proposes to undersell the whole world. What will the world do? They will undersell you.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. I believe that the able Senator from South Carolina unwittingly did injustice to the Senator from Texas. The Senator from Texas needs no word from me. He can take care of himself. But I want it known that what gives me concern is when able students like the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] argue with such sincerity and ability I really wonder whom we should believe.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the Senator permit me to answer?

Mr. ASHURST. I shall be glad to if the Senator will.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is the Senator willing to follow a very large majority of the southern Senators?

Mr. ASHURST. I should be inclined to do so.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Then if the Senator will wait until they get through voting he will know how they stand.

Mr. ASHURST. I think the question of cotton, as presented by the State of Arizona, is very different from the question presented by the remainder of the Southern States. Arizona, New Mexico, western Texas, and California grow cotton under irrigation. But before I conclude and sit down I wish to say—and I know my friend the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] will be glad that I said it—that I happen to know with what assiduity and with what diligence the junior Senator from Texas for years has studied this question, and I hope the Senator from South Carolina will withdraw the statement he made that the Senator farmer knew nothing about it.

I only wish that some genii out of the fisherman's urn, or in some other way, could give me the knowledge of cotton which is possessed by my friend the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. ASHURST. I have no hope that I could ever acquire the reservoir of knowledge possessed by my friend the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] or my friend the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

Mr. CONNALLY. I am grateful to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. This is not an uncommon situation. My attitude is the usual attitude of a man whose mind is uncertain as to what he should do, and searching for the truth, and finding one great light, that held up by the Senator from South Carolina pointing one way, and another great light held up by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] pointing the other way. And I will say that I may have to depend upon my own judgment ultimately.

Mr. SMITH. Once there was a minister who said that there were two roads; one led away up to degradation and the other way down to damnation. A member of his congregation said, "If that be so, this nigger takes to the woods." So I guess the Senator from Arizona will take to the woods.

All I wanted to impress upon the Senator was that I do not think we are warranted in attempting to sell our cotton abroad under any other method than that of free and open markets.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. My speeches are broad but never long.

Mr. BARKLEY. And also deep.

Mr. ASHURST. The able Senator from Alabama invited attention to the view that the southern Senators, or the Senators from the Cotton Belt, would have with respect to the proposed program. Is that true?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes, Mr. President.

Mr. ASHURST. Very well. With that I am usually content. But I ought to say, and it ought to go into the RECORD, that in the culture of cotton—I refer to the culture of cotton in some parts of Texas, in New Mexico, in Arizona, and in California—the problems are not the same as the problems that confront the so-called Cotton Belt of the South.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. ASHURST. I think one of the reasons why the Southwest—I am speaking of the States I have mentioned—has suffered so much in many of the cotton bills is because many Senators, learned and able and understanding cotton, have failed to notice that there is a vast difference between the culture of cotton in the old South, whose history and tradition I revere, and the culture of cotton in the Southwest.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. ASHURST. I will ask Senators from the Southwest if I am not correct in that statement.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, may I answer that question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Not only is that statement correct; but I will add that so far as concerns the cotton which comes from California, Arizona, New Mexico, and the upper Rio Grande section in Texas it is practically all raised for export.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I cannot forego this opportunity to thank the generous Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] for his assurances with respect to my knowledge of cotton.

Mr. ASHURST. I did not speak facetiously. I spoke earnestly.

Mr. CONNALLY. I appreciate that.
